92. Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has recently met the Museums Commission to discuss the proposed introduction of admission charges to the natural history museum.

93. Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has recently met relevant trades unions to discuss the proposed introduction of admission charges to the natural history museum.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has recently met with the Museums Commission to discuss the proposed introduction charges to the Natural History museum.

Mr. Walden: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 3 March at column 551.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Mudd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will arrange for a reply to be sent to the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne in response to the letter passed to his hon. Friend the Member for Buckingham (Mr. Walden) on 21 October 1986, from Mrs. E. A. Langford, of 30 Passage Hill, Falmouth, Cornwall;

(2) if he will arrange for a reply to be sent to the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne in response to a letter acknowledged by his hon. Friend the Member for Buckingham (Mr. Walden) on 10 December 1986, concerning Camborne school of mines.

Mr. Walden: I replied to my hon. Friend on 4 March.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide the figures for total spending on local authority non-prescribed capital expenditure in public sector further education in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Walden: The information requested is not available centrally.

Her Majesty's Inspectors

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil on 26 February, Official Report, column 352, concerning a review by management consultants of Her Majesty's inspectors' procedures, if he will name the firm of consultants that has been engaged; if he will state the date of the contract; if he will undertake to place a copy of the report in the Library in due course; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The review of Her Majesty's inspectorate procedures for the processing of inspection reports is being carried out by management consultants from Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. It started on 4 March. It is not intended to result in a full written report. The findings will be presented to the senior management of Her Majesty's inspectorate in a more informal way.

Secondary Education (Warwickshire)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received any representations from Warwickshire about the reorganisation of secondary education in the eastern area of the county.

Mr. Dunn: Representations have been received in the Department, including one from my hon. Friend. The matter is, however, entirely one for the LEA at present.

Higher Education

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent discussions he has had with representatives of university teachers about higher education.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend and I meet university teachers regularly in the course of visits to universities, when issues relating to higher education policy are discussed.

GCSE

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what inspections of secondary schools have been undertaken by Her Majesty's inspectors specifically for purposes relevant to the introduction of the general certificate of secondary education; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information is available to his Department from recent inspections of secondary schools by Her Majesty's inspectors on (a) quality of lessons in the new general certificate of secondary education courses; (b) adequacy of resources for the teaching of general certificate of secondary education courses; and (c) adequacy of relevant teacher training and preparation for general certificate of secondary education courses; when he expects the reports of such inspections to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Her Majesty's inspectors have established detailed arrangements for monitoring all aspects of the introduction of the GCSE throughout the academic year 1986-87. They will do so as part of their routine and specialist visits to schools rather than through specific inspections devoted solely to the GCSE; its introduction will have implications for other aspects of provision in schools and it is important that these are taken into account. They will in addition be discussing GCSE provision with all chief education officers by means of three regional conferences, and with local authority officers and advisers as part of their day-to-day contacts. Where appropriate, Her Majesty's inspectors will comment on the introduction of the GCSE in their reports on individual schools and colleges. They will also be preparing more general reports, but it is too early to say when these will be ready, as the first GCSE courses only began in the autumn term 1986.

School Inspections

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what inspections of secondary schools have been undertaken by Her Majesty's inspectors where the report of inspection is unpublished; if he will publish a list showing, for each local education authority, the school and relevant dates of inspection; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what inspections of primary schools have been undertaken by Her Majesty's inspectors where the report of inspection is unpublished; if he will publish a list showing, for each local education authority, the school and relevant dates of inspection; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: There are currently 168 reports by Her Majesty's inspectors on primary and secondary schools in preparation. However, although, in general, reports move sequentially through to publication, there are various positive reasons why individual reports may be accelerated through the process of preparation, with the result that some others have to be held back. In addition, some delays can occur for a variety of reasons. In view of these factors, to publish lists in the form requested would risk ill-founded conclusions being drawn as to why one particular report was taking longer than another. As I said in my reply to the hon. Member on 26 February at column 352, Her Majesty's inspectorate has asked management consultants to review their procedures.

Nursery Schools (Hampshire)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the number of children of pre-school age attending local authority funded nursery schools in Hampshire for each of the last three years.

Mr. Dunn: The number of children under five attending maintained nursery schools in Hampshire in January 1984, 1985 and 1986 were 256, 259 and 260 respectively. All of these children were attending part-time.

Engineering Council

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has sent to the chairman of the Engineering Council about the need for more university places for engineering students.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend met the chairman and senior officials of the Engineering Council last Wednesday. He agreed with them that there was a case for increasing the availability of manufacturing systems engineering courses in higher education, subject to satisfactory industrial support, particularly in the form of more student sponsorships and training placements. My right hon. Friend will be discussing the possibilities with the higher education planning bodies.

Education (No. 2) Act 1986

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will produce a circular to be sent to all parent governors of schools, providing guidelines on the changes introduced in the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 and on the responsibilities of such governors regarding the running of schools.

Mr. Dunn: The Department's circular 8/86 contained some guidance on the provisions of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 and was sent to all schools in December 1986. The second circular of guidane on the Act will be issued in draft for consultation shortly and will be available in its final form later this year.

School Uniforms

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to provide enabling powers for governors to make rules regarding the wearing of school uniform.

Mr. Dunn: The Education (No. 2) Act 1986 provides for the conduct of a school to be under the control of the governing body, subject to any specific allocation of functions elsewhere under the articles of government and to any other statutory provisions. The Government believe that the conduct of a school is concerned with the whole ethos of a school and that the question of whether or not school uniform is worn contributes significantly to that ethos and should thus be decided by the governing body.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the pupil-teacher ratios in primary and secondary schools in the counties of Derbyshire, Staffordshire and Nottingham.

Mr. Dunn: The pupil-teacher ratios in maintained primary and secondary schools in January 1986 in Derbyshire, Staffordshire and Nottinghamshire are as follows:

	Primary schools	Secondary schools
Derbyshire	22·3	16·2
Staffordshire	22·8	16·5
Nottinghamshire	20·8	15·4

Meningitis (Research)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the Medical Research Council has any plans to accede to the request by the Department of Bacteriology, University of Edinburgh, for further funding for research into meningitis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: I understand from the Medical Research Council that no formal application has been received from the department of bacteriology, University of Edinburgh. Should such an application be received, it would be for the MRC to determine its scientific priorities from within the annual grant-in-aid which it receives from the Department's science budget.

Expenditure Steering Group

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil on 23 February, Official Report, column 39-40 concerning the reports of the expenditure steering group (education), he will review whether publication of these reports would assist local education authorities; what considerations have been material to these reports not being published; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The reports of the expenditure steering group for education, like those of the steering groups for other local services, are prepared by officers representing Government Departments and the local authorities, under the direction of the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance to which the reports are sent. It is for the representatives of the local authority associations on the council to decide how widely these reports should be circulated among their members.

Hearing Damage

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research is being sponsored through the various research bodies into possible damage to the hearing of young people caused by excessive noise from loudspeakers and earphones.

Mr. Walden [pursuant to his reply, 6 March, 1987, c. 705]: The Medical Research Council, which funds a considerable amount of research on hearing, is conducting basic research on the complex structure and function of the inner ear. While this work is not specifically concerned with excessive noise from loudspeakers and earphones, it is relevant to the possible damage to the hearing of young people due to high noise levels. Clinical projects relating to damage by noise in general are also being supported. Research work on hearing is also being conducted in universities and medical schools using funds allocated for teaching and research on the advice of the University Grants Committee. Details of such work are not collected centrally.

PRIME MINISTER

Government Policies (Effects)

Mr. Murphy asked the Prime Minister what assessment she has made of the effects of Government policies since 1979 on (a) the south east region and (b) East Anglia.

The Prime Minister: The south-east and East Anglia are among the fastest growing parts of the country. Like all regions, they have benefited from the Government's commitment to prudent and sound financial policies, and to creating a climate within which industry and commerce can prosper and flourish.

I also refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) on 19 February at columns 801-7.

Engagements

Mr. Mark Carlisle asked the Prime Minister what is her practice in replying to questions from right hon. and hon. Members relating to her engagements both official and private; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As the House is aware, I am answerable only in relation to my official duties and responsibilities. I shall, of course, continue to answer questions which properly relate to those duties and which do not breach confidentiality. My normal practice will be neither to confirm nor to deny whether meetings with private individuals have taken place, even in those cases where no such meeting has occurred.

Portsmouth (Voluntary Organisations)

Mr. Hancock asked the Prime Minister what was the total amount paid by Government Departments to voluntary organisations in Portsmouth at the latest available date.

The Prime Minister: Such information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Intermediate Range Nuclear Force Agreement

Mr. Boyes asked the Prime Minister whether the Government's support for the conclusion of an intermediate range nuclear force agreement is dependent on the elimination of disparities in conventional forces between the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the Warsaw treaty organisation in Europe.

The Prime Minister: NATO is not imposing any formal negotiating linkage between the conclusion of an intermediate range nuclear force agreement and the elimination of disparities in conventional forces between NATO and the Warsaw pact. But, as President Reagan and I agreed at Camp David in November 1986, reductions in nuclear weapons would increase the importance of eliminating conventional disparities. This was subsequently reflected in the communiqués of the NATO ministerial meetings the following month.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the numbers of entrants to his Department from the ethnic minorities in the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; if he will also list the monitoring procedures used to ascertain the percentage of the work force represented by ethnic minorities and their patterns of promotion; and what are his methods of recruitment of minorities into the Department.

Mr. Hurd: The ethnic origins of new entrants have been surveyed since October 1985. The latest available information for the period up to 26 February 1987 is as follows:

	Number
Total new entrants to the Home Office in period 1 October 1985 to 25 February 1987	3,065
Ethnic origins
white	1,680
black/Asian	194
Not stated (includes non-respondents)	1,191

A phased programme of departmental surveys of the ethnic origin of non-industrial civil servants by means of voluntary self-classification is being conducted. By the end of 1986 all non-industrial staff in the Home Office had been surveyed. We are considering ways of using the data on the ethnic origin or staff-in-post to monitor promotion.

All departmental recruitment is conducted on the basis of fair and open competition and selection is on merit. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Privy Council Office on 20 February 1987 at columns 880-81 reporting the arrangements being made to encourage people from the ethnic minorities to apply to the Civil Service.

Crime

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement setting out the principal measures taken by his Department since May 1979 to tackle crime; and whether he will set out any policy inititatives he plans to implement.

Mr. Hurd: We have increased the resources provided for the police, the courts, the probation service and the prisons. We have encouraged the development of crime prevention measures by individuals, the private sector, and public bodies. We have increased maximum penalties for serious crimes where this was needed. We are providing fresh help for victims. The Criminal Justice Bill advances our strategy further. "Criminal Justice: A Working Paper", a copy of which is in the Library, gives a fuller account of our achievements and the ways in which we intend to build on them.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number and country of origin of persons seeking asylum over the past 10 years; and what percentage were accepted.

Mr. Waddington: The available information on applications and decisions by nationality is for the years 1979 to 1985 and was published in tables 1 and 5A-5F of Home Office statistical bulletin "Refugee Statistics, United Kingdom 1985", issue 12/86. It is hoped to publish corresponding figures for 1986 around the end of April.

Canning House Probation Hostel

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the running of the Canning House probation hostel, Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Yes, we are satisfied in general with the way in which Canning House probation hostel is being run. I am aware of the incident which has prompted the hon. Member to ask this question and of the concern and alarm which it has caused to those living near the hostel. It was an isolated occurrence which is being dealt with by due process of law. We are considering, however, to what extent the resident concerned was covered by the strict terms of the criteria governing admission to the hostel and will pursue the issues which this raises with the area probation service and more generally.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the criteria for admittance to the Canning House probation hostel, Liverpool.

Mr. Mellor: Canning House probation hostel, Liverpool, is approved by the Secretary of State for the reception of 17 men who are required to reside there by the terms of a probation order or who are accommodated at the hostel while on bail and who at the date of admission are not younger than 17 years of age. The criteria for admittance to any approved probation hostel are laid down in the Approved Probation Hostel and Home and Bail Hostel Rules 1976. They are augmented by Home Office circulars, which give area probation services discretion to admit certain categories of clients in receipt of after care.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many residents in the Canning House probation hostel, Liverpool have been convicted of any violent crime since it was opened.

Mr. Mellor: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the Merseyside probation service has information for recent years: in 1986, 13 persons with convictions for offences involving violence were received into the hostel, and one bailee charged with rape. Since the hostel opened in 1975, only one person is recorded as having been nvolved in a violent offence while in residence. It is that person who has been charged with the alleged offence to which I have referred in my answer to the hon. Member's earlier question for today.

Prison Officers' Houses, Culcheth

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why, pursuant to his reply of 10 February, Official Report, column 174, the attempted sale of empty prison officers' houses at Culcheth was on the basis that the purchasers carry out works to secure the adoption of roads, footpaths, street lighting and the sewage pumping station; how long the houses have been on the market; whether the houses will be available for sale on an individual basis; and with which groups or individuals his Department has negotiated to date.

Mr. Mellor: I will write to the hon. Member.

Bookmaking

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to strengthen controls on the operation of the bookmaking industry to safeguard the public interest.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans at present to strengthen the controls in the Betting Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963. We are aware of the concern about certain recent developments and the consideration being given to these matters by the Office of Fair Trading. We shall continue to maintain a close interest in the operation of the present controls.

Jordanian Embassy (Employees)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) Jordanian diplomats and (b) employees of the Royal Jordanian embassy have been interviewed by the police in relation to alleged sex offences during the past five years and to date; and in which cases prosecutions ensued.

Mr. Mellor: There have been no cases during the past five years in which a member of the Royal Jordanian embassy has been prosecuted for an alleged sexual offence. It is not the practice to supply information about police action in relation to members of individual missions which does not result in prosecution.

Death at Sea

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in view of the distress and hardship caused to relatives when persons drowned at sea whose bodies have not been recovered cannot be presumed dead, he will review the procedures for the presumption of death; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: This is not a matter for the Home Secretary. My powers are limited to directing the holding of an inquest in the absence of a body if the death is believed to have occurred in or near a coroner's jurisdiction, which extends only to the low water mark, and if I am so requested by the coroner and consider it desirable.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will authorise an inquest into the presumed death at sea of Mr. Ronald T. Smith of Southend, details of which have been sent to him.

Mr. Hurd: Yes. At the coroner's request, I have directed him to hold an inquest.

Immigration

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases he has referred to the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service in each of the last three years; in how many cases the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service has recommended prospective immigrants should return to their own country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: This information is not available.

Tamils

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Tamils have arrived in Britain from India seeking political asylum in the latest six months for which figures are available; how many have been returned to India; and how many of these have not been accepted by the Indian authorities.

Mr. Waddington: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Drink Driving

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes any changes in the enforcement of the law relating to drink-driving offences in the light of the research findings relating to the risk of detection for excess alcohol offences by the Cranfield institute of technology, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement on the factors to which he attributes the difference between those figures and his Department's earlier estimates on the same subject.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are satisfied that the police have sufficient powers to enforce the law on drink driving effectively, and within those powers enforcement is a matter for individual chief officers of police. The Cranfield Institute of Technology study, published in 1984, was based on interviews in two towns whereas the study by the Home Office Research and Planning Unit, also published in 1984, drew on data collected in the national British crime survey.

Zircon Project

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will now call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the progress of inquiries into the alleged disclosure of the classified information about the Zircon satellite.

Mr. Hurd: No.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines he has issued to police forces proposing a greater use of cautions regarding users of class A drugs, opiates, where they are participating in needle exchange schemes.

Mr. Mellor: In cases where a criminal offence is suspected the decision on what action to take, including whether to caution, is an operational matter for chief officers of police. We are consulting chief officers collectively and individually about the Government's plans to establish needle exchange schemes. Guidance on the use of cautioning was issued in Home Office circular 14/1985 on 18 February 1985. This envisaged the use of cautioning where it is considered to be in the public interest.

Crime (Wales)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes were committed in Wales against the person, of criminal damage and of thefts from dwelling in (a) 1978 and (b) 1986; by what percentage the crimes increased or decreased: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Mark Thatcher (Wedding)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many police officers were on duty in connection with the marriage of Mr. Mark Thatcher; and what was the total cost involved.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [pursuant to his reply, 23 February 1987, c. 33]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that a total of 240 police officers were assigned on 13 and 14 February 1987 to duties in connection with the wedding. The additional cost to the Metropolitan policy was about £7,000.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Assistance

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will list the amounts and recipients of regional development grants and regional selective assistance amongst companies in the Darlington area in each year since 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The amounts and recipients of regional development grants and offers of regional selective assistance made to companies in the Darlington area in each year since 1 May 1979. are as follows:

On 1 August 1980, the area status was downgraded to intermediate area. There was therefore no RDG assistance (old or new) on assets provided in Darlington on or after that date. Individual RDG payments of less than £25,000 have been excluded from the above figures.

United States (Internal Control Programme)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 19 February, Official Report, columns 751-52, what information he has as to how many United Kingdom companies in total hold either a United States distribution licence or approved foreign consignee status.

Mr. Alan Clark: We believe there are about 1,000 United Kingdom companies holdings approved foreign consignee status under the United States distribution licence system.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 19 February, Official Report, columns 751-52, if the United Kingdom customer records of United Kingdom companies holding United States distribution licences or approved foreign consignee status, will be audit inspected by United States inspectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: If such companies were to give their consent it is possible that some records might be examined on a selective basis. I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 2 March at columns 515-16.

Bookmaking

Mr. Haslehurst asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to receive the report from the Office of Fair Trading on the bookmaking industry.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend has received representations relating to a possible abuse of a monopoly position in the bookmaking industry. These are matters for the Director-General of Fair Trading who is considering them.

Vacuum Flexible Mirror (Sale)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he was consulted by Strathclyde university before the sale of a vacuum flexible mirror to a United States company.

Mr. Alan Clark: No.

Civil Research and Development

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the figures for United Kingdom Government support for civil research and development in 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986; how this compares with Government support for civil research and development in other European Economic Community countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The available information relates to central Government expenditure on research and development for civil objectives and is given in the table below. It is shown at current prices and exchange rates using purchasing power parities which gives more meaningful comparisons than market exchange rates.

Circuit Breakers

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will arrange for the Consumer Safety Unit to produce a report on the application of circuit breakers in the prevention of accidents in the home, and on the experience gained on their use in other European countires; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I am instructing the Consumer Safety Unit to investigate the information available from United Kingdom and European sources. If it is found that a useful report can be produced I shall consider commissioning it.

Trade Descriptions Act 1972

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what recent representations he has received on the Government's proposal to repeal the Trade Descriptions Act 1972; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if his Department has carried out a study into the effects that the repeal of the Trade Descriptions Act 1972 will have on British industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have received in response to my Department's consultation letter of 4 December 1986 a wide range of representations from industry, commerce and trade, consumer protection bodies, enforcement authorities and other interested parties about the scope for successor arrangements to the 1972 Act. A number of industries have made their views known on the perceived effect of the repeal. I am currently considering the various suggestions for successor arrangements and will inform the House in due course how the Government intend to proceed in the light of them.

Leicester (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will report on the recent visit to Leicester by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Pudsey (Mr. Shaw).

Mr. Giles Shaw: The purpose of my visit to Leicester on 4 March was to meet the management and staff of Bridgeport Machines Ltd., a highly successful exporter of computer controlled milling machines and machining centres.

Match Imports

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total value of imports of matches into the United Kingdom for each of the years ended 31 December 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom's imports of matches for 1985 and 1986 amounted to £8·4 millions each year.

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretay of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to protect the interests of the United Kingdom match industry against dumping of foreign imports.

Mr. Alan Clark: If the United Kingdom match industry believes that it is suffering damage from dumped imports it should present an application for anti-dumping action to the European Commission which has Community responsibility for such matters. My Department's unfair trade unit is ready to give any advice on the preparation of a case.

Mr. Loyden asked the Secretay of State for Trade and Industry what steps he intends to take to end the practice whereby imported matches are packaged in such a way as to suggest that they are of British manufacture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Trade Descriptions Act 1968 already makes it an offence for a person in the course of a trade or business to apply a false or misleading indication to goods, in respect of their place of manufacture or production. If a United Kingdom name or mark, or any name or mark likely to be taken as such, were applied to the goods by means of the packaging, the goods would also be required under the Trade Descriptions Act 1972 to be marked with their country of origin. Although it is necessary, for European Community reasons, for the 1972 Act to be repealed, the Government are currently considering, in the light of consultation, the case for a successor regime to supplement the existing protection afforded to consumers by the 1968 Act.

British Aerospace

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretay of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the repayment of the launch aid requested by British Aerospace for the A350/340 aeroplanes.

Mr. Butcher: A decision has yet to be reached by the Government on British Aerospace's request for launch aid for the proposed Airbus A330/A340 project.

Sequestrations and Bankruptcies

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a table showing for each of the last 10 years the number of (i) sequestrations and (ii) bankruptcies against individuals and companies, respectively, in Scotland.

Mr. Howard: The information requested is given in the following table:

Numbers of Insolvencies in Scotland 1977-1986

	Sequestrations[1]	Company Liquidations[2]
1977	132	271
1978	127	274
1979	106	238
1980	150	379
1981	181	438
1982	213	503
1983	282	521
1984	292	523
*1986	[3]437	511

[1] Sequestrations are the Scottish equivalent of bankruptcies. The figures cover all individuals and partnerships. Separate figures in respect of unincorporated businesses are not available.

[2] Includes compulsory and creditors' voluntary liquidations — the two types which involve insolvency.

[3] Provisions of the Bankruptcy Scotland Act 1985 which came into force on 1 April 1986 provided for public funds to be made available to compensate Trustees dealing with sequestrations with no assets.

* Provisional.

Yorkshire and Humberside Development Association

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much Government money was allocated to the Yorkshire and Humberside Development Association in 1985-86 and in 1984-85.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Employment (Assistance)

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the organisations which are relevant to assisting employment in the regions who have moved out of the southern region to the north since 1979; with what impact on employment therein; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 24 February 1987, c. 205-6]: The only relevant information available to the Department relates to the movement of manufacturing units with more than 10 employees and is inevitably not comprehensive. Our records show at present that the number of moves from the south-east region to the northern region between 1979 and 1984 is so few that disclosure is prevented by the confidentiality restrictions of the Statistics of Trade Act 1947. Information is not available for the period since 1984.

Industry (Public Funds)

Sir Alex Fletcher asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much support from public funds of all kinds has been made available to manufacturing industry since the fiscal year 1978-79.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 2 March c. 517]: The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost since my Department does not record for all its schemes the amount of support going to different industrial sectors. However, it may be estimated that, in the eight year period from 1 April 1978 to 30 March 1986, the Department of Trade and Industry spent about £9,000 million on support for manufacturing industry. This figure excludes loans from the national loans fund and public dividend capital provided to nationalised industries.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

AIDS

Mr. Meacher asked the Attorney-General what guidelines have been issued, or are being considered, regarding prosecution policy in relation to the exchange of used needles by drug abusers in favour of free disposable needles.

The Attorney-General: The guidelines in the code for Crown prosecutors, published pursuant to section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House of Commons, are applied to all cases referred by the police to the Crown Prosecution Service. When reaching decisions in cases relating to the misuse of drugs, the Crown Prosecution Service, where relevant, will have proper regard to public interest considerations arising out the measures brought in to halt the spread of the AIDS virus.

ENERGY

Combined Heat and Power

12. Mr. Orme asked the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made in the development of combined heat and power lead city schemes.

Mr. David Hunt: I am pleased to announce that the members of the Leicester CHP consortium have agreed to support the formation of a heat utility company to take the Leicester project through to the next stage. The Belfast and Edinburgh consortia are expected to complete their studies by the end of this month.

Nuclear Power Industry (Equipment Supplies)

14. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the number of firms in the north-west area which currently supply equipment to the civil nuclear power industry.

Mr. Goodlad: In 1985-86 the nuclear industry placed contracts worth a total value of over £300 million with north-west companies. BNFL used some 2,800 firms, the CEGB 550, the NNC 100 and the UKAEA 84.

Conservation Schemes

15. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to review the adequacy of existing energy conservation schemes.

Mr. Peter Walker: The adequacy and cost-effectiveness of the Government's energy efficiency schemes are kept under regular review to ensure they continue to be targeted to have maximum impact.

Crude Oil Prices

17. Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the average world price per barrel of crude oil in 1987.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Oil prices will be determined by the balance of supply and demand.

Home Insulation

18. Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his replies of 1 December 1986 Official Report, columns 455-6, 6 February, Official Report, column 836 and 16 February, Official Report, column 467, if he will estimate how long it will take on current trends to ensure effective draught-proofing in all homes currently occupied by low income householders.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government-backed community insulation projects continue to expand rapidly and will soon be draught-proofing about a third of a million low-income households annually.

Sizewell B

19. Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to make an announcement of his decision on the Layfield report concerning the Sizewell B power station.

Mr. Peter Walker: As soon as I have fully considered all of the issues involved.

24. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many representations he has received from individuals and groups on the report of the inquiry into the Sizewell B pressurised water reactor; what proportion of these support the report; and what proportion do not support the report.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have received around 300 letters since the publication of the report. Most oppose the CEGB's application as it is unlikely that those who agree with the report would bother to write in.

French Energy Minister

20. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met his opposite number in France; what subjects were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I last met M. Madelin in July to discuss Community energy business during the United Kingdom presidency.

Surplus Energy

21. Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss national policy on surplus energy produced by commerce and industry.

Mr. Peter Walker: I meet the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board regularly. The Government's aim is that energy should be produced and used as efficiently and economically as possible. As regards private generation by commerce and industry, the Energy Act 1983 has created a guaranteed market for privately produced electricity.

British Coal

22. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal; what subjects were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend and I have regular metings with the chairman of British Coal to discuss a wide variety of issues concerning the coal industry.

Closed Power Stations

23. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to meet the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss the clearance of closed power stations.

Mr. Goodlad: Responsibility for the clearance or disposal of closed power stations in England and Wales rests with the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Nuclear Power Industry (Equipment Supplies)

25. Mr. Dover asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about the number of firms in the north-west of England involved in contracts to supply equipment to the nuclear power industry and related industries.

Mr. Goodlad: In 1985-86 the nuclear industry placed contracts worth a total value of over £300 million with north-west companies. BNFL used some 2,800 firms, the CEGB 550, the NNC 100 and the UKAEA 84.

Coal Industry (Industrial Relations)

26. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he next intends to meet the chairman of the National Coal Board to discuss industrial relations in the industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend and I have regular meetings with the chairman of British Coal to discuss a wide variety of issues concerning the coal industry.

Pressurised Water Reactor Power Stations

27. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Energy what recent discussions he has had with the Central Electricity Generating Board about the siting of more pressurised water reactor power stations.

Mr. Peter Walker: The CEGB has made no applications for consent for any PWRs, other than for Sizewell B.

Wind Power

28. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Energy what studies his Department is currently conducting into the energy potential of wind power; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Modelling studies of the energy content of the wind are being undertaken, taking into account United Kingdom topography and land use. We believe wind energy to be one of the most promising renewable energy sources for generating electricity in this country. Since 1979, my department has spent some £20 million on a broad programme of research and development work for generating electricity from the wind and is currently spending around £4 to £5 million per year.

Efficiency (Industry)

29. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list his Department's current incentives for energy efficiency in industry.

Mr. David Hunt: Energy efficiency measures offer attractive and cost-effective savings without the need for Government subsidy. Our programmes in the non-domestic sector are designed to make consumers aware of the financial benefits of improved energy efficiency and give them the advice and information they need to manage their energy more effectively.

Our existing programmes include:

(i) the energy efficiency survey scheme which provides expert advice at site level through the provision of grants for up to 50 per cent. of the cost of an independent energy survey;

(ii) the monitoring and targeting programme under which improved systems of energy management are being developed for major sectors of industry and commerce;

(iii) for energy efficiency R & D demonstration scheme programmes which help to develop and disseminate new technology.

In addition, the EEO provides a range of general information and advice to industry through such initiatives as the Breakfast Briefing Campaign and its support of the energy management movement.

Scottish Coalfields

30. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current output from the Scottish coalfields and the total numbers currently employed.

Mr. David Hunt: I am advised by British Coal that during the four weeks up to 21 February the Scottish area produced 244,251 tonnes of coal, and that on 21 February there were 4,562 men on colliery books.

Energy Efficiency

31. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on targeting and monitoring schemes for energy efficiency.

Mr. David Hunt: Monitoring and targeting is a disciplined approach to energy management and an important step towards improving energy efficiency. The Energy Efficiency Office is supporting the development and introducion of monitoring and targeting systems across the non-domestic energy sector. To date 29 systems are in operation or under development in particular sectors of industry and commerce. The current programme aims to develop 40 systems, including a number of cross-sectoral systems, by the end of 1990.

Savings of £300 million are expected to result from the adoption of monitoring and targeting against a total programme spend of £9 million.

32. Mr. Rowlands asked the Secretary of State for Energy what further measures he intends to introduce the greater energy efficiency in the domestic and commericial sectors.

Mr. Peter Walker: The MONERGY 1986 campaign has seen an enormous concerted efforted across all sectors to make people at home and in the workplace more energy conspious. Practical achievements during the year have been substantial: for instance, demand for the energy efficiency surve scheme increased significantly, while the number of community insulation projects nearly doubled.

At the National Energy Management Conference last year I announced a 14-point programme to build on the success of Energy Efficency Year with policies closely matched to the needs to the market place. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Energy reiterated this programme in his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash, (Mr. Rost) on 26 January at columns 52-53.

In addition, on 26 February I announced a massive international energy efficiency exhibition and conference to be held at the NEC in Birmingham in June 1988, which will be a major new platform for British industry and the largest international energy efficiency event in the world.

Electricity Generation (Costs)

4. Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's latest estimate of the relative costs of coal for electricity generation (a) from United Kingdom pits and (b) from imported sources broken down into (i) costs at present and (ii) estimated costs at 1990, 1995 and 2000.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish materials unaccounted for figures for establishments which handle nuclear materials but which are not designated nuclear industrial sites.

Mr. Goodlad: Figures for nuclear materials unaccounted for are published annually for BNFL and UKAEA.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the numbers of entrants to his Department from the ethnic minorities in the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; if he will also list the monitoring procedures used to ascertain the percentage of the work force represented by ethnic minorities and their patterns of promotion; and what are his methods of recruitment of minorities into the Department.

Mr. Peter Walker: The ethnic origins of new entrants have been surveyed since October 1985. The latest available information for the period up to 1 February 1987 is as follows:

Total number of new entrants to the Department of Energy in the period 1 October 1985 to 1 February 1987 was 145

Ethnic origins:	Number
White	97
Black/Asian	27
not stated (includes non-respondents)	21

A phased programme of departmental surveys of the ethnic origins of non-industrial civil servants by means of voluntary self-classification is being conducted. By the end of 1986 all non-industrial staff had been surveyed. Consideration is being given to ways of using the data on the ethnic origin of staff in post of monitor promotion.

All departmental recruitment is conducted on the basis of fair and open competition and selection is on merit. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Privy Council Office on 20 February 1987 at columns 880-81 reporting the arrangements made to encourage people from the ethnic minorities to apply to the Civil Service.

Nuclear Fuel

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, (Mr. Thomas), 29 January 1987, Official Report, column 327, if he will seek the agreement of the Central Electricity Generating Board and British Nuclear Fuels plc to the publication of such details of spent Magnox fuel throughput from the civil nuclear programme as would not prejudice national security; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I have made it clear that it is my policy to be as open as possible on such matters. Information given to Parliament includes the tonnage of civil spent fuel reprocessed in the Magnox reprocessing plant, B205, at Sellafield — Official Report, 11 December, at columns 638-39; the amount of spent fuel discharged from the Magnox reactors of the CEGB — Official Report, 26 June 1986, at column 269; and the allocation and use of plutonium produced in the generating board's Magnox reactors — Official Report, 21 July 1986, at columns 10-11. The publication of information on plutonium is one of the matters covered in Sir Frank Layfield's report into the CEGB's application for consent to construct Sizewell B. It would not be proper for me to comment further on this, or associated matters, before my right hon. Friend has taken his decision on the CEGB's application.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987, Official Report, column 58, if he will publish in the Official Report a list of (a) all country-to-country agreements, with their command numbers where relevant, containing clauses requiring the security classification of information on uranium and plutonium and (b) all commercial contracts concerning civil nuclear power between the Central Electricity Generating Board, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and British Nuclear Fuels plc and foreign partners that contain confidential clauses; and in each case if he will give the date of the entering into force of the agreement or contract and the date of expiry.

Mr. Goodlad: The Euratom treaty of 22 January 1972, Cmnd. 5179, has provisions relating to the protection of information which is subject to a security system in a member state. The UK/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement of March 1977, Cmnd. 6730, contains provisions restricting the use of information exchanged under it.

Specific provisions relating to the classification of information on nuclear materials are contained in the agreement between the Governments of the United Kingdom, Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands on collaboration on the development and exploitation of the gas centrifuge process for producing enriched uranium, dated 4 March 1970, Cmnd. 4315.

In addition, the United Kingdom is party to a large number of other international agreements in the nuclear field, such as bilateral nuclear co-operation agreements, safeguards agreements and Exchanges of Notes, many of which contain provisions restricting the use of information exchanged under them. To the extent that information exchanged under such agreements is subject to a security classification in the country of origin it is accorded similar protection in the United Kingdom.

As I said in my reply of 29 January, at column 327, it is common practice not to disclose commercially confidential information arising under contractual arrangements without the agreement of the commercial partners. This is the case irrespective of whether there are specific confidentiality clauses in the contract. I am advised that BNFL has over one hundred current contracts with foreign partners relating to the nuclear fuel cycle which contain specific confidentiality clauses. The CEGB and the UKAEA each have a number of such contracts themselves. The disclosure of information contained in or arising under these contracts is a matter for the contracting parties.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Tam Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East, (Mr. Strang), 10 December 1986, Official Report, column 196, if he will set out the reasons for the confidentiality of studies commissioned or undertaken by his Department on emergency plans for nuclear installations over the past five years.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 12 February 1987, at column 317.

CEGB (Monopoly)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to introduce legislation to limit the monopoly buying power of the Central Electricity Generating Board and introduce more competition into the provision of energy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The Government have no plans to legislate in this area. The coal purchase agreement between the CEGB and British Coal is a commercial matter for the board and the corporation. A competitive element has already been introduced into power generation by means of the Energy Act 1983 which established a framework for fair trading between private generators and electricity boards. Private sector operators can now generate as a main business and have a guaranteed market for their electricity at fair prices.

Anthracite

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total production of anthracite in the United Kingdom in 1986; and what proportion of this was made available to suppliers in Scotland.

Mr. David Hunt: Total production of anthracite in the United Kingdom in 1986 was about 2 million tonnes, of which some 36,000 tonnes was made available to suppliers in Scotland.

Sir Ian MacGregor

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list for each year of his chairmanship of the National Coal Board the payments, including the bonuses, made to Sir Ian MacGregor.

Mr. David Hunt: Emoluments paid to Sir Ian MacGregor while he was chairman were published in the National Coal Board's annual report and accounts for 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Coal Strike (Dismissals)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how many miners in (a) Scotland and (b) Britain as a whole who were dismissed for activities during the national coal strike have been, (i) reinstated or re-engaged or (ii) remain dismissed; and how many of those dismissed in (a) Scotland and (b) the rest of the country still have their cases under review;

(2) how many cases of miners dismissed by the National Coal Board during the miners' strike were subject to industrial tribunal cases in (a) Scotland and (b) the rest of the country;

(3) how many employees of the National Coal Board in (a) Scotland and (b) Great Britain as a whole have been paid compensation as a result of industrial tribunal cases arising from their dismissal during the national coal strike;

(4) how much money has been paid out to former National Coal Board or British Coal employees as a result of industrial tribunal cases arising from dismissal during the miners' national strike; and if he will provide a separate figure for Scotland.

Mr. David Hunt: Questions on the dismissal, re-employment or compensation of miners are matters for the management of the British Coal Corporation.

Petroleum

Mr. Powley asked the Secretary of State for Energy what are the Government's latest forecasts of the level of United Kingdom petroleum production.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The latest forecasts for United Kingdom petroleum production in the years 1987 to 1991 are as follows:

1988	105-125
1989	95-120
1991	70-105

As in previous years, these forecasts represent a range of levels of possible petroleum production for each year. The ranges make allowance for the considerable technical and geological uncertainties which influence the rate of oil production from both mature and recently developed fields.

The figures comprise stabilised crude and natural gas liquids. Production of the latter has built up rapidly in the last few years as follows:

	million tonnes of NGLs
1982	2·9
1983	4·1
1984	4·7
1985	5·1
1986	[1]5·8

[1] Provisional.

NGLs are expected to account for some 6 to 8 million tonnes annually of total petroleum production to 1991.

Total production in 1986 of stabilised crude and NGLs is estimated to have been 126·9 million tonnes.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Central America

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's bilateral aid programme to Central America.

Mr. Eggar: British aid to the five Central American Republics, Belize and Panama in 1985, the latest year for which figures are available, amounted to £22,337,000. A total of £16,701,000 of this consisted of investments by the Commonwealth Development Corporation. The balance was spent on training and technical co-operation, mainly in the natural resources sector; on assistance to displaced persons; and on programmes of financial aid to Belize and Honduras, in particular for roads, bridges and water supplies. We also support small development projects co-financed with British Voluntary Agencies in Central America.

Development Education

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department expects to publish its review of its contribution to the funding of development education.

Mr. Eggar: This review is an internal ODA document. As my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development (Mr. Patten) told the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 16 February at c. 410, he has decided to provide a further grant of £100,000 to the Centre for World Development Education. My hon. Friend has also decided to provide a further grant of £6,000 to Scottish Education and Action for Development.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Convention on Human Rights

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 4 February, Official Report, column 666, concerning the European convention on human rights, which United Kingdom dependent territories have so far adopted the first protocol to the convention.

Mr. Eggar: The territories to which the Convention applies have been consulted about the extension to them of the first protocol. We await replies. When they have been received a declaration will be made on an extension of the protocol.

Jordan (Diplomatic Immunity)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any requests have been made to the Royal Jordanian embassy for a waiver of diplomatic immunity in respect of any of their employees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: It has not been the practice to reveal the names of individual missions to which we have applied for waivers of diplomatic immunity.

If my hon. Friend has in mind recent press reports of a case involving alleged indecent assault, it is in our view most unlikely that the courts would regard diplomatic immunity as applying in that instance: the question of a waiver is not therefore relevant.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received on the present situation in Sri Lanka, from the High Commission there since the beginning of 1987; and if he will place in the Library a summary of those reports.

Mr. Eggar: We receive regular and detailed reports from our High Commission in Colombo on all aspects of the situation in Sri Lanka. Since the beginning of 1987, fighting between Tamil militant separatists and Government forces has continued in the north and east. The rest of the country is peaceful; there has been no intercommunal violence. The December proposals for a peaceful settlement are still on the table.

It is not our practice to place reports from diplomatic missions in the Library of the House.

Jews (Soviet Union)

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the number of Jews who were allowed to leave the Soviet Union in February 1987.

Mr. Renton: According to our information, 146. This is a slight increase over the figure for January, but falls well short of expectations. We shall continue to press for significant improvement.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has ascertained the reasons why visas were refused to a delegation of British Members of Parliament who wished to visit the Soviet Union to witness a presentation of honours to Russian Jews; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Soviet authorities said that they regarded the presentation of these awards as a provocative action. We have made it clear that we do not accept this. Her Majesty's Ambassador in Moscow expressed his great regret that visas had not been forthcoming for the delegation.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Russian Jews who were to be honoured by the all-party Parliamentary Committee on Soviet Jewry have yet been to the British Embassy in Moscow to receive their awards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Her Majesty's Ambassador in Moscow presented the awards on behalf of the all-party parliamentary committee on 23 February at a ceremony held at the Embassy. Iosif Begun, who was only released from prison that day, was unable to attend. All others to whom the award had been made attended.

Lebanon

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest information as to how many British citizens are still in Lebanon.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) on 16 February 1987. The estimated number has not changed substantially since then. Her Majesty's Embassy in Lebanon provide us with regular information on the British community.

Entry Visas

Mr. Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice he gives to entry clearance officers concerning the giving of visitors' visas to fiancés, fiancées and spouses who have been refused entry clearance; in particular, where the purpose of the visit is to attend and appeal.

Mr. Eggar: No special advice is given. Entry clearance officers resolve each case in accordance with the immigration rules.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why visitors' visas were refused to Khalid Mahmood (TH/19995/86; IMM 79914) at the British embassy in Islamabad.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is not immediately available. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the numbers of entrants to his Department from the ethnic minorities in the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; if he will also list the monitoring procedures used to ascertain the percentage of the work force represented by ethnic minorities and their patterns of promotion; and what are his methods of recruitment of minorities into the Department.

Mr. Tebbit: The Duchy of Lancaster is not a Government Department. The staff is my private office are covered by the arrangements applying to the Cabinet Office, for which the Prime Minister has answered. I would refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on Friday 6 March 1987.

CIVIL SERVICE

Job Descriptions and Definitions

83. Sir David Price asked the Minister for the Civil Service what steps he is taking to ensure that job descriptions and job definitions within the Civil Service reflect changes in job content.

Mr. Luce: Under the new appraisal system staff agree forward job plans with their line manager for the coming year. They are advised to amend them in the light of changing circumstances. My Department is monitoring the use of forward job plans in a sample of Civil Service locations.

Training

Mr. Pawsey asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement about improving the quality of training within the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: Yes. The Government are committed to high quality training and development as a principal means of improving the operational performance of the Civil Service, and enabling it to adapt to new demands. In particular, we have introduced new programmes for the training of senior staff.

ENVIRONMENT

House Insulation (Cancer)

87. Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to investigate possible links between certain house insulating materials and deaths from cancer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment to my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Knowles) on Tuesday 24 February, at column 196.

Nuclear Waste

88. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to make inquiries of each right hon. and hon. Member as to which are prepared to accept a low-level nuclear waste disposal site in their constituency.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. United Kingdom NIREX Ltd. has already identified four potential sites, at all of which geological investigations are now proceeding.

Construction Industry (Training)

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment who attended the forum on training in the construction industry on 13 January.

Mr. John Patten: Besides the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Department of Employment, my hon. Friend the Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier), and myself, the following attended the forum on 13 January: Mr. C. Chetwood (George Wimpey plc), Mr. R. Duncan (Syme and Duncan), Mr. D. Gaulter (CITB), Mr. G. Henderson (TGWU), Mr. W. Hilton (FMB), Mr. B. Jefferson (PSA), Mr. D. Maiden (CITB), Mr. P. Money (BEC), Mr A. Pelling (DOE), Mr D. Phillips (BEC), Mr. M. Stothers (W. Steward & Co.), Mr. D. Stradling (J. Laing Construction Ltd.), Mr. B. Tierney (R. F. Peachey and Sons Ltd.), Mr. H. Try (Hugh Try Holdings Ltd.), and Mr. J. Wiltshire (MSC). Mr. A. Williams (UCATT) and Mr. Howard Wainwright, a former HMI, had planned to attend but were prevented from doing so because of the weather conditions.

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the conclusions of the forum on training in the construction industry held on 13 January; and what steps he intends to take to increase training.

Mr. John Patten: The forum on training in the construction industry considered ways of tackling skill shortages; ways of improving site management; and ways of improving training for adult operatives. In conclusion, the chairman of the Construction Industry Training Board agreed to bring forward proposals for increasing the number of entrants into craft training by 4,000 and to prepare an action plan to cover medium-term measures to deal with the skill shortages problems; ways of improving the provision and take-up of training for site managers and supervisors; and ways of improving the industry's investment in the training of experienced operatives and craftsmen. I expect to receive these proposals at the end of this month.

Flats

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to introduce legislation to extend the right of occupiers of privately owned flats in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend introduced the Landlord and Tenants (No. 2) Bill on Thursday 5 March.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the numbers of entrants to his Department from the ethnic minorities in the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; if he will also list the monitoring procedures used to ascertain the percentage of the work force represented by ethnic minorities and their patterns of promotion; and what are his methods of recruitment of minorities into the Department.

Mr. Ridley: The ethnic origins of new entrants have been surveyed since 1 October 1985. The latest available information for my Department for the period from then to 1 March 1987 is as follows:

	Number
Total new entrants	2,299
Ethnic origins
white	1,437
black/Asian	88
non-respondents	774

A phased programme of departmental surveys of the ethnic origin of non-industrial civil servants by means of voluntary self-classification is being conducted. By the end of 1986 all non-industrial staff in the county of Avon, the north-west, the east and west midlands, London, the south-east and East Anglia had been surveyed. All remaining staff will be surveyed by 1988. Consideration is being given to ways of using the data on the ethnic origin of staff-in-post to monitor promotion.

All departmental recruitment is conducted on the basis of fair and open competition and selection is on merit. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Privy Council Office on 20 February 1987, at columns 880-81, reporting the arrangements being made to encourage people from the ethnic minorities to apply to the Civil Service.

Local Government Finance (Waltham Forest)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the rate support grant paid to the London borough of Waltham Forest in cash and real terms since 1979.

Mr. Chope: The figures requested for 1981-82 and later years are as follows; comparable figures for 1979-80 and 1980-81 are not available.

Waltham Forest Rate Support Grant

	Cash £ million	Real terms £ million
1981-82	54·555	69·765
1982-83	61·038	72·782
1983-84	65·541	74·815
1984-85	64·831	70·938
1986-87	77·526	77·526

Figures for 1981-82 and 1982-83 are final entitlements. In 1981-82 the Metropolitan police and GLC entitlements were paid to the rating authorities in their areas: in 1982-83 only the Metropolitan police entitlement was paid in this way. Domestic rate relief grant figures for 1983-84 and 1984-85 are final entitlement; those for 1985-86 and 1986-87 are first estimates. Block grant figures for 1983-84 and 1984-85 are entitlements after holdback based upon provisional outturn; those for 1985-86 are entitlements after holdback based on budgets; those for 1986-87 are entitlements based on initial budget returns. Real term figures are cash figures uprated by the corresponding GDP deflator for the year.

West Sussex Structure Plan

Sir Peter Hordern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish his decision about the West Sussex structure plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend expects to publish his proposed modifications to the submitted alteration to the West Sussex structure plan shortly. There will then be a period of six weeks during which objections and representations may be made. Final approval of the alteration will follow as soon as possible after the expiry of that period.

Official Drivers

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the current pay levels for official drivers.

Mr. Chope: The basic pay for GCS drivers is £104·58 per week plus £28·07 per week Inner London weighting, for a standard 39 hour week.

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many drivers of official cars have taken the advanced driving test.

Mr. Chope: Three Government car service drivers have passed the advanced drivers' test. This is not yet a mandatory test for GCS drivers who are all obliged to satisfy ROSPA examiners before taking up employment.

Homelessness

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what figures he has for the numbers of children living in households who (a) are accepted by local authorities as homeless, (b) apply to local authorities to be accepted as homeless, (c) are living in bed and breakfast or other temporary accommodation, (d) are living in households on council waiting lists and (e) are living in homes unfit for human habitation.

Mr. Tracey: Information on the number of children is not collected for any of the categories mentioned. The only available relevant information concerns households with dependent children whom local authorities have accepted responsibility to accommodate. During the third quarter of 1986, local authorities in England accepted responsibility to accommodate some 16,000 households with dependent children. It is not known how these households were accommodated.

Home Insulation

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total public expenditure on improving home insulation for each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: I will answer this question shortly.

Neighbourhood Energy Action

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill dated 2 January about neighbourhood energy action.

Mr. John Patten: A reply was sent on 27 February.

Anti-fouling Paint

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek powers to make it an offence punishable by heavy fines to sell anti-fouling paint containing tributyl tin as from 1 July.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 24 February at columns 202-3. Regulations under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 are currently being drafted and will shortly be made available for consultation. In addition, from 1 July it will be an offence under part III of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 to sell any pesticide, which includes any anti-fouling agent, which has not been approved by Ministers.

Under section 100(5) of the Control of Pollution Act, the regulations may prescribe maximum penalties for an offence. Similar provisions apply under section 21(3) of the Food and Environment Act. In either case a person guilty of an offence is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £2,000 and on conviction on indictment to an unlimited fine.

Tenants (Telford)

Mr. Hawksley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the consultation will take place with the tenants of Telford development housing corporation over the future ownership of their properties.

Mr. John Patten: Tenants of Telford Development Corporation will be consulted on the future ownership of their homes as soon as possible after I have fully considered the financial implications of transfer to alternative landlords and after further consideration with the Association of District Councils and the National Federation of Housing Associations of the possible consultation arrangement. This will be completed quickly.

Ministers (Car Telephones)

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many official cars for the use of Ministers are fitted with car telephones; and with what generic type of telephone.

Mr. Chope: Official cars for the use of Ministers are fitted with car telephones. These include fully transportable cellphones, hand portable cellphones, fixed in-car cellphones, and fixed system for radio telephones.

Water (Privatisation)

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is yet able to reply to the letter of 4 December 1986 from the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington regarding privatised water companies and what information he has on whether privatised water companies will be treated as competent authorities by the European Economic Community.

Mr. John Patten: I am still considering the matters which the hon. Member raised in his letter of 4 December 1986, and I will write to him as soon as possible.

Sports Grounds, Brent

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) why he has decided to call in the planning application for Brent council to build homes on the site of the Abbey National sports ground in Kenton; and if he will make a statement;

(2) why he decided not to call in the planning application by Brent council to build houses on the General motors sports ground, near Kenton in Brent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Secretary of State did not call in the General Motors sports ground application in 1983 because he decided, after careful consideration, that it was a local matter which it was appropriate to leave to the local authority. However, the Secretary of State considered that the questions of the loss of additional open space and the further departure from the development plan which would result from the development of the Abbey National sports ground were matters which he should consider.

Cleaning Contracts (Palace of Westminster)

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes have been made recently in respect of cleaning contracts within the Palace of Westminster; what is the total cost of all such cleaning contracts; and whether he will list all the firms who have cleaning contracts in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Chope: The Parliamentary Works Office is responsible for the cleaning of common areas and some offices in the Palace of Westminster and the parliamentary outbuildings. Apart from some minor variations made for operational reasons, there have been no changes since July 1986 to the contract for cleaning these areas held by ICC (Cleaning Services) Ltd.

A cleaning contract on behalf of the House of Commons Refreshment Department has been awarded by the Crown Suppliers to Initial Services Cleaners Ltd.

The value of the contracts is a commercial matter.

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish information on central Government expenditure on the housing investment programme for all years since 1978-79 inclusive, by standard United Kingdom region, showing the absolute, indexed and per capita form of the following disaggregated costs (i) capital account costs and (ii) current account costs.

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to his reply, 24 February 1987, c. 198]: The available information is for English local authorities' and new towns' housing and is given in the tables.

For estimates for other parts of the United Kingdom, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Sector Employees

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were working in the National Health Service, local government, Civil Service, and nationalised industries in the United Kingdom in the years (a) 1960, (b) 1965, (c) 1970, (d) 1975, (e) 1980, (f) 1981, (g) 1982, (h) 1983, (i) 1984, (j) 1985 and (k) 1986; what was the total public expenditure on these services for each of these years; and if he will publish these numbers and costs both as a total and broken down between the four sectors mentioned; and if he will also state the number of full time equivalents in each case.

Mr. MacGregor: The table provides details of staff numbers in the National Health Service, local government, Civil Service and nationalised industries. Public expenditure figures, including those for Civil Service running costs, for the period 1981-82 to 1986-87 were published in the 1987 public expenditure White Paper, Cm 56. Figures for earlier years are not readily available on a comparable basis.

Autocatalysts

Mr. Bright asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the introduction of fiscal incentives to encourage the sale of cars equipped with autocatalysts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: None.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the numbers of entrants to his Department from the ethnic minorities in the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; and if he will also list the monitoring procedures used to ascertain the percentage of the work force represented by ethnic minorities and their patterns of promotion; and what are his methods of recruitment of minorities into Department.

Mr. Brooke: The ethnic origins of new recruits have been surveyed since October 1985. The latest available information for the period up to September 1986 is as follows:

	Number
Total new recruits to Her Majesty's Treasury (non-industrials only) in period 1 October 1985 to end September 1986	254

	Number
Ethnic origins
White	152
Black/Asian	15
Not stated	87

A phased programme of departmental surveys of the ethnic origin of non-industrial civil servants by means of voluntary self-classification is being conducted. By the end of 1986 all non-industrial staff in the Treasury had been surveyed. Consideration is being given to ways of using the data on the ethnic origin of staff-in-post to monitor promotion.

All departmental recruitment is conducted on the basis of fair and open competition and selection is on merit. Recent pilot studies indicate that candidates from the ethnic minorities are well represented in our departmental recruitment schemes. We will continue to keep the proportion of ethnic applicants under review.

Manufacturing Industry and Investment

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the performance of manufacturing industry and investment since May 1983.

Mr. MacGregor: Figures for December 1986 show that manufacturing output was 10½ per cent. higher, and productivity 15½ per cent. higher, than in May 1983. In the three months to January 1987 manufacturing exports, excluding erratic items, were over 28 per cent. higher than in the second quarter of 1983; manufacturing investment, including leased assets, was 13½ per cent. higher in the fourth quarter of 1986 than in the second quarter of 1983. The February 1987 CBI monthly trends survey showed marked increases in total and export order books and in manufacturing companies' expectations for output growth over the next four months.

National Debt

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1957 the amount of the national debt, the amount of interest payable on that debt, and the percentage which each bears to nominal gross domestic product.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested is available in or can be derived from the following published sources: Financial Statistics, Economic Trends, Annual Abstract, Financial Accounts of the United Kingdom. These can be obtained from the Library of the House.

Taxpayers' Incomes

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the last year that information is available, how many taxpayers had incomes between (a) £27,500 to £29,999; (b) £30,000 to £34,999, (c) £35,000 to £39,999, (d) £40,000 to £44,999 and (e) over £50,000.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Overdue Taxes

Mr. Speller asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the grade of officer who may receive some form of commission or other payment for success in collecting overdue taxes; how much has been paid in each of the past five years for which figures are available; what was the highest individual sum paid; and if he will make a statement on his policy regarding such payment by results.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

European Investment Bank

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in his capacity as director of the European Investment Bank, he will state whether it remains the policy of that Bank that loans should be conditional on guarantees by member states or other first class guarantors; and if he will make a statement on the guidance given by the board of the bank in this respect when it indicated that it was content for discussions to take place between officials of the bank and the promotors of the Channel tunnel for a loan of £1,000,000,000.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total amount of public funds contributed and subscribed to the European Investment Bank since 1 January 1973.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in the discussions between officials of the European Investment Bank and the promoters of the Channel tunnel on a loan of £1,000,000,000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Mental Health (Nursing)

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures the Government are taking to arrest the decline in the proportion of trained community psychiatric nurses to the total work force of community psychiatric nurses.

Mrs. Currie: With the rising numbers of nurses working in community psychiatric nursing, we have already made clear to health authorities and professional bodies our concern that all staff should be properly prepared for this specialised area of work. Some health authorities provide in-service education and training for their community psychiatric nurses before they take up their posts, and we use every opportunity to encourage staff to undertake the formal post-basic clinical course in community psychiatric nursing care. From information provided by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting, 1,142 certificates have been issued since 1980 to nurses successfully completing the course, 199 certificates being granted during the year ending 31 March 1986. We shall shortly be discussing with regional nursing officers what the deficiencies now are, and the ways they may be rectified.

SERPS

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out combined employer and employee national insurance contribution rates for financing the state earnings-related pension scheme for each five years up to 2050, on assumptions of both a price-indexed and earnings-indexed annual increase in the basic retirement pension, and assuming a growth rate in the economy of (a) 1½ per cent. and (b) 3 per cent. per year; and if he will provide these tables on the basis that (i) the state earnings-related pension scheme is unchanged and (ii) the state earnings-related pension scheme is amended in accordance with the Social Security Act 1986.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 8 April 1986, at column 86 and to table 5 in the Government Actuary's report on the Social Security Bill 1986 (Cmnd. 9711). The estimates of combined national insurance rates published in these were based on assumptions of real earnings, and not on growth in the economy, as real earnings is the relevant economic factor. Additional projections at five-yearly intervals could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Free Milk and Vitamins

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women and children in Sheffield, Hecley, were in receipt of free milk and vitamins in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lyell: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery) on 2 March at column 495.

Maternity Payments

Dr. Bray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Motherwell, South received maternity allowance in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. But in the twelve months ending April 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, the following numbers of claims to maternity allowance were made at the Department's offices which cover Motherwell South, although the boundaries are not conterminous:

	Number
Motherwell	600
Hamilton	1,239
Wishaw	465

Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Manchester, Central received maternity allowance in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. But in the 12 months ending April 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, the following numbers of claims to maternity allowance were made at the Department's offices which cover Manchester, Central constituency, although the boundaries are not conterminous:

	Number
Manchester, Central	191
Openshaw	790
Failsworth	1,003
Longsight	524
Chorlton	651

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department is monitoring health authorities' reviews of hospital waiting lists so as to assess the extent to which reductions are achieved by increases in efficiency in treating more patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have asked health authorities to look at the nature, cause and extent of waiting list problems in every district and to take action to make significant improvements. In many cases this will be through making more effective use of existing facilities. Health authorities have also submitted plans for treating over 100,000 waiting list cases supported by the £25 million waiting list fund for 1987-88. We shall closely monitor the achievement of those plans.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many clerks have been appointed by health authorities in England on short-term contracts during 1986-87 to examine hospital waiting lists and to report on progress to regional health authorities or his Department.

Mr. Newton: This information is not held centrally.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were removed from hospital and in-patient waiting lists, by district, for the years 1984, 1985 and 1986, respectively.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information that she seeks. Statistical information on cases removed from in-patient waiting lists will be collected centrally from 1 April 1987 when the recommendations of the steering group on health services information are implemented.

Corporal Punishment

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, (1) pursuant to his answer on 9 February, Official Report, column 138, regarding corporal punishment, if he will take steps to prohibit corporal punishment in private nurseries covered by the Nursing and Childminders Regulation Act 1948;

(2) if he will take steps to prohibit corporal punishment in day nurseries provided by local social services departments;

(3) if he will take steps to prohibit corporal punishment in the youth treatment centres administered by his Department;

(4) if he intends to seek to revise the regulations applying to residential care homes and to nursing homes and mental nursing homes to prohibit the use of corporal punishment in these homes;

(5) if he will make it his policy that the regulations to be issued under the Children's Homes Act 1982 applying to private children's homes should contain a provision prohibiting the use of corporal punishment;

(6) when he expects revision of the relevant regulations to be completed.

Mrs. Currie: Completion of the revised regulations governing the conduct of local authority community homes and of voluntary children's homes is planned for later this year. At the same time it is intended to introduce regulations governing the conduct of private children's homes. A provision will be included in all these regulations prohibiting the use of corporal punishment in each type of establishment.

We also intend to forbid this kind of punishment for children in homes registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984. In association with a number of current studies involving residential care homes whose reports are due over the next 12 months we shall be taking stock of the registration system and amending the regulations so as to ban corporal punishment. There are no circumstances in which corporal punishment would be appropriate for children attending local authority day nurseries or any premises registered under the Nurseries and Childminders Regulation Act 1948. This subject has not been covered in departmental guidance, but it is intended that future guidance on day care services for pre-school children will deal with the question of discipline.

Corporal punishment has never been permitted in youth treatment centres. It would be incompatible with the care and treatment which this service provides for the country's most disturbed boys and girls.

Deaf and Hard of Hearing (Grants)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the number and amounts of grants given in each of the last five years to voluntary organisations working with deaf and hard-of-hearing people under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act.

Mr. Major: The list is as follows:

Neurology Services (Guildford)

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on proposals by the South-West Thames regional health authority to close down in-patient neurology services in Guildford.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that, at its meeting in October 1986, the South-West Thames regional health authority considered the outcome of an option appraisal on the future of neurosciences in the region. The Guildford neurological unit forms part of this review.

A fundamental principle proposed and generally supported in the consultation document was that neurology and neurosurgery should be provided in a combined centre; the close contact between the various clinicians was in the interest of both patients and the service as a whole. The authority, in making its decision, was acutely aware of the strength of feeling and counter-argument about Guildford becoming one of the combined centres, but, after careful consideration, supported the case put forward by the independent clinical advisers.

The future pattern of service is based on two combined centres at St. George's hospital, Tooting, and Hurstwood Park neurological centre, Haywards Heath. Each district in the region is expected to have its own out-patient clinic serviced by a consultant neurologist linked to one of those centres, and the Guildford unit would remain in service until the unit at St. George's is provided, probably in the mid-1990s. At that time, formal consultation will be undertaken on the transfer, and, if the local community health council objects, the proposal will then be referred to my right hon. Friend for a final decision.

Children (Homelessness)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what figures he has for the number of children living in households who are receiving board and lodging supplementary benefit payments.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. In December 1984 (the latest date for which figures are available) about 6,000 claimants with dependent children received supplementary benefit board and lodging payments.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what figures he has for the number of children currently in care because their families are homeless; and how this figure has changed for each of the quarters in each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: A child may be taken into care for a number of reasons of which homelessness may be a contributory factor, although not identified as a specific cause in the statistics. The information available on children in care where the specific cause is that their families are homeless is given in the table for 1979-84. Information for each quarter is not readily available centrally.

Family Practitioner Service (Surrey)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the expenditure of the Surrey Family Practitioner Service in (a) 1979, (b) 1983 and the latest date for which information is available; and what was the average size of patient list on each of those dates.

Mr. Newton: Expenditure for family practitioner services within the locality of Surrey Family Practitioner Committee for the respective years 1979-80, 1983-84 and 1985-86, which is the latest year for which information is available, was as follows: £34,198,470; £57,612,352; and £66,369,149. The average general medical practitioner list size in those years was 2,195, 2,101 and 2,061 respectively.

Doctors and Dentists

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many doctors and dentists were employed in the West Surrey/North East Hampshire health authority in 1979, 1983 and the latest date for which information is available;

(2) how many doctors and dentists were employed in the South-West Surrey district health authority in 1979, 1983 and the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give my hon. Friend all the information she seeks. The contracts of senior hospital medical and dental staff (ie consultants and senior registrars) are held by the regional health authority or teaching districts and the information on their allocation to individual districts is not held centrally. It is not therefore possible to provide an overall total number of doctors or dentists employed within specific districts. Those staffing figures which are available are shown in the table.

Nurses

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nurses were employed by the West Surrey/North East Hampshire district authority in (a) 1979, (b) 1983 and the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Newton: The figures are shown in the table.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nurses have left the National Health Service in the Wessex region for the last three available years.

Mr. Newton: Information on numbers of nurses leaving the National Health Service is not collected centrally. However, the table of staff in post at 30 September for each of the last three available years, shows that there has been a net increase in nursing and midwifery staff employed in the Wessex Regional Health Authority over this period.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the source of his information that the report on nurse staffing levels in south Manchester authority was dated November 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The document of unknown provenance enclosed with the hon. Member for Stretford's letter dated 6 February to my right hon. Friend was a very poor photocopy which appeared to bear that date.

District Health Authorities

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what indicators are available to demonstrate changes in activity of the South-West Surrey and West Surrey/North East Hampshire district health authorities in 1979, 1983 and the latest date for which information is available; and what was the total expenditure on each of these dates.

Mr. Newton: The Department now issues a package of performance indicators (PIs) annually to all health authorities. These indicators bring together data from a number of established sources and provide managers with a means of comparing the performance of their own services with those in other authorities. The current set of PIs examines the whole spectrum of activity in the NHS and has been issued for three years, 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86. This set extended the coverage of the original package for 1981-82 issued in 1983. No indicators are available for years before 1981-82. Copies of the PI packages issued to the health service are held in the statistics section of the Library.

Current expenditure for the financial years 1983-84 and 1985-86, derived from the accounts of the health authorities for the respective years is as follows:

South West Surrey	30,586,388	33,733,031
West Surrey/North East Hampshire	32,974,217	37,911,701

Figures for districts were not collected centrally prior to NHS Restructuring on 1 April 1982.

Single Payments

Mr. Buchan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the policy of his Department towards refusing single payment for a cooker, under regulation 30, on the grounds that the applicant does not require hot food; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Regulation 30 provides that a single payment can be made if it is the only means of preventing serious risk to the health or safety of a member of the assessment unit. Whether a payment can be made in an individual case is a matter for the independent adjudicating authorities.

Guidance on the application of regulation 30 is issued by the chief adjudication officer in paragraphs 7521-7586 of the S manual and paragraph 19 of circular S20/86—copies of which are in the Library. These advise that serious risk can be assumed if there are no cooking facilities and there are children under two in the assessment unit, or hot meals are medically essential to a member of the assessment unit. Whether the absence of cooking facilities in other circumstances constitutes a serious risk will depend on the facts of the particular case.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many beds in National Health Service hospitals have been taken out of use since May 1979 in the North-West Thames regional health authority; and how many new beds have been brought into use in the same area and from the same date.

Mrs. Currie: In the North-West Thames region between 1979 and 1985 there has been an overall reduction of available beds in all specialties in hospital of 4,088 (14·6 per cent.). Fewer beds does not necessarily mean lower standards of care. A total of 1,424 new beds have been made available in capital schemes costing £1 million or more. Numbers of patients treated have risen including a 68 per cent. increase in numbers of day cases (to 63,000 in 1985). Reductions in the size of hospitals for mentally ill and mentally handicapped people account for about two-thirds of the beds lost over the period. If my hon. Friend should wish for further information I suggest that he contacts the chairman of North-West Thames Regional Health Authority.

Suicide

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if any studies have been conducted into the incidence of suicide amongst those who have been in child care; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No; we are not aware of any studies which would provide an estimate of the incidence of suicide amongst those who have been in care.

North-West Regional Health Authority

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of the allocation of the £1·2 million funding to the North-West regional health authority and of the distribution of this to the districts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We expect an announcement to be made shortly.

AIDS

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources will be allocated to the London Lighthouse AIDS counselling organisation; and how soon he expects to make his announcement.

Mr. Newton: The application for funding is under consideration, and a decision will be announced in due course.

Prescriptions

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many prescriptions were issued by doctors in (a) Cornwall and (b) England and Wales in 1979 and 1986, respectively; and what proportion of each of these were subsequently presented to pharmacists in each of those years.

Mr. Newton: The following table gives details of prescriptions dispensed by pharmacists and appliance contractors. Figures for 1986 are not yet available. No information is held about prescriptions issued but not presented for dispensing.

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average and maximum cost per prescription dispensed for the most recent date available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the average cost to the National Health Service of a prescription in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is given in the table:

Average total cost per prescription [£]—England

Year	Cost
1984	4·39
1985	4·76

Note: Total cost includes net ingredient cost (less any appropriate discount), on-cost allowances, dispensing fees, container allowances, oxygen payments and VAT.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total value of free prescriptions filled in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what percentage of the total value of prescriptions this figure represents in each of those years.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is set out in the table:

Prescriptions dispensed by chemists and appliance contractors in the family practitioner service net ingredient cost (NIC) of exempt prescriptions as a percentage of net ingredient Cost of total prescriptions (England)

Year	NIC total prescriptions £ million	NIC exempt prescriptions £ million	Per cent.
1981	834·4	549·6	65·9
1982	977·3	651·1	66·6
1983	1,095·8	753·3	68·7
1984	1,181·4	819·3	69·3
1985	1,249·9	889·1	71·1

Note: The figures used for numbers of exempt prescriptions are estimates based upon prescriptions submitted to the Prescription Pricing Authority by a sample of around 5 per cent. of chemists.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many free prescriptions have been filled in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what percentage of total prescriptions this figure represents in each of those years.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is set out in the table.

Prescriptions dispensed by chemists and appliance contractors in the family practitioner service Exempt prescriptions as a percentage of total prescriptions—England

Year	Total number prescriptions (millions)	Number exempt prescriptions	Exempt prescriptions as percentage of total prescriptions
1981	300·0	205·2	68·4

1984	320·5	233·4	72·8
1985	318·7	238·5	74·8

Note: The figures used for numbers of exempt prescriptions are estimates based upon prescriptions submitted to the Prescription Pricing Authority by a sample of around 5 per cent. of chemists.

Blood Plasma

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much blood plasma, collected before screening for HIV antibodies of blood donations was introduced, is currently stockpiled in England and Wales; whether there are any plans to test such plasma for HIV; and what plans there are for the disposal of plasma which cannot be used.

Mrs. Currie: A stockpile of frozen plasma has been deliberately built up at the blood products laboratory, Elstree, in preparation for the increased requirement of the new laboratory. Of this stockpile, 176 tonnes has been quarantined and consists of plasma given before testing for antibodies to HIV started in October 1985.

It is not possible to test this plasma for HIV by direct methods. However, it is likely that in some cases indirect methods will be able to show whether some plasma is safe to use.

A committee of experts has recently been asked to advise on the extent to which the stockpile may be safely used and its recommendations are under urgent consideration.

There is sufficient tested plasma in storage to ensure that there will not be a shortage when the new laboratory opens.

NHS Patients (Private Treatment)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the private institutions providing in-patient and out-patient treatment to National Health Service patients and contractual arrangements with health authorities during 1986.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. Figures for 1986 are not yet available centrally.

Raptors

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, column 624, concerning raptors, he will publish in the Official Report information available to him on injuries to humans inflicted by raptors; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that information on the number of injuries to humans by raptors is not available centrally. The statistics derived from hospital activity analysis and similar systems do not permit a separate identification of these injuries to be made centrally. There have been no deaths registered in the United Kingdom with an underlying cause of death as accident caused by raptor in the last five years for which complete data are available.

Health Authorities (Private Patient Income)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for the financial year 1985-86 the health authorities for which statutory auditors have issued reports of poor control over private patient income.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish details of the progress being made by health authorities in putting their services out to tender in the manner of the answer of 25 November 1986, Official Report, column 214.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Benefits

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what steps he proposes to take to increase the level of uptake of means-tested benefit;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the estimated level of uptake of all means-tested benefits and the average level of payments forgone by the different claimant groups as a result of non-uptake of benefits;

(3) what is the departmental budget devoted to promoting increased uptake of means-tested benefits;

(4) what is the most recent estimate of the number of people who lost out on means-tested benefits as a result of non-uptake.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement on the operation of this year's severe weather payment scheme; and whether he is able to estimate the level of uptake of this year's scheme.

Mr. Major: We are satisfied that the new rules for exceptionally cold weather payments are simpler and easier to understand and that as a result of widespread publicity more people have been helped this winter and payments have been made far more quickly than under any previous system of exceptionally severe weather payments. It is not yet possible to make an estimate of take-up among eligible groups.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants have now received £10 severe weather payments in Scotland.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested.

Up to 3 March 1987 some 285,000 £5 exceptionally cold weather payments were made in Scotland.

Board-and-Lodging Payments

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he will take to ensure that arrears of supplementary benefit are paid to all claimants who were affected by the freeze on board-and-lodging payments imposed on 20 December 1984.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg) on 6 March at columns 724-25.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants were affected by the freeze on board-and-lodging payments between 20 December 1984 and 28 April 1985; and how many of them are still affected as a result of the transitional protection given by regulation 9(17) of the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations 1983.

Mr. Major: The number affected is roughly estimated to be about 20,000. It is not known how many will be entitled to transitional protection.

Family Trust

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the answer given to the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson) on 16 February, Official Report, column 509, concerning Family Forum, he will now give the same information in respect of the Family Trust.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that the National Family Trust is a new organisation whose aims are to conduct and disseminate applied research, practical education and to influence policy formulation for the benefit of family life in Britain. The trust has not applied to the Department for a grant under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968, and thus we have had no opportunity to assess its activities for the purposes of evaluating the cost effectiveness of grant aiding the trust.

Pensioner Prices Index

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will review the relevance of the components of the pensioner prices index; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have been asked to reply. The coverage of the retail prices index (RPI) and the pensioner price indices has recently been reviewed by the RPI advisory committee and a copy of its report is available in the Library (Cmnd. 9848). All the committee's recommendations were accepted by my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Employment and most of them are about to be put into effect with the publication of the RPI for February 1987 on 20 March.

Radiation (Cancer)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment last met to consider allegations of higher than average leukaemia and lymphatic cancer levels among under 25-year-olds living near the atomic weapons research establishment, Aldermaston, and royal ordnance factory, Burghfield; when it will next meet and from which sources it is calling for statistical, epidemiological and other expert research; and how much original research it is carrying out.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 16 February 1987, c. 506]: The Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) considered evidence, relating to allegations of a raised cancer incidence around the atomic weapons research establishment, Aldermaston, and royal ordnance factory, Burghfield, at its meetings in September 1986 and December 1986 and will meet next in late March 1987. COMARE is considering all the available information on cancer incidence and mortality and radiation exposure, including the Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys' report on cancer rates in the vicinity of nuclear installations. COMARE does not conduct research itself, but, in the course of its considerations, it identifies areas where further information or research is required. Any recommendations which COMARE makes for further research will be published as part of its report.

Premature Births

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give a breakdown by regional health authority of the number of premature deliveries by gestational age of the babies concerned; and if he will indicate in each group the percentage survival rate of such babies in each health authority in the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) if he will give a breakdown by estimated gestational age of the numbers of premature live births in England and Wales in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will state how many of the babies in each case in each of those years survived.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 4 March 1987, c. 625-26]: I regret that information is not available in the exact form requested as period of gestation is not collected at the registration of live births. However, birthweight may be taken as an indicator of gestational age, and the tables show data which have been derived by linking each infant death record to its corresponding birth record, for birthweights below 2,500 g.

THE ARTS

North-West Region

36. Mr. Stott asked the Minister for the Arts what his most recent estimate is of local authority spending on the arts in the north-west region.

Mr. Luce: Statistics collected by the Department of the Environment show local authority current expenditure of £56·5 million and capital expenditure of £11·0 million in 1985-86 on museums, galleries and libraries in the north western region.

It is impossible to identify precise figures for performing arts, but estimates for leisure and recreation are published annually by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy and are available in the Library.

45. Mr. Litherland asked the Minister for the Arts what is his estimate of the revenue derived from arts-based tourism in the north-west region.

Mr. Luce: I have no breakdown in this amount of detail, but the subject will be covered in the survey of the economic importance of the arts, to be published later this year.

47. Mr. Pike asked the Minister for the Arts what is his estimate of local authority spending on the arts in the north-west region.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Wigan (Mr. Stott).

58. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Minister for the Arts what is his estimate of the revenue derived from arts-based tourism in the north-west region.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Litherland).

South-West Region

38. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Minister for the Arts what is his estimate of the revenue derived from arts-based tourism in the south-west region.

Mr. Luce: I have no estimated breakdown of revenue in this amount of detail, but the subject will be covered in the survey of the economic importance of the arts to be published in the summer.

Employment

39. Dr. McDonald asked the Minister for the Arts if, pursuant to his reply of 16 February, Official Report, column 651, he will state the terms of reference of the study into the impact of the arts on employment, to whose funding he is contributing.

Mr. Luce: The study will examine the economic contribution of the arts and arts-related industries to the economy in measures of productive activity such as sales, external trade and employment. It will also address itself to indirect and secondary contributions.

42. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Minister for the Arts if, pursuant to his reply of 16 February, Official Report, column 651, he will state when he proposes to publish the study into the impact of the arts on the economy and on employment, to whose funding he is contributing.

61. Mr. Wareing asked the Minister for the Arts if, pursuant to his reply of 16 February, Official Report, column 651, he will indicate the terms of reference of the two studies on the impact of the arts on the economy.

70. Mr. Fatchett asked the Minister for the Arts if, pursuant to his reply of 16 February, Official Report, column 651, he will state the terms of reference of the study into the impact of the arts on employment to whose funding he is contributing.

76. Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Minister for the Arts if, pursuant to his reply of 16 February, Official Report, column 651, he will say when he proposes to publish the study into the impact of the arts on the economy, and on employment, to whose funding he is contributing.

Mr. Luce: The study is being conducted by the Policy Studies Institute, which will be responsible for publication. I expect the study to be published later this year.

54. Mr. Cabom asked the Minister for the Arts if, pursuant to his reply of 16 February, Official Report, column 651, he will publish a list of those from whom evidence was taken in compiling the study into the impact of the arts on the economy and employment, to whose funding he is contributing.

59. Ms. Clare Short asked the Minister for the Arts if, pursuant to his reply of 16 February, Official Report, column 651, he will publish a list of those from whom evidence was taken in compiling the study into the impact of the arts on the economy and employment, to whose funding he is contributing.

Mr. Luce: This is a research study being conducted by the Policy Studies Institute, in the course of which many people are being consulted, and information gathered from a wide variety of sources. Extensive surveys are being carried out, but formal evidence is not being taken.

73. Mr. Raynsford asked the Minister for the Arts if, pursuant to his reply of 16 February, Official Report, column 651, he will indicate the terms of reference of the two studies on the impact of the arts on the economy.

Mr. Luce: As regards the study on the economic importance of the arts, I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Thurrock (Dr. McDonald) today.

A second study, not funded by me, is addressing itself to determining the extent to which unemployed adults are taking up activities of an artistic creative nature, and the impact of those activities on the community.

Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964

40. Mr. Greenway asked the Minister for the Arts what recent representations he has received regarding the exercise of his powers under the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964 in relation to the activities of certain local authorities in banning some publications from public libraries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have received no representations since the lifting of the ban on News International publications by all but one of the authorities which previously imposed one.

Museums (Admission Charges)

41. Mr. Michie asked the Minister for the Arts what is his most recent information about the effect on attendance of the introduction of admission charges to museums.

Mr. Luce: The most recent attendance figures are those given to the hon. Member for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds) in my written answer of 19 January. As I said in that answer, many factors can affect attendances at the national museums and galleries. The experience of independent museums, where charges for entrance are customary, is that attendance depends much more on the attractiveness of the service provided than on whether it is free.

Mr. Flannery asked the Minister for the Arts what is his most recent information about the effect on attendance of the introduction of admission charges to museums.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Heeley (Mr. Michie) earlier today.

Regional Arts Associations (Administrative Costs)

43. Mr. Alexander asked the Minister for the Arts when he expects to receive the report of the Arts Council's review of the regional arts associations' administrative costs.

Mr. Luce: During the summer.

Overseas Visitors (Expenditure)

44. Mr. Haynes asked the Minister for the Arts what is his latest estimate of the amount that overseas visitors spend in the United Kingdom on attending theatres and concerts.

Mr. Luce: I have no estimated breakdown of expenditure in this amount of detail, but the subject will be covered in the survey of the economic importance of the arts, to be published later this year.

Business Sponsorship

46. Mr. Skinner asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has about the level of business sponsorship of the arts as a proportion of total central Government expenditure on the arts.

Mr. Luce: The Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts estimates that support for the arts from business sponsorship in 1986-87 will total some £25 million. It is equivalent to 8 per cent. of the central Government expenditure on my arts programme in that year.

Tourism

48. Mr. Deakins asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will undertake a survey to try to identify the importance of the arts, in overseas visitors' decisions to come to the United Kingdom.

65. Mr. Madden asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will undertake a study of the level of expenditure by tourists stimulated by the Arts Council's expenditure of its grant.

67. Mr. Weetch asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will undertake a study of the level of expenditure by tourists stimulated by the Arts Council's expenditure of its grant.

Mr. Luce: This topic will be covered in the survey of the economic importance of the arts, to be published later this year.

63. Mr. Patchett asked the Minister for the Arts what is his estimate of the revenue derived from arts-based tourism.

Mr. Luce: I have no estimate of the revenue for the arts derived from tourism, but this will be part of the study of the economic impact of the arts, the results of which will be available later this year.

Live Music

49. Sir David Price asked the Minister for the Arts what steps he is taking to promote live music.

Mr. Luce: The promotion of music is a matter for the Arts Council which is allocating £23 million to music, including opera, in 1987-88. Additionally, music is strongly supported from the Council's touring budget and by the regional arts associations.

Value Added Tax

50. Mr. Freud asked the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on the effects on the performing arts of the current levels of value added tax.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to his question of 26 January 1987 at col. 18 on VAT and the performing arts. I have nothing to add.

Film

51. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received about the current level of central Government spending on film in general and on the British Film Institute in particular.

Mr. Luce: I discuss the funding of the British Film Institute with the chairman and director from time to time; I have received no other representations in recent months.

Provincial Museums and Galleries (Borrowings)

52. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received from provincial museums and galleries about borrowing more items from the national collections.

Mr. Luce: I have had some representations. I am concerned to promote the widest practicable lending by the national museums and galleries to provincial institutions.

The Government indemnity scheme is of immense help in setting up such loans. Improved guidelines for the operation of the scheme will come into effect on 1 April next.

I was pleased to announce on 8 December last that the Museums and Galleries Commission intends to establish a touring exhibition unit to facilitate and co-ordinate such loans.

Expenditure (International Comparisons)

53. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has about the level of arts expenditure in other European Economic Community countries.

80. Ms. Beckett asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has about the level of arts expenditure in other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Luce: Comprehensive information is not available.

Consumer Expenditure

55. Mr. Cunliffe asked the Minister for the Arts what is his estimate of total consumer expenditure on the arts.

Mr. Luce: In 1984, the last year for which figures are available, consumer expenditure on the arts, on the broadest definition, was estimated on the basis of figures collected by the Central Statistical Office to be in the region of £10·5 billion.

Expenditure

56. Mr. Eastham asked the Minister for the Arts what is his estimate of total central Government expenditure on the arts.

Mr. Luce: The provision for total central Government expenditure on the arts in my expenditure programme for 1986-87, is £324 million. There is expenditure under the programmes of other Departments which indirectly benefits the arts.

57. Mr. Barron asked the Minister for the Arts what is his estimate of total local government expenditure on the arts.

71. Mr. Dixon asked the Minister for the Arts what is his estimate of total local government expenditure on the arts.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Members to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Tyne Bridge (Mr. Clelland) on Wednesday 4 March, column 611.

64. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister for the Arts what is his estimate of total current expenditure on the arts.

Mr. Luce: The 1986-87 provision for total expenditure by central and local government on the arts programme is £804 million. An analysis of this provision was included in the White Paper on Public Expenditure published on 14 January (Cm 56). The figure for local authorities includes libraries and museums, but not all their other expenditure on the arts.

Economics and Statistics Unit

60. Mr. Fisher asked the Minister for the Arts whether he has plans to establish an economics and statistics unit in the Office of Arts and Libraries.

Mr. Luce: I have no immediate plans to do so. The Policy Studies Institute's research studies on the arts provide very useful statistical analyses. I also make use of work done by the Arts Council, the British Library and CIPFA.

Payroll Giving

62. Mr. Pawsey asked the Minister for the Arts what steps he is taking to publicise the potential to the arts of the new payroll giving schemes.

Mr. Luce: My office has already circulated a leaflet "New Tax Benefits for the Arts", published in October 1986, which refers to the provisions of the payroll scheme and the other incentives introduced by the Finance Act 1986. A further leaflet dealing with the arrangements for payroll giving as they affect arts bodies will be available around the time when the scheme comes into operation from 6 April.

Museums and Galleries (Extensions)

66. Mr. Jessel asked the Minister for the Arts if he will list (a) recent and (b) planned extensions to national museums and galleries.

Mr. Luce: The most significant developments are as follows:

Imperial War Museum
Superhangar at Duxford. Opened in 1986.

Victoria and Albert Museum
Theatre Museum in Covent Garden. To be opened in April 1987.

National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside
Maritime Museum. A further phase to be opened in 1987.

Tate Gallery
Clore Gallery extension. To be opened in April 1987.
Tate in the North. Due to be opened in 1988.

Imperial War Museum
Redevelopment and extension of existing building. A major project due for completion in 1988-89.

National Gallery
Sainsbury Wing. Designs to be announced shortly.

In addition, a number of museums and galleries have redesigned and refurbished areas within their existing buildings to provide new gallery space.

Arts Council (Support Costs)

68. Mr. Blair asked the Minister for the Arts what he estimates to be the net cost of Arts Council support, taking into account returns to the Treasury accruing from expenditure of the Arts Council grant.

Mr. Luce: It is difficult to make a detailed estimate, but research commissioned by the Arts Council, and still under discussion, suggests that the return to the Exchequer is significant.

New British Library Building

69. Mr. Beith asked the Minister for the Arts by how much he now expects the cost of the new British library building in St. Pancras to exceed the original estimate; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dudley, West (Dr. Blackburn) on Thursday 29 January 1987, c. 359).

West Midlands

72. Mrs. Golding asked the Minister for the Arts what is his estimate of local authority spending on the arts in the west midlands.

Mr. Luce: Statistics collected by the Department of the Environment show local authority current expenditure of £44 million and capital expenditure of £5 million in 1985-86 on museums, galleries and libraries in the west midlands region.

It is impossible to identify precise figures for performing arts but estimates for leisure and recreation are published annually by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy and are available in the Library.

Crafts Council

Mr. Ashby asked the Minister for the Arts if he will encourage the Crafts Council to use European funds available for crafts in rural areas.

Mr. Luce: Yes, where appropriate; I understand that one or two rural craft projects have already benefited from European funds.

Arts Council (Grants)

75. Mr. Chapman asked the Minister for the Arts what priority he attaches to employment-creation prospects in the allocation of grants to the Arts Council.

Mr. Luce: The main criterion of the Arts Council is artistic merit. Employment and other factors are also taken into account.

Arts Marketing Scheme

77. Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Minister for the Arts what advice he gives to arts bodies whose potential marketing plans fall below the qualifying limit for his arts marketing scheme.

Mr. Luce: There is provision under the scheme for grouped applications where the arts bodies have a common objective and their individual projects are below the qualifying limit. This is an experimental scheme and if it is successful I shall be prepared to consider extending it.

Young Jazz Musicians

78. Mr. Crowther asked the Minister for the Arts what importance he attaches to the support by the Arts Council and regional arts associations of the development of young jazz musicians.

Mr. Luce: It is for the Arts Council, and the regional arts associations, to determine the distribution of their grants without guidance from me; they already support jazz orchestras, the touring of jazz, and bursaries for jazz composers.

Photography

79. Mr. Boyes asked the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on the level of financial support for photography.

Mr. Luce: None. Support for photography is given by the Arts Council and regional arts associations by means of revenue grants to client bodies, training bursaries to photographers, and funding for public exhibitions. In addition, the National Museum of Photography, Film and Television in Bradford receives an annual grant through the Science museum, and the Victoria and Albert museum's funding includes an element for its photographic collection.

Choral Music

81. Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Minister for the Arts what plans he has for the encouragement of choral music.

Mr. Luce: Choral music generally falls outside the Arts Council's normal funding criteria; but choirs which are members of the National Federation of Music Societies can apply to regional arts associations for support.

Calder Valley Artists

Mr. Galley asked the Minister for the Arts if his Department has considered an application relating to Calder Valley Artists to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall for one week from 16 March.

Mr. Luce: I understand that arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall between 16 and 20 March 1987.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the numbers of entrants to his Department from the ethnic minorities in the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; if he will also list the monitoring procedures used to ascertain the percentage of the workforce represented by ethnic minorities and their patterns of promotion; and what are his methods of recruitment of minorities into the Department.

Mr. Jopling: The ethnic origins of new entrants have been surveyed since October 1985. The latest available information for the period up to September 1986 is as follows:—

	Number
Total new entrants to Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and Intervention Board for Agriculture Produce in period 1 October 1985 to 30 September 1986	600
Ethnic origins
White	263
Black/Asian	18
Not stated[1]	319

[1] Includes non-respondents and responses received but not processed at 30 September 1986.

A phased programme of departmental surveys of the ethnic origin of civil servants by means of voluntary self-classification is being conducted. By the end of 1986 all staff in the county of Avon, the north west, the east and west midlands, London, the south east and East Anglia had been surveyed. It is intended that all remaining staff will be surveyed in 1987. Consideration is being given to ways of using the data on the ethnic origin of staff-in-post to monitor promotion.

All departmental recruitment is conducted on the basis of fair and open competition and selection is on merit. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Privy Council Office on 20 February 1987 at column 880-81 reporting the arrangements being made to encourage people from the ethnic minorities to apply to the Civil Service.

ADAS

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on the measures to reduce the net cost of the agricultural development advisory service and to improve its efficiency announced in his answer to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) on 23 July 1985, Official Report, column 450.

Mr. Jopling: The Government have carried out measures to reduce the cost and increase the efficiency of ADAS, and will shortly introduce the measures — foreshadowed during the passage of the Agriculture Act 1986—under which a contribution towards meeting the costs of ADAS services will be met by agriculture and its associated industries.

In the light of the report by Professor Bell published in November 1984 the Government concluded that the size of ADAS could be reduced without impairing its efficiency, and that economies would be essential if the industry were to be asked to bear part of the costs of running the service. During the financial years 1985-86 and 1986-87 the number of posts in ADAS was reduced by 450, a cut of over 9 per cent. Corresponding reductions were made in non-ADAS supporting staff.

As a further means towards increased efficiency, the Government have carried out a fundamental reorganisation of ADAS. Management of the service is now under a board of management which includes members from commerce and farming. The former agriculture, land and water, and science services have been reorganised to create two new services, the farm and countryside service and the research and development service. The organisation of the state veterinary service has not been altered. The changes bring together in one organisation the greater part of the ADAS staff concerned with direct advice to farmers, introduce strong unified management across the different professional disciplines (which however remain of fundamental importance), concentrate the bulk of the R and D work in a single organisation, and give greater weight to the environmental duties of ADAS.

From 30 March there will generally be a fee for advice and other services provided by ADAS. The traditional advisory visit will cost £28 plus VAT for a visit lasting up to an hour, with appropriate adjustments for longer visits or for the advice of certain specialists; other types of service will be offered on contract at negotiated prices or through a number of schemes designed to deal with specific livestock, land management, and business management needs; and there will be two types of subscription schemes at £50 plus VAT and £150 plus VAT, the latter including the provision of four hours of advice on the farm. In order to help small farmers, groups of up to four farmers may arrange for advisory visits to the farm of one member, and to share the fee between the members of the group. R and D services will be available on contract to agriculture, horticulture and their associated industries. Advice to farmers on conservation, farm business diversification, and animal welfare will continue to be free.

The Government believe that the general level of the fees is fair and reasonable having regard to the cost of providing advisory and development services, to their great value and importance to individual businesses and the well-being of the industry as a whole, and to the charges made by private commercial advisers.

Finally, orders have been or will shortly be laid imposing charges for certain statutory services carried out by the Government, often through ADAS staff, for the benefit of agriculture and its associated industries. The orders cover the provision of milk and dairies hygiene measures, AI, swill feeding, the provision of advice on certain planning cases, and the safety clearance of pesticides, plant health import and export licences and increased charges for seed certification, plant breeders' rights and national listing.

Livestock (Attacks)

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will state the number of attacks on livestock by animals, for each of the years 1979 to 1985, for (1) Scotland, (2) England, (3) Northern Ireland and (4) Wales; and if he will publish a table indicating what variety of species of animal executed the attacks in each case, publishing figures for each year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Records of the number of attacks by dogs on livestock in England, Wales and Scotland were discontinued in 1978, and have never been collected in Northern Ireland.

Salmon Advisory Committee

Mr. John Townend asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to receive the report from the Salmon Advisory Committee on the influence of predators, including seals, on salmon stocks.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

Strathclyde (Industrial Assistance)

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for selective financial assistance from companies seeking to invest in Strathclyde region his Department has refused on the grounds of over-capacity in the last six months; and how many potential jobs were involved.

Mr. Lang: One such application has been rejected in the last six months but the project in question has been approved for regional development grant (RDG) and a first payment of RDG has been made.

Firms (Redundancies and Closures)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many firms have (a) reported redundancies to his Department and (b) reported closures since June 1979; and in each case, how many jobs have been involved.

Mr. Lang: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Prison System

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden dated 12 January concerning the Scottish prison system.

Mr Rifkind: I shall send the hon. Member a comprehensive reply this week which will also cover the recent industrial actions at Barlinnie prison.

Dr. John Mitchell

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received the report of the Health Service Commissioner for Scotland on the complaint made by Dr. John Mitchell of Paisley.

Mr. John MacKay: Yes.

List D Schools (Corporal Punishment)

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take to prohibit corporal punishment in list D schools.

Mr. Rifkind: From 31 March 1986, when funding was transferred to the local authorities, the schools ceased to be approved by me and they became independent social work establishments subject to registration by the appropriate local authority. By agreement of their managers no former list D school has used corporal punishment since 1984.

With effect from 15 August 1987 corporal punishment will be abolished for children whose education is provided in whole or in part from public funds.

Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy (Unemployment)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail, ward by ward, the unemployment figures for Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy districts in (a) the electoral ward and (b) postal code areas for June 1983 and January 1987.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested.

The following tables show the number of unemployed claimants in each electoral ward in the Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy local authority districts for June 1983 and January 1987.

BBC, Scotland (Police Raid)

Mr. Tam Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 26 February, Official Report, column 392, what action was taken by the grade 7 officer in the police division of the Scottish Home and Health Department after he received a phone call from Strathclyde police about the intended police raid on the BBC.

Mr. Rifkind: The officer informed a member of my Private Office who, when it appeared that the police operation was unlikely to coincide with my visit to the BBC building, concluded — rightly in my view — that there was no need to bring the matter to my attention.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why he will not call for a report from Strathclyde police into the progress of the inquiries following the search of the British Broadcasting Corporation's premises in Glasgow; and if he will make a statement

Mr. Rifkind: There is no reason for Strathclyde police to report to me about this matter.

Job Clubs

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has that supports the creation of new job clubs in the Dundee travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lang: The principal factor governing the decision to open a new job club in any particular area is the incidence of long-term unemployment. Other considerations are the level of demand for extension of the service, the availability of suitable premises either within a jobcentre or elsewhere, and the degree of interest shown by external agents in setting up job clubs. These factors, together with the great success of the first three job clubs in Dundee, provided ample justification for the two further job clubs for Dundee opened on 2 March; and I do not rule out the possibility of further job clubs for the Dundee area if there is a sufficient demand.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the activity rate of the individual job clubs within the Dundee travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lang: The activity rates of each of the three job clubs operating within the Dundee travel-to-work area on 6 February 1987 (the latest date for which information is available) are shown in the table below.

DEFENCE

Heart Disease

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the actions taken by his Department since the publication of the COMA report designed to assist in the prevention of coronary heart disease.

Mr. Freeman: The Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy (COMA) has made certain recommendations regarding the relationship between diet and coronary heart disease. These recommendations are concerned primarily with dietary fat intake. The question of dietary content within HM Forces is under constant review within my Department, and the COMA report provides a valuable reference document.

In 1981, the Services nutrition advisory panel (SNAP) re-affirmed an earlier decision that fat should not exceed 33 per cent. of the daily energy requirement, and in this respect the Ministry of Defence had already adopted the principle recommendation of COMA. More recently, my Department has decided to discontinue the provision of loose salt packs in operational ration packs and within the next year, a new type of margarine, high in polyunsaturates and low in cholesterol, will be supplied to HM Forces.

Unit catering and medical officers regularly give briefings on healthy eating, and every encouragement is given to the service man to improve his diet.

Procurement Expenditure

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if she will state the estimated percentage share of procurement expenditure on equipment purchased from England, Wales and Northern Ireland in the 1986-87 financial year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I shall answer shortly.

RAF Squadron Leader (Press Statement)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Defence why disciplinary action was not taken against the squadron leader who recently made repeated unauthorised statements to the press.

Mr. Freeman: As I informed the hon. Member on 2 March, Official Report, Col 528, action has been taken to remind him and all other officers of their obligation in regard to press statements. No disciplinary action was considered necessary in the specific case to which the hon. Member refers.

Pte Jeffrey Singh

Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he anticipates the Army inquiry into the death of 17-year-old Pte Jeffrey Singh at Sir John Moore barracks, Shorncliffe, Kent in January, will be complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Army board of inquiry into the death of junior soldier Singh reported its findings on 10 February 1987, but it would be inappropriate for me to comment in advance of the coroner's inquest.

AWACS

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 27 February, Official Report, column 460, what is his policy towards visits by United States officials to inspect the books of firms involved in the airborne warning and control system contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer on United States (Distribution Controls) given to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft) on 2 March 1987, col. 528. The contract for the purchase of AWACS makes no provision for distribution licences to be used.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Yeovil on 27 February, Official Report, columns 459-60, whether the policy enunciated with regard to protection from United States extra-territorial closures for firms engaged in the airborne warning and control system contract applies equally to all other United Kingdom firms engaged in defence contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As stated in my answer of 27 February 1987, col. 459-60, Her Majesty's Government's policy has long been to reject any claims that United States laws and regulations can be applied to encroach upon United Kingdom jurisdiction.

The terms of the contract to purchase AWACS can apply only to the parties to that contract and to sub-contracts derived from it.

Other defence contracts to which United Kingdom companies are parties will be negotiated in the light of our general policy.

Mr. Stuart Todd

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what precise grounds Mr. Stuart Todd, a fitter at the Royal Naval aircraft repair yard at Fleetlands, was dismissed in August 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The employment of Mr. Stuart Todd at Royal Naval aircraft yard, Fleetlands, was terminated on 9 August 1986 for failing to complete his probation, due to unsatisfactory work performance.

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, in the light of the finding by a Civil Service appeal board that Mr. Stuart Todd, a fitter at the Royal Naval aircraft repair yard at Fleetlands, was unfairly dismissed, he will now re-employ Mr. Todd; if he will compensate Mr. Todd for loss of earnings since his dismissal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Mr. Stuart Todd appealed to the Civil Service appeal board against the Ministry of Defence decision to terminate his employment for failing to complete his probation due to unsatisfactory work performance. My department is considering the recommendation of the Civil Service appeal board that Mr. Todd be reinstated from a current date for a further probationary period of six months. A decision will be made shortly regarding all aspects of the case.

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reach a decision on the finding of a Civil Service appeal board regarding the unfair dismissal of Mr. Stuart Todd, a fitter at the Royal Navy aircraft repair yard at Fleetlands; if, pending the outcome of his consideration of the board's finding, he will reinstate Mr. Todd on full pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department will reach a decision shortly on whether to reinstate Mr. Stuart Todd for a further probationary period of employment, following the recommendation of the Civil Service appeal board. If Mr. Todd is reinstated he will receive full pay from the date of his re-employment.

Army Horses

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in the last five years army horses have been used in connection with hunting activities; how many horses were involved on each such occasion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Hunting or riding across country is considered to be good training for horse and soldier, but no central record is kept of all the occasions on which this takes place or the number of horses involved.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Microcomputers

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to seek to increase the effectiveness of microcomputers in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is seeking to build on the achievements of the microelectronics education programme and to learn from its operation. The microelectronics education support unit, launched last year, is designed to disseminate good practice as widely as possible, through the development of curriculum materials, through support for teacher training, and through direct advice to LEAs and schools. The Council for Educational Technology, reorganised as from last year, will also be well placed to promote effective use of new technologies in schools.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is satisfied that teachers involved in the teaching of microcomputers are sufficiently well trained and motivated in their use.

Mrs. Rumbold: Training is one of the keys to effective use of information technology in classrooms, and although well over half the teaching force has attended at least an introductory course since the start of the decade, there remains scope for a great deal more training—introductory, in-depth and updating. The training grants scheme for 1987-88 allows some £4 million as a national priority to enable teachers to go on courses related to IT in schools, and the microelectronics education support unit will give back-up to the trainers themselves.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to increase the number of microcomputers in primary and secondary schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Information Technology announced on 9 March a scheme to assist the purchase of microcomputers and peripheral equipment for schools. The Government are currently considering whether they should make further funds available for this purpose.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide a breakdown of the capital expenditure allocations to each local education authority in England and Wales, showing the allocations in respect of further education establishments.

Mr. Walden: The component for further and higher education within the capital allocations made by my right hon. Friend to each local education authority for 1987-88 is shown in the following table. Allocations to local education authorities in Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much local education authority supplementary capital expenditure on further and higher education has taken place in the last five years for which figures are available, broken down into the local education authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Walden: The information requested in respect of local education authorities in England is not available centrally. Local education authorities in Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Substandard School Accommodation

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library copies of (a) his Department's letter of 15 December 1983 mentioned in a footnote to the table given in his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil on 23 February, Official Report, columns 47-48 and (b) his Department's letter of 18 December 1985 mentioned in a footnote to the table given in his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil on 2 February, Official Report, column 472, concerning substandard school accommodation.

Mr. Dunn: Yes.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to increase the capital expenditure allocations for further education and higher education; and if his Department has any information relating to past and projected future local education authority, supplementary spending out of their own capital receipts.

Mr. Walden: All the resources available for capital allocations to local education authorities for 1987-88 in England for further and higher education have been distributed. The level of allocations for 1988-89 will be decided later this year. Information about local authorities' supplementary spending is available from their annual returns of outturn capital expenditure. The provisional figure for further and higher education in 1985-86 is £133 million, £53 million more than the sum allocated for that year. For local authority capital expenditure on education as a whole, the gross outturn for 1986-87 is estimated to be £529 million, £232 million more than the sum allocated for that year. For all local authorities the available spending power from capital receipts in 1987-88 is estimated to be £2·8 billion, a higher figure than in 1986-87.

Special Needs Children

Mr. Lilley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about the support and resources being made available for children with special needs who are being educated in mainstream schools under the Education Act 1981.

Mr. Dunn: Research findings and HMI investigations indicate that LEAs are increasing the financial provision for support and other resources for children with special needs in mainstream schools. It is not possible to quantify that increase, since such expenditure is not separately identified in returns.

GCSE (Expenditure)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information is available to his Department on budgeted expenditure by local education authorities for 1986-87 and 1987-88 relating to the introduction of the general certificate of secondary education; which elements of such budgeted expenditure receive specific grant support from his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what arrangements will be in force for 1987-88 to ensure or confirm that departmental spending targeted to support the introduction of the general certificate of secondary education through (a) rate support grant, (b) education support grant, (c) education training grant and (d) other specific grants is used for that purpose; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what arrangements exist to ensure or confirm that departmental spending targeted to support the introduction of the general certificate of secondary education through (a) rate support grant, (b) education support grant, (c) in-service education training grant and (d) other specific grants, in each year since 1984 has been used for that purpose; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what information is available to his Department on budgeted expenditure and out-turn expenditure by local education authorities in each year since 1984 relating to the introduction of the general certificate of secondary education; what separate programmes of expenditure by local education authorities are relevant to the introduction of the general certificate of secondary education; which of these programmes benefit from specific grant support from his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is for local authorities to determine the resources made available for GCSE provision, and this information is not collected centrally. The Government's plans for 1987-88 provide for an increase of 18·8 per cent. in total local authority expenditure compared with the current year; of this some £100 million is intended for GCSE non-teaching costs.

The Government have directed the following substantial resources specifically to help meet GCSE-related costs: £20 million expenditure on GCSE books and equipment is being supported through education support grant and the Manpower Services Commission this year, and a further £10 million will be supported through ESG in 1987-88. For GCSE in-service training, up to £9·5 million has been supported in 1985-87 and £15 million has been set aside for 1987-88.

Expenditure under these schemes is being monitored by the authorities themselves, the Department and HMI.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a breakdown of the education component of the block grant for each local authority in 1987-88 into rate support grant, education support grant, education training grant and any other elements, showing the amount of each element targeted to support the introduction of the general certificate of secondary education; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a breakdown of the education component of the block grant for each local authority in 1986-87 into rate support grant, education support grant, in-service education training grant and any other elements, showing the amount of each element targeted to support the introduction of the general certificate of secondary education; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will publish a breakdown of the education component of the block grant for each local authority in 1985-86 into rate support grant, education support grant, in-service education training grant and any other elements, showing the amount of each element targeted to support the introduction of the general certificate of secondary education; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will publish a breakdown of the education component of the block grant for each local authority in 1984-85 into rate support grant, in-service education training grant and any other elements, showing the amount of each element targeted to support the introduction of the general certificate of secondary education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Violence in Schools

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will consider setting up a committee to examine the evidence of violence in schools, directed both at teachers and pupils, and to make recommendations as to what measures can be taken to prevent such violence; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The evidence of visits by Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools suggests that most schools are well ordered and do not regard disruptive behaviour as a serious problem. Nevertheless any violent behaviour in schools is deplorable. It must be primarily a matter for individual schools to decide on the appropriate measures to prevent it in their own particular circumstances. I hope, however, that they will be assisted by the report of a survey of good practice as regards discipline and behaviour which is being prepared by Her Majesty's inspectorate and is to be published shortly.

School Meals

Mr. Haslehurst asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the results of the October 1986 census of school meals; and what were the comparable results of the previous census.

Mr. Dunn: The information is as follows:

Maintained schools (including nursery and special): England

	October 1986		October 1984
	Number	Per cent. of (a)	Number	Per cent. of (a)
Pupils in attendance	6,351,870	(a)	6,613,026	(a)
Pupils taking school meals:
on payment	1,956,310	30·8	2,243,548	33·9
free	1,143,817	18·0	1,147,886	17·4
Total	3,100,127	48·8	3,391,434	51·3
Pupils bringing own food	1,937,151	30·5	1,940,682	29·3
Pupils having other arrangements	1,314,592	20·7	1,280,910	19·4

An analysis of the returns shows the following proportions for primary and secondary pupils, as percentages of pupils in attendance.

	Primary		Secondary
	1986	1984	1986	1984
Pupils taking school meals	51·8	53·4	44·5	48·2
Pupils bringing own food	37·3	35·7	23·3	23·2
Pupils having other arrangements	11·0	10·9	32·1	28·6

No Census was carried out in October 1985 due to the effect of the teachers' action on the take-up of school meals.

Detailed tabulations on the returns from local education authorities in England, from which these national totals were derived, are being placed in the Library.

Cash Limits

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of any revised cash limits for his Department's votes in 1986-87.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: On 5 February I announced a change to the cash limit for Class XII, Vote 3 at columns 736-37. I regret that there was an error in the current cash limit given in that answer. The figures should have been:

£'000

Class	Vote	Description of expenditure	Current cash limit	Revision	Revised cash limit
XII	3	Universities etc.	1,564,289	−1,507	1,562,782

The cash limit for Class XII, Vote 3 is now, however, subject to two further changes. It has been reduced by £2,015,000 to reflect the decision not to seek supplementary provision to cover the carry forward previously announced on 26 July at columns 143-46 under the end year flexibility scheme. At the same time an increase of £781,000 has been agreed to reflect the extra cost to the universities of implementing for clinical academic staff the pay award recommended by the Doctors and Dentists Review Body compared with the cost in 1987-87 of the pay settlement for non-clinical academic staff.

The net effect of these two changes is a reduction as follows:

Class	Vote	Description of expenditure	Current cash limit	Revision	Revised cash limit
XII	3	Universities etc.	1,562,782	−1,234	1,561,548

Kingman Inquiry

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the Kingman committee of inquiry into English language teaching is inviting evidence; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Yes. The Kingman committee would welcome written evidence, particularly on what skills society and individuals need in oral and written communication, the nature of English language teaching in the different phases of schooling, and the implications for initial and in-service teacher training. My right hon. Friend hopes that anyone wishing to give evidence on these or other matters within the committee's terms of reference will write to the committee's secretary at Elizabeth House, York Road, London SE1 7PH, not later than 1 June 1987.

ENVIRONMENT

Derelict Land Grant

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the projects funded by derelict land grant in (a) the west midlands and (b) Birmingham in the last three years, in the same form as the answer relating to Wales given to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 16 February, Official Report, column 452.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales related to 109 schemes and involved considerable effort to extract. I regret that I can only repeat that the hon. Gentleman's request for details of the 609 schemes for which derelict land grant was applied for in the west midlands, over the last three years, would involve disproportionate expenditure and would divert staff from the priority task of processing current applications. However, the proposed introduction of computerised records should in due course enable us to answer such requests more readily.

Housing Defects Act

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many owner-occupiers of designated prefabricated reinforced concrete (PRC) houses are currently unable to obtain assistance through the Housing Defects Act 1984.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies I gave on 2 and 5 February to the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) at columns 493 and 774 concerning the position of owners of privately developed PRC houses not eligible for assistance under the housing defects legislation.

Right to Buy

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the sale of council housing to sitting tenants in the Crawley borough and Mid Sussex district; and what was the percentage of relevant stock that existed at 30 September 1979 which has been sold to date.

Mr. Tracey: From April 1980 to September 1986, Crawley has reported selling 4,538 dwellings to sitting tenants, equivalent to 32·1 per cent. of the council stock in April 1980: Mid Sussex has reported 1,015 sales up to June 1986, equal to 18 per cent. of its April 1980 stock. Earlier sales to sitting tenants were not separately reported.

Council House Rents

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing such information as he has as to the average council rent level in (a) Hammersmith and Fulham and (b) the Greater London area; and if he will express each of these figures as a percentage of (i) average earnings in Greater London and (ii) the state retirement pension for a single pensioner and a pensioner couple, in each of the years from 1970 to 1986.

Mr. Tracey: The figures based on rent information reported by Hammersmith and Fulham and by all housing authorities in Greater London are as follows:

Voluntary Organisations (Grants)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many voluntary organisations receive grants from his Department for dealing with child homelessness and child prostitution; and if he will list the organisations by name as well as the amount of funding they receive.

Mr. Tracey: The Department provides, under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985, a substantial programme of grants for voluntary bodies concerned with homelessness. This year, grants to 17 bodies will amount to more than £500,000. Some of these bodies make special provision for advice and assistance to young people. For example, CHAR (grant £31,350) have a worker concerned with young homelessness, and "First Key" (grant £15,000) are concerned with providing housing advice and assistance to young people leaving care. In addition, we have funded (£38,528) under this programme the production by the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless Trust of material aimed at preventing homelessness among school leavers and other young people. The provision of accommodation for the homeless is also funded through the urban programme and through grants to housing associations.

Local Authority Dwellings (Sale)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many dwellings have been sold by local authorities and new towns in England from April 1979; how many were flats; and what percentage of the total stock of local authority dwellings these sales represent.

Mr. Tracey: From April 1979 to September 1986, English local authorities and new towns sold an estimated 793,000 dwellings, including 36,000 flats. The total sold represents about 15 per cent. of the local authority and new town housing which was available for sale during that period.

Council House Sales

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his decision on the proposed sale by Leeds metropolitan district council of maisonettes on Cartmel drive, Leeds, to the Regent Housing Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The Department issued a formal letter of consent to the Director of Housing of Leeds City Council on 23 February 1987 following our unreserved endorsement of the Council's proposal to dispose of these dwellings, and others at Levens Garth and Boggart Hill, to the Yorkshire Metropolitan Housing Association for refurbishment by their development organisation, the Regent Housing Society Ltd. These disposals are entirely consistent with the Government's policy of bringing difficult to let council dwellings back into use with private sector capital.

KMS Ltd.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department at any time over the past five years has had contracts with KMS Ltd.

Mr. Ridley: As far as I am aware my Department has not placed any contracts with KMS Ltd.

Urban Programme

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of the uses made of urban programme funds sponsored through health authorities in the north-west region over the last three years.

Mr. John Patten: The projects approved by this Department for Urban Programme funding in the financial years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 are as follows:

Home Insulation

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total public expenditure on improving home insulation for each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his answer, 9 March 1987]: The available information is as follows:

Public expenditure on housing insulation: Great Britain

£ million

Thamesmead

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will issue direction requiring the London residuary body to transfer Thamesmead to Thames Trust;

(2) when he expects the transfer of Thamesmead from the London residuary body to Thamesmead Trust.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1987, c. 653]: The Department issued on 6 March a letter stating that the Secretary of State intends to direct the London residuary body to dispose of Thamesmead to Thamesmead town, the disposal to take place on 1 April if at all possible.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the numbers of entrants to his Department from the ethnic minorities in the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; if he will also list the monitoring procedures used to ascertain the percentage of the work force represented by ethnic minorities and their patterns of promotion; and what are his methods of recruitment of minorities into his Department.

Mr. Butcher: The ethnic origins of new entrants have been surveyed since October 1985. In the period from 1 October 1985 to 28 February 1987, there were 1,739 new entrants to the Department of Trade and Industry. Their ethnic origins were:

	Number
A White	743
B Non-White	119
C Data not yet available	850
D Non-respondents	27

A phased programme of surveys of the ethnic origin on non-industrial civil servants by means of voluntary self-classification is being conducted by the Department and is expected to be completed during 1987.

All departmental recruitment is conducted on the basis of fair and open competition and selection is on merit. Consideration is being given to ways of using the data on the ethnic origin of staff to monitor promotion.

Satellite Information Systems Ltd.

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the establishment of Satellite Information Systems Ltd.; and whether he has referred such representations to the Office of Fair Trading or the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend has received representations from the National Greyhound Racing Club and from my hon. Friend. These have been referred to the Office of Fair Trading for consideration.

Bookmakers

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer to the Office of Fair Trading plans by the larger bookmakers to establish their own rule-making body to control afternoon greyhound racing at tracks which they own and operate.

Mr. Howard: Representations alleging that certain bookmakers intend to establish their own control organisation for afternoon greyhound racing have been referred by my right hon. Friend to the Office of Fair Trading.

Nightwear (Safety) Regulations

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to consult the retail trade about implementation of the Nightwear (Safety) Regulations 1985; and how the trade was notified about the regulations.

Mr. Howard: The Nightwear (Safety) Regulations 1985 were the subject of two separate consultations in May and November 1984. Bodies representing the retail sector which were invited to comment on the proposals included the National Union of Small Shopkeepers, the Retail Alliance, the Retail Consortium and the Retail Distributors Association. In response to representtions from the trade, the period allowed before the regulations came into force was extended to 15 months.

A copy of the revised draft regulations, which were laid before the House in November 1985, was sent to all consultees. The regulations were made on 20 December 1985 and were publicised in British Business in January 1986. The Department's "Nightwear and Fire" guide to the regulations, which was published in September 1986, also received publicity in British Business and was featured in a number of trade magazines. Copies of the guide were sent direct to trade associations and individual suppliers and retailers who had contributed comments during the preparation of the regulations, or who had made their interest known to the Department at some later stage.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the retail trade about the treatment of stock in hand following implementation of the Nightwear (Safety) Regulations 1985.

Mr. Howard: I met the trade associations, including the Retail Consortium, on 5 January this year to discuss their problems over implementing the 1985 regulations with respect to babies' garments by the due date of 1 March 1987. As a result I decided to introduce an amendment to the regulations which has since been approved by a resolution of each House.

The Nightwear (Safety) Regulations 1987, which were made on 27 February, postpone, until 1 September 1987, the coming into force of those requirements of the 1985 regulations which relate to the testing, labelling and advertisement of babies' garments, as defined in regulation 3(1) of the 1985 regulations.

KMS Ltd.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department at any time over the past five years has had contracts with KMS Ltd.

Mr. Butcher: No such contracts have been placed by this Department.

EC (Research Council)

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress was made at the meeting of the Council of the European Community, Research, on 24 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Geoffrey Pattie: The Council of Ministers (Research) met on 24 February in Brussels. I represented Her Majesty's Government.

The meeting was devoted exclusively to discussion of the proposed new framework programme for EC research and development. The Council's discussion focused on a possible compromise tabled by the Belgian presidency. This called for the Council to concentrate its negotiations on 5.765 billion ecu (£4·21 billion) of new commitments which, when added to the commitments already agreed, was equivalent to a programme of 6·85 becu (£5 billion) as compared with the Commission's original proposal of 7·735 becu 8£5·65 billion) total expenditure. The United Kingdom took the view that while some elements of the compromise — subject to certain assurances — could be helpful in furthering progress, the total figure remained too high. The Council's meeting was inconclusive with some member states adopting a similar line to that of the United Kingdom and others indicating that the proposed compromise figures involved too great a reduction. The meeting was adjourned until 24 March.

The United Kingdom will continue to work for a programme based on high quality research and sharply focused on promoting industrial competitiveness. In the view of Her Majesty's Government, this can be achieved with a more modest growth over current expenditure than the European Commission has so far proposed.

Yorkshire and Humberside Development Association

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much Government money was allocated to the Yorkshire and Humberside Development Association in 1985-86 and in 1984-85.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 36]: The original grant in 1984-85 was £463,000 to which was added £55,000 for extraordinary additional payments. The grant in 1985-86 was £400,000.

Industry (Public Funds)

Sir Alex Fletcher asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much support from public funds of all kinds has been made available to the aerospace and aero-engines industries since the fiscal year 1978-79.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 2 March 1987, c. 517]: From the fiscal year 1978-79 to 1985-86 inclusive, Department of Trade and Industry funding for the civil aircraft, aero-engines and associated equipment industry totalled approximately £1,400 million. This figure includes support in the form of launch aid, research and development programmes, direct grant support to companies for innovation, and assistance under sections 7 and 8 of the Industry Act; equity investment in Rolls-Royce Ltd. between 1978-79 and 1982-83; and public dividend capital for British Aerospace.

PRIME MINISTER

Pensioners (Representations)

Q26. Mr. Wigley asked the Prime Minister what representations were made to her at her recent meeting with representatives of pensioners' organisations; and how the Government will be responding to these representations.

The Prime Minister: I met a delegation from the National Pensioners' Convention steering committee on Thursday 5 March. They made representations with regard to the level of the basic pension, and the various other benefits and services available to pensioners. These will be considered and I will be writing to the National Pensioners' Convention in due course.

USA-EC Trade

Q27. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the question of relations between the Community and the United States of America with particular reference to the effect on trade of the Commission proposal to place taxes on oils, fats and margarine.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to him on Tuesday 3 March, at column 543, on this subject.

Libya (Bombing)

Q59. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what information she was given, prior to the United States bombing of Libya in April 1986, as to the expected whereabouts of Colonel Gadaffi at the time of the raids.

The Prime Minister: None.

Chequers (Official Dinner)

Q102. Mr. Pollock asked the Prime Minister when she last hosted an official dinner at Chequers.

The Prime Minister: I last gave an official dinner at Chequers on Saturday 23 November 1985.

Bedfordshire

Q170. Mr. Madel asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Bedfordshire.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 March.

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 March.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 March.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 March.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 March.

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

TRANSPORT

Airports (Planning Policy)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ensure that, following the conversion of local authority owned airports into public limited companies, no changes in planning policy occur as a result of changes in ownership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The transfer of local authority owned airports to public airport companies is not intended to bring about any change in planning policy. By virtue of part V of the Airports Act 1986, all major airport companies will have certain rights under the General Development Order but any development which would significantly increase capacity will remain subject to the normal planning process.

London-Exeter Route

Sir Peter Emery asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the road schemes which are in hand or which have reached their planning stage to improve the London-Exeter route west of Amesbury; and if he will set out what schemes have been approved since his announcement in 1985 and what studies have been started since 23 June 1986 for this same stretch of road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I can confirm to my hon. Friend that substantial improvements are being made to the A303/A30 route west of Amesbury.

Two schemes are under construction; the Furze Hedge improvement in Wiltshire and Ilminster bypass in Somerset.

Also in Somerset, a public inquiry has been held into the Sparkford bypass and a decision will be announced shortly. We have announced a public inquiry into the South Petherton-Ilchester improvement to start later this month and, at the eastern edge of the County, we have published draft orders for the Mere-Wincanton improvement which will bypass Bourton in Dorset and Zeals in Wiltshire.

In Devon, we have consulted the public on possible routes for improvements between Marsh to Honiton and Honiton to Exeter, respectively.

We have also undertaken a general review of other possible candidates for inclusion in the trunk road programme and I hope to make an announcement about this before the summer.

Greater Manchester Passenger Transport Authority

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives of the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority to listen to its submission concerning the financing of that authority; when he replied in writing to the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority about that submission; and what account was taken in that letter of the submission.

Mr. David Mitchell: I last met representatives of Greater Manchester passenger transport authority on 16 February. The decision on their application for further borrowing approval, which my Department gave to them formally on the same day, was based on information provided by the authority and took into account copious discussions and correspondence.

Coaches (Motorways)

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider banning double-decker coaches from using the third lane on motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The Department makes no special speed limit distinction between double-decker and other coaches; all buses and coaches are subject to a 70 mph speed limit on motorways.

KMS Ltd.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department at any time over the past five years has had contracts with KMS Ltd.

Mr. Moore: No, as far as can readily be ascertained. Central records are not kept of contracts let by the Department.

Motorways (Lighting)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances it is not possible to provide lighting on fog-prone sections of motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the announcement I made in the House on the new policy for the provision of lighting on motorways on 24 July 1986 at column 451.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to provide lighting on all or some of the 30 fog-prone sites on the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Lighting is already installed at 12 of the fog-prone sites of the M25 motorway. We plan to light junction 6 during this autumn. There are no plans at present to provide lighting at the remaining sites. The situation is being kept under review.

M25 (Traffic Flows)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in tabular form the most recent available figures of day and night traffic flows in each section of the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I shall answer this question shortly.

London (Transport Data)

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Transport what action he has taken to secure the provision of transport data for London when the London residuary body withdraws its services in April.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I welcome the discussions boroughs are having about a scheme to meet collective needs for Londonwide data, including traffic surveys and accident analysis information. Meanwhile, I must secure the Department's other requirements. London's transport data framework needs to be developed as professionally as possible for all who make use of it.

I have taken the steps announced on 12 December to place a contract with consultants to hold and develop the decennial Greater London transportation survey. We are also appointing consultants to maintain the programme of speed counts. We have today written to the London residuary body and the boroughs about these arrangements. We shall continue to consult closely with boroughs both about the development of the modelling and about appropriate longer-term arrangements. They and other users will be able to buy the services they need.

Fishing Vessels (Accidents)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all cases reported to his Department or to the coastguard, or about which his Department has information where fishing vessels have been in any kind of incident involving (a) British, (b) United States or (c) about submarines; and what action he has taken as a result.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1987, Vol. 111, c. 605]: Her Majesty's Coastguard has not been involved in any SAR operations involving fishing vessels and submarines since 1979 other than the Summer Morn. The signal log book at Clyde recorded that FV Berachah (6 December 1982) and FV Huntress (11 September 1984) had reported that a submarine had caused them difficulty. No further details are known.

No such incident has been reported to other divisions in my Department but the maritime safety committee of the International Maritime Organisation discussed, last year, the dangers of fishing vessels at sea posed by submerged submarines and subsequently issued an advisory circular.

WALES

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the numbers of entrants to his Department from the ethnic minorities in the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; and if he will also list the monitoring procedures used to ascertain the percentage of the work force represented by ethnic minorities and their patterns of promotion; and what are his methods of recruitment of minorities into the Department.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The ethnic origins of new entrants to my Department have been surveyed since October 1985. The position is:

	Number
Total new entrants to Welsh Office in the period 1 October 1985 to 28 February 1987	133
Ethnic origins:
white	132
black-Asian	1
not stated	—

A phased programme of departmental surveys of the ethnic origin of non-industrial civil servants by means of voluntary self-classification is being conducted. All non-industrial staff in my Department will be surveyed by June 1988. Consideration is being given to ways of using the date on the ethnic origin of staff-in-post to monitor promotion.

All departmental recruitment is conducted on the basis of fair and open competition and selection is on merit. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Privy Council Office on 20 February 1987 at columns 880-81, reporting the arrangements being made to encourage people from the ethnic minorities to apply to the Civil Service.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) of 5 February, Official Report, column 755, if he will set out the reasons why it has not been the practice to make publicly available papers submitted to the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee; and if he will make it his policy to publish such papers.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The current practice that working papers submitted to the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee are not made publicly available allows for full discussion by the committee in cooperation with Government Departments. The conclusions of RWMAC discussions are made public in their annual reports.

KMS Ltd.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Wales if his Department at any time over the past five years has had contracts with KMS Ltd.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: No.

Anglesey (Public Funds)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state total amount of public funds provided through his Department or its agencies which came to Anglesey between 1974 and 1979 and between 1979 and 1987.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I will write to my hon. Friend about the figures for 1979 to 1987 as soon as possible, and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House. The figures for 1974 to 1979 are not readily available and could only to obtained at disproportionate cost.

Singleton Hospital, Swansea

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide the financial resources to enable accident and emergency consultants to be appointed for the casualty unit at Singleton hospital, Swansea.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Discussions are continuing between West Glamorgan health authority and the Welsh Office about the health authority's request for funding of a consultant in accident and emergency services whose responsibilities would include Singleton minor casualty unit. It would be premature to forecast the outcome of these discussions at this stage.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Raffan asked the Secretary of State for Wales what conclusion he has reached following his Department's review of the "All Wales Strategy for the Development of Services for Mentally Handicapped People"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The Welsh Office has completed its three-year review of progress on the all-Wales strategy provided for by my right hon. Friend when he launched this major initiative in 1983, and I am grateful to all those who have assisted by responding positively to invitations to comment. A copy of the report is being placed in the Library of the House.

The strategy is designed to promote the development of new patterns of community-based services for mentally handicapped people over a 10-year period, and the Report confirms that a start has been made in the eight counties and in the vanguard areas following the formal approval of funding in all 10 plans submitted to the Welsh Office. Activities have been concentrated so far on relieving pressures on families and these and other services will be progressively developed for mentally handicapped people whether in the community or in hospital. While progress has been less rapid than had been hoped, the 10-year period allowed for the development of the strategy recognised from the outset that if, as was the intention, services are to be planned according to the needs of the individual, radical changes in attitudes towards the needs and the means of meeting them were called for. It was acknowledged, therefore, that achieving these changes would take time. Nevertheless, I am encouraged by what has already been accomplished in some counties.

The review has highlighted a number of issues which will need to be addressed by the Welsh Office and the counties; and several recommendations are aimed at introducing measures to relieve pressures on families, developing educational opportunities, providing a wider range of day time activity including employment and choice of accommodation for independent long-term living.

My right hon. Friend and I accordingly reaffirm our support for the strategy and its objectives and do not propose to make fundamental changes in the arrangements for its implementation. We shall however be revising, in the light of experience, the terms of reference and constitution of the all-Wales advisory panel to whose chairman and members I pay tribute for the commitment they have shown and the contribution they have made to progress thus far. For the future my right hon. Friend proposes to set up a smaller panel which will advise on major policy issues, though he hopes that members of the existing panel will continue to make their expertise available to counties as required.

ENERGY

AGRs (Control Rods)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy if the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate plans to order conclusive tests to be performed on control rod assemblies at Hinkley and Hunterston to confirm that wear is not present; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Regular inspection and maintenance of the control rod assemblies is carried out at all nuclear power stations. The NII is of course free to carry out whatever further tests it considers necessary.

KMS Ltd.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department at any time over the past five years has had contracts with KMS Ltd.

Mr. Peter Walker: No.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his current estimate of the number of direct jobs likely to be created by building at (a) Sizewell B and (b) a large coal-fired station, specifying in each case the estimated duration of the employment.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall ask the Central Electricity Generating Board to write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the number of inspectors employed by the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate in 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975, 1980, 1984 and 1986.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.
The numbers are as follows:

Date (December figures)	Number of Inspectors in NII
1960	13
1965	36
1970	45
1975	99
1980	90
1984	99
1986	98

Area Electricity Boards (External Audit)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to seek to introduce competition for external audit work for area electricity boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986, c. 14]: I can now announce that the Secretary of State for Energy has decided, following a competition by submission of tenders, to appoint Messrs. Price Waterhouse as auditors to the Electricity Council and to reappoint Messrs. Ernst & Whinney as auditors to the South Western electricity board. Both appointments will commence with the financial year 1987-88.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Rother Valley on 18 December, Official Report, column 621, concerning emergency arrangements at nuclear power stations, what is the statutory requirement for emergency arrangements to be rehearsed regularly; what is the typical number of inspectors present during the annual exercise at each location; whether any full-scale exercises have been undertaken in recent years other than those witnessed by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate; whether he has any plans to review the content or frequency of exercises of emergency arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 15 January 1987, c. 261]: The operators of licensed nuclear power stations are required as a condition of their site licences to rehearse their emergency arrangements to such extent as the Health and Safety Executive may direct. There are normally four inspectors present at an annual emergency exercise at each station. The operators hold additional exercises each year without the involvement of Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate. The extent and frequency of emergency exercises are kept under review. Arrangements for United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority nuclear power station sites are similar.

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his replies to the hon. Member for Rother Valley on 27 November 1986, Official Report, column 302, and 18 December 1986, Official Report, column 621, concerning duly authorised persons and exercises of emergency arrangements at nuclear power stations, what proportion of duly authorised persons at a typical station is associated with each separate shift; what arrangements are made for newly appointed duly authorised persons to participate in annual exercises witnessed by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate in the first year of appointment; with what frequency a duly authorised person participates in such annual exercises; what proportion of annual exercise scenarios include rehearsal of off-site measures to protect the public; with what frequency each manager or deputy manager participates in exercises of off-site measures to protect the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 15 January 1987, c. 262]: Site licences require training of all persons with duties to perform in the event of an emergency. Such persons, who will include duly authorised persons, are present on each shift. Typically one sixth of duly authorised persons are present on a shift. All persons having specified duties in an emergency participate in a training exercise in their first year and regularly thereafter, generally about once a year. As explained in my earlier answer, nuclear installations inspectorate witness different shifts in the annual exercise and not all persons on the shift can participate. Broadly those with special duties can expect to participate in an exercise witnessed by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate about once every five years.

For each site an emergency controller, normally the site manager or one of his nominated deputies, takes charge of an annual exercise which involves communication with the police and other local authorities who bear responsibility for offsite action to protect the public.

Arrangements for UKAEA nuclear power station sites are similar.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Shops Act 1950

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to seek to amend the fifth schedule to the Shops Act 1950.

Mr. Waddington: We have no plans to do so. It would be difficult to draft any amendments to the schedule which would not still leave glaring anomalies.

Mr. Joe Rajiah (Shooting)

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer of 21 November 1986, Official Report, column 371, if information of any nature was offered directly or indirectly by any authority in the United Kingdom to Spain prior to the Spanish police operation which resulted in the shooting of Mr. Joe Rajiah on 29 October 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our inquiries have not revealed any evidence to suggest that the authorities in this country passed information of any nature to the Spanish authorities prior to the Spanish police operation in which Mr. Rajiah was killed.

Police and Local Authorities (Co-operation)

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from chief police officers as to which police forces have requested, and been refused, co-operation or consultation by which local authorities on admission to their schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The admission of police officers to schools is normally a matter for individual head teachers. We deplore the refusal of a small number of schools to admit police officers for education visits.

Following the publication last year of a report by a joint working party of the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Society of Education Officers, efforts are being made at local level to improve the educational contribution of police officers in schools. These efforts deserve the full support of all those in a position to influence the education of our young people. The position is monitored routinely by Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary.

Racial Incidents (Southwark)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of cases of racial incidents reported to the police within the London borough of Southwark for each month of 1986; how many of these cases led to arrests being made; and what was the total number of persons arrested.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is set out in the table below.

I am informed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that of the 37 incidents three led to arrests, one person being arrested in each case.

Citizenship

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend the British Nationality Act 1981 so that registration will remain as a means of acquiring British citizenship beyond 1987 for those now eligible; and if he will publicise the changes which will take place in the means of obtaining British citizenship for those eligible when the present registration process lapses.

Mr. Waddington: We have no plans to amend the British Nationality Act 1981 the registration provisions of which have been fully discussed and approved by Parliament. The Government's publicity on registration rights already makes clear that those who decide not to apply for registration may still apply for naturalisation at any time.

Turkish Nationals (Asylum)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Turkish nationals have been given asylum in the United Kingdom in each year since 1980.

Mr. Waddington: The numbers of Turkish nationals granted asylum in the years 1980 to 1985 (with separate figures for those refused asylum but granted leave to remain on exceptional grounds) were published in tables 1 and 5B-5F of Home Office statistical bulletin "Refugee Statistics, United Kingdom, 1985" (issue 12/86). It is hoped to publish corresponding figures for 1986 around the end of April.

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state, in relation to the Home Office working group currently considering further guidance on the setting up and running of a rescue service under Civil Defence regulations (a) its composition, (b) its terms of reference, (c) its schedule of meetings, (d) the proposed date of its report and (e) the details of any interim findings, conclusions or recommendations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The working group is composed of Home Office and local authority representatives. Its terms of reference are:

"to help local authorities meet the requirements under the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions)

Regulations 1983 to make plans for providing and monitoring a service in their area for the rescue of persons from damaged buildings and debris in the event of hostile attack by:

(i) identifying the component parts of plans with particular regard to the type of rescue and the training and expertise required;

(ii) considering how such a service should be organised (structure and line responsibility) and in particular the role of the volunteer eg as a support to the CFO as a "generic" local authority volunteer, and as a community volunteer;

(iii) considering the extent to which volunteers should be recruited and training with particular regard to their potential usefulness in both peace and war emergencies; and

(iv) considering and drafting appropriate guidance to local authorities on all aspects of a rescue service to meet the requirement in the 1983 Regulations for incorporation in the Emergency Planning Guidance by F6 Division."

The working group has had three meetings and will be meeting again later this month to consider its recommendations. A date for the report has not yet been fixed.

KMS Ltd.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department at any time over the past five years has had contracts with KMS Ltd.

Mr. Hurd: Records are readily available only from April 1984. They include no contracts placed with, nor payments made to, KMS Ltd. by or on behalf of my Department during that period.

Parole

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what changes in parole policy and procedure he intends to implement in the light of the High Court judgment in the case of Brian Handscomb;

(2) what changes in parole policy and procedure he intends to implement in the light of the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in the case of Robert Weeks.

Mr. Mellor: We are studying these judgments carefully and will announce the Government's response to them in due course.

Immigration

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the temporary recognition as dependants of their mother, who is resident in the United Kingdom, of children studying in the United Kingdom, pending the arrival of their father who has applied for residence as a person of independent means; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The immigration rules (HC 169, as amended) provide for children to be admitted as dependants if both parents are in the United Kingdom, or are being admitted to the United Kingdom, for settlement or in a capacity leading to settlement. Under the rules a child may be admitted as the dependant of one parent here if the other parent is dead, if the parent here has had sole responsibility for the child's upbringing, or if there are serious and compelling considerations which make the child's exclusion undesirable. Every application is considered individually.

Political Rallies (Ban)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the ban by Mid Sussex district council on political rallies in public parks in Haywards Heath.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. No proposal for a byelaw imposing a ban has been received. We should not agree to such a byelaw unless strong evidence of substantial need was produced, and of course we would consider carefully any objections which might be received. I understand that the district council has passed a resolution banning political rallies in public parks, but that is not a matter for which we have any responsibility.

Public Disorder

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 12 January to the hon. Member for Leicester, East, Official Report, column 71, whether he has completed his consideration of the disturbances over the new year period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have now consulted chief officers of police about the disturbances in various towns on new year's eve. The police handling of the disorder at Lincoln is being reviewed by an assistant chief constable from the Humberside police. I shall ensure that any lessons for the future handling of such incidents are disseminated to chief officers.

In many of the incidents, there was evidence of excessive drinking. I regard the link between alcohol misuse and crime and disorder as increasingly serious and requiring Government and public attention. The ministerial group on crime prevention, chaired by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, has been considering the matter.

A project is being established by a local committee in Coventry to consider the various aspects of disorder associated with licensed premises. Further projects are being considered. A working group of the standing conference on crime prevention has been set up under the chairmanship of Lady Masham to study the question of alcohol and young people. I understand that the problem of disorderly behaviour by drunken youths will be one of the issues which the working group will consider.

Police (Establishment)

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has reached decisions on the applications from police authorities for increases in police force establishments of provincial forces in the next financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Hurd: I have approved 209 additional police posts for the following nine provincial police forces with effect from 1 April 1987.

Police authority/force	Increase approved
Avon and Somerset	10
Cambridgeshire	20
Devon and Cornwall	20
Dorset	9
Northamptonshire	20
Staffordshire	25

Police authority/force	Increase approved
Sussex	66
Warwickshire	14
	209

With the 98 additional police posts approved previously for three forces with effect from 1 April 1987 (eight for Cumbria, 40 for Northumbria and 50 for Thames Valley), increases totalling 307 police posts have so far been approved in provincial forces for the next financial year, 1987-88. Four other police authorities have been informed that I am prepared to approve increases totalling 141 police posts provided that they are able to give assurances about local financial provision for these additional posts in 1987-88.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Developing Countries (Loans)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report the extent of lending by United Kingdom banks to developing countries, for each year over the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested can be obtained from issues of the "Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin", table 15.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Director of Public Prosecutions

Mr. Corbyn asked the Attorney-General on approximately how many occasions each month he consults the Director of Public Prosecutions; and for what purposes.

The Attorney-General: I consult the Director of Public Prosecutions frequently for the purpose of discussing criminal prosecutions and related matters.

Social Security Commissioners

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Attorney-General what progress has been made on the review of the arrangements governing the reporting and availability of social security commissioners' decisions.

The Attorney-General: The arrangements governing the reporting and availability of written decisions of the social security commissioners have been reviewed in consultation with a wide range of representative organisations. In the light of the comments received, it has been decided that revised arrangements should be introduced, as follows:

(1) There will be made available for inspection and for the obtaining of copies on payment at the London or Edinburgh office, as appropriate, of the social security commissioners decisions of commissioners as follows:

(i) the starred decisions of commissioners made on or after 1 January 1987 (starred decisions are those decisions of more general significance);

(ii) other commissioners' decisions made on or after 1 January 1987;

(iii) as available, decisions of commissioners made on or before 31 December 1986.

(2) A subscription system will also be provided.

(3) Anonimity will be preserved so far as reasonably possible in those commissioners' decisions which are copied and issued, and such decisions will therefore not, in particular, include the name of the claimant.

(4) The selection of decisions for reporting will continue to be made by the chief commissioner after consultation with commissioners; there is also a general standing invitation to comment on the "report worthiness" of any decision.

(5) Commissioners' decisions on appeals and references, whether reported or not, may be cited to the commissioners at oral hearings subject to seven days notice being given.

It is intended that the revised arrangements will be brought into operation from 1 April 1987 onwards.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Deakins asked the Paymaster General how many permanent jobs, full-time and part-time, have been created in the London borough of Waltham Forest since 1979.

Mr. Lee: Information about jobs created is not available from my Department's statistics. Net changes in employment can be given, but, for areas smaller than regions, only those dates when censuses of employment are taken.

The latest available figures are from the June 1978 and the September 1981 censuses of employment. In that period, the number of employees in employment in the local authority district of Waltham Forest fell by 7,100; a breakdown of full-time and part-time employees for the district is not readily available for the earlier year. The September 1984 census estimates for local areas are not yet available. Between censuses employment statistics are based on small scale sample inquiries which cannot produce reliable results for areas smaller than the standard economic regions.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General what was the unemployment rate on Budget day and six months later for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table gives seasonally adjusted unemployment rates calculated as a percentage of the working population for the United Kingdom on monthly unemployment count dates closest to Budget days and six months after each count date for each year since 1979. The statistics have been adjusted for discontinuities to be consistent with the current monthly count.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Paymaster General if he will list the current unemployment rates in the unemployment exchanges nearest to the following nuclear power installations: (a) Springfields, (b) Heysham A and B, (c) Hartlepool, (d) Wylfa, (e) Trawsfynydd, (f) Oldbury, (g) Berkeley, (h) Hinckley Point A and B, (i) Winfrith, (j) Dungeness A and B, (k) Bradwell, (l) Sizewell A and (m) Sellafield.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment rates are only calculated for self-contained labour market areas; the smallest such areas are travel-to-work areas. The following table shows unemployment rates as at 8 January 1987 in the travel-to-work areas covering the nuclear power installations specified, expressed as a percentage of employees in employment plus the unemployed.

Nuclear Power Installation	Travel-to-work area	Unemployment rate at 8 January 1987

YTS

Mr. Fallon asked the Paymaster General whether he will list the total number of young people on the YTS in Darlington in each year since its inception.

Mr. Trippier: The numbers of entrants to YTS in the Darlington local authority district are as follows:

	Number
1983-84	1,085
1984-85	1,243
1985-86	1,268

[1] Up to 5 March.

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Paymaster General whether, in the manner of his answer of 17 June 1986, Official Report, column 485, he will set out a table showing for each monthly or three-monthly period for which figures are available, the percentage of YTS leavers in Dacorum (a) entering full-time work, (b) entering part-time work, (c) entering full-time education and (d) returning to the unemployment register.

Mr. Trippier: The table sets out results from the Manpower Services Commission's regular follow-up survey of YTS leavers. The information shows the proportions of YTS leavers, on a cumulative monthly basis, in a full-time job, in a part-time job, on a full-time course and those unemployed, three months after leaving YTS, separately for the years 1985-86 and 1986-87, for the local authority district of Dacorum.

Job Training Scheme

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General how many hours training per month has been provided to each job training scheme participant in the pilot areas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In the initial pilots the contracts with managing agents have required the provision of at least 150 hours of directed training to a participant with an average six-month programme, although most trainees will receive far more.

When the scheme is extended nationwide managing agents will be required to provided at least 300 hours of directed training during an average six-month course.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General (1) whether trainee participants in the new job training scheme are permitted or are expected to be included in shift work during placement;

(2) whether participants in the new job training scheme are permitted or are expected to work overtime during placement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 21]: Participants are under no obligation to undertake unsocial or long hours, but they may be invited to do so where this is normal working practice in the industry and business in which they are being trained.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General how many job training scheme participants have found placement within Government Departments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 21]: I am informed by the Manpower Services Commission that it is not aware of any practical experience placements in Government Departments so far in the new JTS pilot programmes.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General whether he will increase the allowance to participants in the new job training scheme to compensate for midday meals taken outside the house whilst under training with a managing agent and on placement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 21]: We have accepted in full the Manpower Services Commission's recommendations for the development of the job training scheme, including its view that trainees should be no worse off through their participation in the scheme. The commission is now considering detailed proposals for meeting trainees' out-of-pocket expenses.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he will specify exactly how the funding for the job training scheme has been assembled within the departmental budget.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 23 February 1987, c. 87]: Details of planned provision for my Department's programmes are contained in chapter 3·7 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1987-88 to 1989-90", volume II" (Cmnd. 56-II), a copy of which is in the Library. On 28 January I announced a further expansion of certain programmes which will increase my Department's total provision beyond that shown in Cmnd 56-II without adding to total public expenditure. A detailed breakdown will be contained in class VII of the Government's expenditure estimates, to be published on March 17.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General how many individuals have participated in the enterprise allowance scheme in each year since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: The enterprise allowance scheme was piloted in five areas between February 1982 and July 1983 and introduced nationally in August 1983. The numbers participating from 1982 until 1987 were:

	Number
February 1982—July 1983 (pilot scheme)	3,331
August 1983—March 1984	27,629
April 1984—March 1985	46,037
April 1985—March 1986	60,036
April 1986—February 1987	[1]76,330

[1] Provisional

Independent Financial Intermediaries

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to the total numbers of people employed by independent financial intermediaries and as to the number of self-employed independent financial intermediaries.

Mr. Trippier: The Department's employment statistics are analysed according to the 1980 standard industrial classification (SIC) and independent financial intermediaries are not separately identified.

In September 1986, the latest date for which estimates are available, there were 921,000 employees in employment in Great Britain in banking and finance (Class 81 of the 1981 SIC), insurance except for compulsory social security (class 82), and business services auxiliary to these industries (activity headings 8310 and 8320).

The published estimates of the self-employed, which are not available in as much detail as those for employees in employment, show that in September 1986 there were an estimated 281,000 self-employed people in banking, finance, insurance, business services and leasing (division 8 of the 1980 SIC) in Great Britain.

On a different basis, estimates of the self-employed derived from the spring 1985 "Labour Force Survey" (the latest available) indicate that 15 per cent. of the total for division 8 were employed in banking and finance, insurance except for compulsory social security, and business services auxiliary to these industries.

Nuclear Power Plants (Closure)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Paymaster General what assessments his Department has made of the economic and employment impact of the closure of nuclear power plants on nearby communities; whether such studies are publicly available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My Department has made no such studies.

Health and Safety Regulations

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Paymaster General how many visits per day he expects to be carried out on average by inspectors under health and safety regulations; how long he estimates an inspector's visit made under health and safety regulations lasts on average; if he will give details of the salary structure and average salary of inspectors who carry out visits under the health and safety regulations; and what is the total number of inspectors employed to carry out visits under health and safety regulations.

Mr. Trippier: It is not possible to provide meaningful information on the average number of visits per day or on the average duration of a visit made by Health and Safety Executive (HSE) inspectors, since the length of visits varies widely depending on the nature and purpose of the visit. The salary structure and the average salaries of those HSE inspectors who carry out visits are as follows:

Average national salary (1986)

Inspectorate and grade	Average salary £	Salary scale from	to

Principal inspector	21,883	19,880	23,675
Inspector	17,003	16,250	18,950

A total of 859 inspectors are employed by the Health and Safety Executive to carry out visits under health and safety regulations. This does not include 98 nuclear inspectors who are based at headquarters, but who also carry out visits to nuclear installations from time to time.

There are also inspectors employed by local authorities, and inspectorates covered by agency agreements with the Health and Safety Executive, who make visits to enforce health and safety regulations.

Wages Inspectorate

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Paymaster General how many visits per day he expects to be carried out on average by inspectors of the wages inspectorate; how long he estimates an inspector's visit made by the wages inspectorate lasts on average; if he will give details of the salary structure and average salary of inspectors who carry out visits for the wages inspectorate; and what is the total number of inspectors employed to carry out visits for the wages inspectorate.

Mr. Trippier: During 1987 it is planned that wages inspectors will carry out an average of 3·4 visits per day. The length of visits varies considerably according to the circumstances but on average about an hour is spent on the employer's premises.

The current salary structure for wages inspectors is given in the following table:

Wages inspector	London £	Elsewhere £
Executive Officer grade	6,715-10,917	5,250-9,492
Higher Executive Officer grade	10,895-13,406	9,430-11,941

The average salary of wages inspectors is £10,166.

At present there are 78 outdoor wages inspectors.

Adult Training Scheme

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he will provide details of the numbers in the adult training scheme and a breakdown of the type, duration and cost per place of the training in which they are engaged.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 6 March 1987, c. 712]: Details of the numbers, cost and type of our adult training programmes are contained in sub-head H of class VII, vote 6, of the Supply Estimates for 1986-87. The length of courses mounted under these programmes can vary, according to content, from a day to several months.

TVEI (Grants)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Paymaster General what technical and vocational education initiative grants have been made to each local education authority in 1986-87; when the pilot schemes started in each authority; whether in each case he has received an evaluation report of the pilot schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 6 March 1987, c. 712-13]: The table shows the profiled expenditure for 1986-87 and the date pilot projects started the technical and vocational education initiative (TVEI) for the 95 local education authorities/education authorities currently operating projects.

The Manpower Services Commission has mechanisms for monitoring the progress of each individual scheme and has already published interim evaluation reports on the management of TVEI pilot schemes. Further independent evaluation including a summary of evaluation studies to date will be published later this year and thereafter. In each case the local education authority/education authority is required to commission an independent local evaluator. In addition, Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools has issued a number of reports on TVEI pilot schemes and will continue to do so.

It is the Government's wish that all authorities should participate in the extension of the initiative and benefit from the lessons emerging from the pilot projects.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Paymaster General what technical and vocational education initiative extension grants have been approved for each local education authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 6 March 1987, c. 712-13]: Contracts have yet to be agreed with any authority for extension funding. Sixty-one authorities were eligible to apply for extension funding in 1987. On these, 25 submitted proposals and the Manpower Services Commission is holding discussions with 11 of these with a view to their launching extension programmes in the autumn. Negotiations about funding for preparatory projects are also in hand with six of the 18 authorities not previously involved in the technical and vocational education initiative (TVEI). The Government hope that all authorities will take advantage of the opportunity to participate in the TVEI extension.

Engineering Apprenticeships

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Paymaster General how many engineering apprenticeships were supplied in 1979 and in 1986.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 19]: The information is not available in the detail requested. There is no central record of all engineering apprentices, many of whom are employed outside the engineering industry.

However, the Engineering Industry Training Board (EITB) has maintained a record of those trainees registering with it for basic craft and technician training. The record includes both trainees in firms within the industry and those employed by companies in other industries that choose to register their trainees with the board. This record does not include all engineering craft and technician trainees outside the engineering industry. Statistics for these are not available. EITB registrations for the years 1978-79 and 1985-86 are as follows:

Registrations

Year	Engineering Industry	Other Industries
1978-79	24,519	3,239

Source: EITB records.

Total employment in the engineering industry has fallen by about one third since the late 1970s — and the population of people employed as craftsmen and technicians has declined by about the same amount. Apprenticeship is not the only route to craft and technician jobs. A substantial amount of initial skills training is undertaken within YTS and the expended two-year scheme will provide increased opportunity for flexible skills training relevant to employers' needs.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Control of Goods Act

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to amend the Control of Goods Act and other legislation to give effect in British law to the recommendations contained in United Nations Security Council resolution 591 of 28 November 1986, in particular in clauses 2, 3, 4, 7, 10 and 11.

Mrs. Chalker: No amendments to United Kingdom legislation are necessary following the adoption by consensus of Security Council resolution 591.

South Africa

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the establishment of the British embassy and consulates in South Africa as at 1 March 1987, 1 March 1986 and 1 March 1985; and if he will indicate the duties of each diplomatic official on those dates.

Mr. Eggar: The establishment of Her Majesty's embassy and consulates in South Africa at 1 March 1987 was 161, at 1 March 986 was 166 and at 1 March 1985 was 158.

The duties of diplomatic officials at 1 March 1987 were as follows:

(c) British consulate, Cape Town

The only changes during the period in question affecting diplomatic officials were the abolition of the post of vice consul (information), Johannesburg, in April 1986 and the addition of the post of vice consul (consular), Johannesburg, in March 1986. The defence attaché and naval and air attaché were withdrawn from Her Majesty's embassy in November 1985.

United Nations Fund for Victims of Torture

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution Her Majesty's Government make to the United Nations fund for victims of torture.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom made a contribution of £10,000 to this fund in 1984.

Turkish Minority (Bulgaria)

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what information his Department has collected about the latest developments in Bulgaria concerning the Turkish assimilation campaign; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he has any information about the numbers of Turks who have been killed as a result of the assimilation of the Turkish minority in Bulgaria.

Mr. Renton: Reports on recent actions by the Bulgarian authorities towards the ethnic Turkish minority have referred to violent clashes and deaths. We have pressed the Bulgarian authorities to permit access to the affected areas, so that the facts can be established. Facilities for this have not been granted. We therefore have no first-hand information on the situation.

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what recent representations the Government have made to the Bulgarian authorities about the treatment of the ethnic Turkish minority;

(2) whether the Government will make representations to the United Nations Commission on Human Rights about the treatment of the minority Turkish population in Bulgaria.

Mr. Renton: Reports of mistreatment of the ethnic Turkish minority have still not been satisfactorily explained by the Bulgarian authorities. This remains a matter of concern which we have repeatedly brought to their attention bilaterally and in multilateral fora, including at the current CSCE follow-up meeting in Vienna and at the current session of the United Nations Commission for Human Rights in Vienna.

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether he has any information about the number of Turks in Bulgaria who have been given permission to visit relatives in Turkey since 1985;

(2) what information his Department has collected about the numbers of Turks who have been allowed to emigrate from Bulgaria since 1982.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not readily available. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Lebanon

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has held with his counterparts in the European Community Council of Foreign Ministers about the situation in the Lebanon.

Mr. Renton: The situation in Lebanon was among the subjects my right hon. and learned Friend discussed with his EC colleagues at their meeting in Brussels on 23 February.

Single European Act

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration he has given to the communication from the European Commission, entitled "Making a Success of the Single Act."

Mrs. Chalker: The Commission's paper was discussed by Foreign Ministers on 22 February. My right hon. and learned Friend made clear that the first requirement was for measures to be taken to control expenditure, including agricultural expenditure and called on the Commission to put forward detailed proposals building on the ideas in its paper. He made clear that Britain stood by the conclusions of the Fontainebleau European Council of June 1984 and saw no case for going beyond them.

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions in the past 10 years members of the diplomatic administrative or technical staff of foreign missions, or members of their families, have escaped arrest or prosecution for serious offences as a result of their status.

Mr. Eggar: The figures for 1974 to 1983 were given on page 16 of the Foreign Affairs Committee report "The Abuse of Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges" of December 1984.

The figures for subsequent years to date are as follows:

	Number
1984	48
1985	53
1987	6

In accordance with the report, "serious" is defined as falling into a category which could in certain circumstances attract a penalty of six months imprisonment or more; in fact, we are advised that very few of the alleged offences would have been likely to attract a custodial sentence. There has been a significant fall in the number of alleged serious offences since the notification to the Diplomatic Corps of the stricter standards set out in the White Paper on diplomatic immunities and privileges (Cmnd. 9497).

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many foreign diplomats have been withdrawn from their posts in Britain following allegations of serious crime against them in the last 10 years.

Mr. Eggar: The figures for withdrawals of diplomats, administrative and technical staff members and dependants where applicable from 1982 onwards to date are:

	Number
1982	14
1983	17
1984	13
1985	25
1986	17

Figures for withdrawals for the years 1976-81 could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions in the last 10 years when an allegation has been made that a diplomat has committed a serious offence has that diplomat not been required to leave Great Britain.

Mr. Eggar: I regret that the information in the form requested by my hon. Friend is not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions in the last 10 years foreign Governments have refused to waive the immunity of diplomats alleged to have committed sexual offences; and if he will break down this figure by year, by country of origin of the diplomat, and by nature of the offence.

Mr. Eggar: Statistics for 1974 to 1983 relating to alleged sexual offences by persons with immunity were given on page 16 of the Foreign Affairs Committee report "The Abuse of Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges."

The figures for subsequent years to date are as follows:

	Number
1984	3 (two indecent assault, one gross indecency)
1985	2 (both gross indecency)
1986	none
1987	none

It has not been the practice to name individual missions whose staff are reported to have committed offences.

One waiver was requested and refused in 1984 and also in 1985. The other alleged offenders in 1982 to 1985 were transferred without a waiver being requested. We have no centralised records of waivers requested before 1982 and figures could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

KMS Ltd

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department at any time over the past five years has had contracts with KMS Ltd.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office last employed KMS Ltd from May to August 1982.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the cost of cutting the top rate of income tax to 50 per cent.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue cost would be about £400 million in a full year at forecast 1987-88 income levels compared with an indexed income tax regime. This estimate does not allow for any possible behavioural effects.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount paid in income tax for the tax year 1985-86 by persons who earned more than two thirds of the national average wage, showing the percentage of the total income tax revenue that his figure represents; and what is the forecast for 1986-87.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1985-86 average earnings were about £10,300 for male employees paid at adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. Taxpaying single people and married couples with gross incomes for income tax purposes about two thirds of this level had income tax liabilities of about £36 billion in 1985-86, approximately 90 per cent. of total income tax liability. In 1986-87 the corresponding estimates are £11,100, £38 billion and 90 per cent. respectively.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list, in league order, showing such information as he has for each member state of the European Economic Community, United States of America, Canada, Sweden and Japan about (a) the starting rate of income tax and (b) the top rate of income tax, excluding local income tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information requested is given in the tables:

	Per cent.
(a) Starting rates of income tax
Portugal	2·5
Sweden	4·0
Canada	6·0
Greece	7·0
Japan	10·5
Luxembourg	11·0
United States of America	11·0
Italy	12·0
Netherlands	16·0
France	19·0
Spain	21·0
Denmark	21·0
Belgium	22·0
Germany	22·0
United Kingdom	29·0
Ireland	35-60·0
(b) Top rates of income tax
Canada	38·0
United States of America	38·5
Denmark	40·0
Sweden	50·0
Germany	56·0
France	58·0
Ireland	58·0
United Kingdom	60·0
Portugal	60·0
Luxembourg	61·0
Italy	62·0
Greece	63·0
Spain	66·0
Japan	66·5
Belgium	72·0
Netherlands	72·0

Notes:

1. The rates used are those current in 1987, where available ie Denmark, Germany, Luxembourg, Netherlands, Spain, United States of America, Ireland (1986-87) and United Kingdom (1986-87). Otherwise the 1986 rates are used, ie Belgium, France, Greece, Italy, Portugal, Canada, Japan and Sweden.
2. The figures relate to a married couple without children. The rates are those applicable to employment income. These are the same as those applicable to investment income, except in the case of Japan where the top rate on investment income is 70 per cent. and Portugal where it is 53-65 per cent. (there are different rates for different types of investment income).
3. The figures are shown exclusive of local income taxes. Local income taxes can sometimes make a significant difference. In Denmark, for example, the starting rate would be 49 per cent. with the inclusion of local income tax at the Copenhagen rate (a typical one)—the top rate would be 68 per cent. In Sweden inclusion of local income tax at the typical Stockholm rate would make the starting rate 30 per cent. and the top rate 80 per cent. In Japan the inclusive figure for the top rate would be 84 per cent. (using the rate paid by the majority of the population).
4. The higher starting rate for a married couple in Ireland (60 per cent.) reflects the marginal relief just above the exemption limit. Where there is no longer any marginal relief, the rate reduces to 35 per cent.

Local Authorities (Capital Receipts)

Mr. Raison asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact on public expenditure of empowering local authorities to increase the proportion of capital receipts which they could spend from 30 per cent. to (a) 40 per cent. and (b) 50 per cent.

Mr. Lawson: At present a local authority can use 20 per cent. of its housing receipts and 30 per cent. of most other receipts for capital spending in any one year, and these prescribed proportions apply to past receipts not already used in this way in previous years as well as to those which arise during the year.

If the proportions were increased, the rate at which local authorities could use receipts for capital spending would be accelerated. With proportions of (a) 40 per cent. and (b) 50 per cent. their scope for spending from receipts would initially increase by an estimated (a) £1½ billion and (b) £2½ billion a year.

But in order to keep to the Government's overall plans for local authority capital spending, allocations related to individual local authorities' actual need to spend would have to be reduced to offsett the scope for accelerated use of receipts. If, for example, half the increased scope for spending from receipts were actually used, the room for spending from allocations would be (a) £¾ billion and (b) £1¼ billion less.

Floating Debt

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the floating debt as a percentage of gross domestic product and of the national debt in 1957, 1967 and 1977 and the latest 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No. The information requested can be derived from the following publications:

Annual Consolidated Funds and National Loans Fund Accounts since 1968-69; supplementary statements.
Finance Accounts of the United Kingdom pre 1968-69.
Economic Trends; Economic Trends Annual Supplement.

EC Commission (Overdraft Facilities)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many occasions prior to February 1987 the European Economic Community Commission has demanded to overdraw on the account of member states under article 12(2) of Regulation 2891/77; if he will make a statement on the operation of the sub-article; and whether there is any restriction on the amount of such overdraft facilities which can be demanded from the accounts of member states.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1987, c. 645]: Article 12(2) of Council Regulation 2891/77 of 19 December 1977 empowers the Commission, in certain circumstances, to draw in excess of the total assets in its accounts in member states. The payments are an obligation to be met by a direct charge on the Consolidated Fund under section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972. The facility can be used only to meet legitimate expenditure commitments up to the limit of available own resources in the budget, or within the limits of the provisional twelfths regime. In practice the Commission only draws at any one time sufficient to meet its immediate cash needs. Repayment is achieved by deduction of the outstanding amount of the overdraft from the next available own resources payment into the Commission's accounts. The overdraft payment made in February this year was recovered from the VAT contribution paid on 2 March.

The United Kingdom first made payments to the EEC Commission under the provisions of article 12 during February 1985. My right hon. Friend the Economic Secretary notified the House of the Commission's request at the time in his reply to the hon. Member for Corby (Mr. Powell) on 25 February 1985, columns 58). Between 25 February and 29 April 1985 the Commission drew in excess of the total assets in its United Kingdom account on eleven separate occasions. The Commission did not make any further use of this facility between April 1985 and February 1987.

Taxpayers

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, for the last year that information is available, how many taxpayers had incomes between (a) £27,500 to £29,999; (b) £30,000 to £34,000, (c) £35,000 to £39,999, (d) £40,000 to £44,999 and over £50,000.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987]: Estimates for 1986-87 are given in the table. The analysis is of single people and married couples liable to income tax. The figures are based on a projection from the 1984-85 "Survey of Personal Incomes" and are therefore provisional.

Number of tax units liable to income tax by range of total income, 1986-87

Total income (lower limit) (£ per annum)	Number of taxpayers[1] (thousands)
27,500	160
30,000	210
35,000	110
40,000	70
45,000	50
50,000	110

[1] Counting married couples as one and combining their incomes.

Overdue Taxes

Mr. Speller asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the grade of officer who may receive some form of commission or other payment for success in collecting overdue taxes; how much has been paid in each of the past five years for which figures are available; what was the highest individual sum paid; and if he will make a statement on his policy regarding such payment by results.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987]: No grade of officer receives payment of commission or other payment simply on the basis of success in collecting overdue taxes. Like all other departments the Inland Revenue has an experimental performance bonus scheme for senior staff of grade 3 (under-secretary) down to grade 7 (principal and equivalent grades) and all staff of these grades, whatever their duties, are eligible.

The scheme has been running for two years. The total amount to be awarded for 1986-87 is £508,740 and in 1985-86 the total was £509,500. The highest award payable under the scheme in both years was £1,100.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of entrants to his Department from the ethnic minorities in the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; if he will also list the monitoring procedures used to ascertain the percentage of the work force represented by ethnic minorities and their patterns of promotion; and what are his methods of recruitment of minorities into his Department.

Mr. Scott: The ethnic origins of new entrants have been surveyed since October 1985. The latest available information for the period up to 30 September 1986 is as follows:

Total new entrants to the Northern Ireland Office in period 1 October 1985 to 30 September 1986

Ethnic origins	Number
white	5
black/asian	3
not stated	2
Total	10

A phased programme of departmental surveys of the ethnic origin of non-industrial civil servants by means of voluntary self-classification is being conducted. By the end of 1986 all home civil servants (industrial as well as non-industrial) in the Northern Ireland Office had been surveyed. Northern Ireland civil servants were not included in this survey since they are covered by a separate equal opportunities monitoring system adapted to the different needs and circumstances of Northern Ireland.

Consideration is being given to ways of using the data on the ethnic origin of staff-in-post to monitor promotion.

All departmental recruitment is conducted on the basis of fair and open competition and selection is on merit. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Privy Council Office, on 20 February 1987 at columns 880-81, reporting the arrangements being made to encourage people from the ethnic minorities to apply to the Civil Service.

Civil Servants (Anglo-Irish Conference)

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what authorisation has been given to civil servants servicing the Anglo-Irish conference to address party political meetings on their work.

Mr. Tom King: The secretariat was established in December 1985 to service the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference. It is staffed jointly by civil servants from the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland and acts as a channel of communication between the two Governments. No member of the secretariat has been involved with or addressed any party political meetings in Northern Ireland.

Cervical Cancer Screening

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on facilities provided for the screening of cervical cancer in the Province; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Until recently all cervical screening smears were tested at three laboratories in Northern Ireland, two in the eastern health and social services board area and one in the western board area. A new laboratory opened in the northern board area in February. Additional laboratory accommodation is planned for the southern board next year and arrangements are also being made for extra smears to be processed in the western board area.

The resources needed for staff and equipment have been provided and a computerised call and recall system is being developed to ensure that all women aged 20-65 will be called for screening at five-yearly intervals. The Government's aim is to have in place by 1988 a comprehensive cervical screening service which meets the need of all women in Northern Ireland.

KMS Ltd

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if his Department at any time over the past five years has had contracts with KMS Ltd.

Mr. Scott: No.

Unity Flats

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's estimates for the Unity flats of (a) the total cost of refurbishing the whole complex and (b) the average cost per dwelling, including loan and interest charges for refurbishment, given a 30-year estimated life span.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that (a) the total estimated works cost of refurbishing the whole complex is approximately £5·25 million, which is an average cost per dwelling of between £18,000 and £19,000; and (b) the estimated average unit cost including loan and interest charges over 25 years would be £50,000.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's detailed results and estimates of the cost-benefit analysis it agreed to complete for the Unity Flats Tenants' Association last June into comparing the total costs of demolition and redevelopment for the Unity flats complex as compared with the total costs of refurbishment including the isolation of the blocks.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that the detailed results are not yet available.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the areas of land zoned for industrial and residential use in the immediate vicinity of Unity flats including the area between Upper Library street, Carlisle circus, Clifton street, Donegall street, Upper North street and Royal avenue.

Mr. Needham: The current Belfast urban area plan has no zoning indications for the area in question. In the absence of zoning indications, the presumption is that the current land use will continue, but any planning indication for change of use would be considered on its merits.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many residents of Unity flats have been subject to action under the Payment for Debt (Emergency Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) in each year for which information is available.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the figures for the number of dwellings in Unity flats (a) occupied, (b) under occupied, (c) overcrowded and (d) vacant at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I understand from the chairman that at 6 March 1987, 254 dwellings were occupied and 31 were vacant. Information is not available about the extent of any under-occupation or overcrowding.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many residents of Unity flats have received (a) certificate housing benefits, (b) standard housing benefits and (c) housing benefit supplement since 1983 for each year; and what have been the total amounts in each category paid to the Unity residents since the introduction of the scheme.

Mr. Needham: I am informed by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that this information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people from the waiting list by category are currently on the waiting list seeking (a) transfer out of Unity and (b) a transfer into Unity; and of these categories if he will list by numbers their areas of preference.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I understand from the chairman that there are currently 65 applications for transfer out of the Unity complex and 63 applications for transfers into the Unity complex. The more detailed information sought could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many repairs by type and category are carried out annually in Unity flats for the years in which information is available;

(2) if he will list the type and number of repair requests made by the residents of Unity to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive for the past five years to date.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that information in the form requested is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. He has advised me, however, that approximately 1,200 repair requests are processed annually; the most common requests relate to dampness, wind and weather proofing difficulties, condensation, and various internal defects.

Carrick Hostel Site (Development)

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and Department of the Environment first received the initial planning request to build flats on the site of the Carrick hostel from the Open Door Housing Association; when initial planning permission was first given; and which authorities, groups, voluntary and statutory bodies the Department of the Environment and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive have consulted to date on these proposals.

Mr. Needham: A planning application to build flats for single persons, on the site of the annexe to the Carrick house hostel, was received on 17 December 1986 and outline approval was given on 25 February 1987. The Belfast city council was consulted on the planning application. In considering the association's application for grant aid for the project, the Department sought the views of the eastern health and social services board and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, both of which supported the proposal.

The Department has, therefore, accepted the project in principle; its implementation will be subject to the award of full planning permission, detailed approval of costs and design standards and the availability of resources.

The House Executive has not direct role in planning matters or in the approval of housing association projects.

Terrorism

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what investigations are currently taking place into murders and kidnappings by paramilitary organisations in the 1970s.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1987, c. 658]: All crimes committed within Northern Ireland are investigated by the Royal Ulster Constabulary. Files on serious crimes are kept open indefinitely and any new evidence is vigorously pursued.

Broadleaved Woodlands

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many broadleaved woodlands have been notified as areas of special scientific interest in Northern Ireland; and how many tree preservation orders exist covering areas of broadleaved woodland, rather than individual trees.

Mr. Needham [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 2-3]: No exclusively broadleaved woodlands have yet been notified as areas of special scientific interest under the provisions of the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (NI) Order 1985. Sixty-one tree preservation orders have been made in respect of groups of trees; none of these are in respect of exclusively broadleaved woodlands.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk and Dairies Regulations

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many visits per day he expects to be carried out on average by his Department's inspectors as statutory inspections carried out under the Milk and Dairies and Milk (Special Designation) (Charges) Regulations (S.I., 1987, No. 212); and how long he estimates an inspector's visit made under the Milk and Dairies Regulations last on average;

(2) if he will give details of (a) the proposed salary structure and anticipated average salary and (b) the total number of inspectors employed to carry out visits under the Milk and Dairies and Milk (Special Designation) (Charges) Regulations (S.I., 1987, No. 212) whole time equivalent;

(3) how many further inspectors are to be employed by his Department to carry out visits under the Milk and Dairies and Milk (Special Designation) (Charges) Regulations (S.I., 1987, No. 212);

(4) if he will estimate the number of farms which fall into the smaller farms category as defined by the Milk and Dairy and Milk (Special Designation) (Charges) Regulations (S.I. 1987, No. 212).

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Cow Subsidies

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the average level of financial support per cow in each of the other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers of entrants to his Department from the ethnic minorities in the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; if he will also list the monitoring procedures used to ascertain the percentage of the work force represented by ethnic minorities and their patterns of promotion; and what are his methods of recruitment of minorities into his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: The ethnic origins of new entrant non-industrial staff have been surveyed since October 1985. The latest available information for the period up to 31 January 1987 is as follows:

	Number
Total non-industrial new entrants to the Scottish Office in the period 1 October 1985 to 31 January 1987	750
Ethnic origins (rounded up the nearest multiple of five to preserve confidentiality)
White	385
Black/Asian/Others	5
Not stated (ie non respondents)	365

A phased programme of departmental surveys of the ethnic origin of all non-industrial civil servants by means of voluntary self-classification is being conducted. Scottish Office staff will be surveyed by the end of 1987. Consideration is being given to ways of using the data on the ethnic origin of staff-in-post to monitor promotion.

All Departmental recruitment is conducted on the basis of fair and open competition and selection is on merit. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Privy Council Office on 20 February 1987 at column 882 reporting the arrangements being made to encourage people from the ethnic minorities to apply to the Civil Service.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average waiting time for women in Scotland who have had tests for breast cancer to be informed of the results of the tests.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available centrally.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on facilities provided for the screening of cervical cancer in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: All Scottish health boards provide facilities for the immediate investigation of patients for whom a cervical smear is required on clinical grounds, and in addition provide facilities for routine screening. I am currently considering whether to give boards revised guidance on routine screening.

KMS Ltd

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department at any time over the past five years has had contracts with KMS Ltd.

Mr. Lang: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Parole

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what changes in parole policy and procedure he intends to implement in the light of the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in the case of Robert Weeks;

(2) what changes in parole policy and procedure he intends to implement in the light of the English High Court judgment in the case of Brian Handscomb.

Mr. Rifkind: I have no immediate proposals for changes in parole policy and procedures, but will study carefully the implications for Scotland of the two judgments.

Dunfermline College

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has sent to the Council for National Academic Awards in response to its advice that any transfer to Dunfermline college of students at present attending the first year of their course at the Scottish school of physical education, Jordanhill, requires the consent of the students concerned; and whether he has obtained that consent.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department indicated that while it is in the students' interests to move to the Dunfermline site so that their training may be completed on an integrated basis, it was not intended to impose any transfer. I understand that arrangements are being made for all the students to meet staff and students at Dunfermline before they reach any decision.

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what estimate he has made of the cost of providing a sports pavilion at Dunfermline college;

(2) what estimate he has made of the cost of upgrading and extending the games hall facilities at Dunfermline college;

(3) what estimate he has made of the cost of providing a floodlit synthetic pitch at Dunfermline college.

Mr. Rifkind: I have nothing to add to my reply of 12 January, at columns 81-82, to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar).

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the cost of providing additional toilet and other facilities to provide for male physical education students at Dunfermline college.

Mr. Rifkind: I understand from Dunfermline college of physical education that it is not envisaged that any additional costs need be incurred during the 1987-88 financial year but that expenditure in the region of £50,000 is likely to be required during 1988-89.

Jordanhill College

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the facilities which will be surplus to requirements at Jordanhill college in the event of the training of physical education teachers being discontinued there; how these facilities are proposed to be disposed of; and what he estimates the proceeds of disposal will be.

Mr. Rifkind: In my statement on 17 July 1986 announcing the centralisation of physical education training, I also asked colleges to dispose of surplus accommodation, whether for educational or for other use. My Department has subsequently sought to agree a programme of disposals with each college. Jordanhill was not pressed to include firm proposals for the disposal or alternative use in due course of the specialist facilities used to train secondary physical education teachers, primarily because the extent to which those facilities will become surplus is uncertain until the outcome of a review of leisure and recreation courses, which is to be undertaken shortly by my Department, is known.

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report his reply to the letter from the chairman of the board of governors of Jordanhill college, dated 15 September 1986, with regard to his proposal to discontinue the training of physical education teachers at Jordanhill.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the right hon. Member to my letter sent to the chairman of the board of governors of Jordanhill college on 24 September 1986. I am arranging for a copy of this letter, which is as follows, to be placed in the Library of the House.

New St. Andrew's House

24 September 1986

Dear Mr. Brown,

I was glad to have the opportunity to meet you and your colleagues on 5 September and to hear at first hand the reasons for the College's opposition to the ending of pre-service training for physical education teachers at Jordanhill. I have also seen your letter of 15 September.

In conjunction with my officials, I have considered carefully the various points which you have raised. However, I must say that I remain of the view that the decision which I announced to the House of Commons on 17 July is soundly based.

I should nevertheless like to clarify a number of aspects in the light of our discussion. In the short term the retention of PE teacher training at both sites might seem to provide a relatively easy option, both in geographical terms and to avoid an unpalatable outcome to one of the existing specialist units. But I am convinced that such a course of action would be mistaken, having regard to the educational implications in the longer term. I am satisfied that it is in the wider interests of Scottish education as a whole for a single, national centre for physical education to be established in order to develop a centre of excellence in the full sense of the term. I do not believe that the same excellence and scope for professional innovation across the range of related fields can be secured at two centres in a country of Scotland's size.

It seems to me that only by seeking to create a single establishment can the necessary scale of operation be achieved in order to ensure that the range of course options is suitably rich and the specialist support services sufficiently broad. In management terms, moreover, two specialist centres could exacerbate the difficulties which can arise—and are being experienced, at present—from fluctuations in the demand for teachers in a single secondary subject. Against that background I have had to make a choice between the two current providers and I have concluded on balance that the Dunfermline site offers the more promising professional climate for meeting the training needs of male and female PE teachers and generally for realising the Government's aspirations in this particular field of education. I must emphasise that it has been educational considerations that have had most weight in reaching this conclusion.

I am aware that the Scottish Sports Council had expressed an interest in moving to Cramond if the Dunfermline campus became available. However, it is by no means certain that their accommodation requirements could be satisfactorily met without additional capital expenditure, if PE and other training continued to be provided and office accommodation was required to support the academic and other staff based at the campus. It is certainly my expectation that as part of the exercise to dispose of surplus accommodation at the colleges of education, the views of the Council will be sought on the possible future use of specialist PE facilities by the SSC itself and by individual sporting bodies in Scotland.

The importance of in-service provision for physical education, with an appropriate specialist input, in the West of Scotland is fully recognised. Yet I understand that academic staff from Dunfermline currently provide school-based in-service training extensively in the West of Scotland, including Strathclyde. The working party established to take matters forward will be considering how to meet the wide spectrum of in-service training needs for PE teachers in the West of Scotland most effectively under the new arrangements. Their thinking will, of course, have to take account of authorities' overall in-service requirements.

On the integration of PE students in the merged college in the East, it is easier to mix socially with other students on a single campus, although even on that basis the highly specialist nature of PE training inevitably restricts the scope for shared teaching experiences. By merging the resources of Moray House and Dunfermline, however, I would expect it to be possible to provide an academic teaching input no less comprehensive than that which is currently available at Jordanhill.

I realise that by confirming my original decision this letter will come as a deep disappointment to the College. I acknowledge the contribution which SSPE has made over the years but change is needed for the future. I hope that you and your colleagues will now work constructively with other members of the working party to ensure that the detail arrangements are in the best interests of existing students at both sites and of Scottish education as a whole.

Yours sincerely

Malcolm Rifkind

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has now concluded his financial appraisal of his proposal to discontinue the training of physical education teachers at Jordanhill; and if he will give details of the result.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the right hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply of 3 November 1986, at columns 225-26, to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mr. Craigen).

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has sent to the National Coaching Foundation which has informed him that the Scottish school of physical education, Jordanhill, has been designated a national coaching centre; and whether he will abandon his proposal to discontinue the training of physical education teachers at Jordanhill.

Mr. Rifkind: The National Coaching Foundation was aware of my decision to centralise PE teacher training in Scotland when it announced its network of national coaching centres. My Department has pointed out that the coaching input from academic staff at Jordanhill may be in doubt once secondary PE training ceases there.

I see no reason to depart from my decisions on the future of PE teacher training.

Electricity Supply

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much electricity the South of Scotland Electricity Board supplies to the national grid.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland electricity board that the board supplied to the national grid in the year 1985-86 24,518 gigawatt/hours of electricity of which 3,002 gigawatt/hours were supplied to the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board and 2,084 gigawatt hours to the Central Electricity Generating Board.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Expenditure (London)

13. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average change in expenditure on National Health Service hospital and community health services between 1980-81 and 1985-86, as measured in terms of input volume by (a) Greater London health authorities in total and (b) inner London health authorities in total.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information requested is not available. It would not be appropriate to apply input volume measures to health authority expenditure at district level as these measures reflect centrally assessed movements in NHS pay and prices, and local expenditure can differ substantially from the national average.

Bolton General Hospital

14. Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the current situation on funding for phase I of the Bolton general hospital development.

Mrs. Currie: Building of phase I of Bolton general hospital will start, as planned, in September 1989. Associated capital funds have been earmarked for this. Discussions on the funding of running costs as from 1993, when the new hospital will be commissioned are continuing between the north western regional health authority and Bolton district health authority.

Computerisation

18. Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how the computerisation within his Department is progressing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: The social security computerisation programme, which is the largest in Europe, is making good progress. The local office micro project is already in 85 per cent. of local offices and will be complete this summer. The terminal replacement and inquiry system giving immediate on-line access between unemployment benefit offices and the mainframe computers at Reading and Livingston is already in two thirds of unemployment offices and will be completed by October. The local office project is well underway.

AIDS

19. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to advertise in the regional press in campaigning against AIDS.

Mr. Newton: We are considering an increasing use of the regional press in the future stages of the campaign.

34. Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to ensure complete subtitling for AIDS publicity capaign.

Mr. Newton: We are urgently examining ways of ensuring that the campaign messages about AIDS are effectively communicated to those who, for whatever reason, may have experienced some difficulty in receiving them.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department took to ensure that deaf people, including those whose first or preferential language is British sign language, were reached by television announcements about AIDS; and what reply was given to the British Deaf Association's application for a grant to produce an AIDS video in sign language.

Mr. Newton: The Government have offered the British Deaf Association an initial grant of £25,000 towards the production cost of a sign language video giving information about AIDS, which is also to be shown on television. In addition, on 1 March the BBC TV programme "See hear" and broadcasting support services jointly launched our National Advisory Service for the deaf on AIDS. The service uses Vistel, the number of which is listed on Ceefax, Oracle and 4 Tel.

Some independent Television programmes on AIDS have been subtitled on Oracle and consideration is being given to a subtitled return of the ITV "First AIDS" programme.

Further proposals from the British Deaf Association for a network of volunteer trainers and for counsellors and befrienders for AIDS sufferers with hearing impairment are currently being considered by the Department.

Home Insulation

20. Mr. Jim Callaghan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to maintain a system of special grants for home insulation; and if he will make a statement.

22. Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to continue the system of single payment grants for home insulation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: Single payments of supplementary benefit may currently be made to cover the cost of draughtproofing materials. We have made it clear our intention to make suitable alternative arrangements before the current system of single payments ends in April 1988. Discussions on this are currently taking place between the Government Departments concerned.

Leicester Royal Infirmary

21. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will consider the allocation of additional funds to the Trent regional health authority to modernise the older wards at Leicester royal infirmary.

Mrs. Currie: In the financial year starting on 1 April, Trent regional health authority will receive increases of over £55 million on this year's £901 million revenue allocation and £3·6 million on this year's [£59 million] capital allocation—respectively 6·3 per cent. and 6·6 per cent. increases. Capital and revenue allocations to districts are a matter for the regional health authority. It is for the authorities to decide on priorities for capital expenditure.

Cervical Cancer Screening

23. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will extend payment to doctors for annual cervical cancer screening for women in the 25 to 35 years age group.

Mrs. Currie: The general medical services for which GPs are remunerated out of the generality of their fees and allowances already include the screening of all women of any age who are at risk.

GPs receive an item of service payment for screening women aged 35 and over as an incentive to them to persuade this age group to have regular smears, because 94 per cent. of deaths from cervical cancer occur in these women, who are generally less likely than younger women to come forward for screening of their own accord.

Pensions

24. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the extent to which pensions have kept pace with inflation since 1979.

Mr. Major: The level of retirement pension prevailing for most of 1979 was determined by the uprating of social security benefits in November 1978. Between November 1978 and July 1986 (the latest uprating) the retail price index rose by 90 per cent. and the state retirement pension rose by 98·5 per cent. for a single person and 98·6 per cent. for a married couple.

Dental Charges

25. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any current plans to review dental charges.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's statement to the House on Tuesday 3 March 1987.

Pensioners (Income)

26. Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the change in pensioners' average income over the period 1979 to 1985; and how this compares with that from 1974 to 1979.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for High Peak (Mr. Hawkins) on 2 March at column 497.

Severe Weather Payments

27. Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he proposes to make any further changes regarding payment of the severe weather heating allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) on 3 February at column 557.

32. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications for the extra heating allowance for cold weather have been received; and how many people have received payment.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Midlothian (Mr. Eadie) and the hon. Member for Thurrock (Dr. McDonald) earlier today.

North Western Regional Health Authority (Waiting Lists)

28. Mr. Hind asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how waiting lists have changed in the North Western regional health authority since 1979.

Mr. Newton: At 31 March 1986, the latest date for which figures are available centrally, there were 60,242 cases awaiting admission to National Health Service hospitals in the North Western regional health authority. The corresponding figure for 31 March 1979 was 77,368. This represents a reduction of 22 per cent. The proportion waiting more than one year has declined from 28 per cent. to 23 per cent. of all cases.

39. Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement on the allocation of the waiting list fund within the North Western health region.

Mr. Newton: North Western regional health authority has been allocated £2·295 million from the waiting list fund for 1987-88, which will enable an additional 14,600 patients from the waiting list to be treated through 48 separate projects.

Medical Secretaries

29. Dame Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he intends to take to improve the morale and reduce the number of resignations of medical secretaries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: A working party set up by the chief medical officer has recently examined the secretarial and support services for hospital medical staff and made a number of recommendations. Its report has been sent to health authorities, with a view to encouraging them to look at ways of improving the working environment and career structure of medical secretaries.

Breast Cancer Screening

30. Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is prepared to make a further announcement on breast cancer screening.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend's statement on health developments in cancer screening on 25 February at columns 271-72.

Under-Fives

31. Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what initiatives his Department has undertaken directed specifically at under-fives since November 1986.

Mrs. Currie: My hon. Friend the Minister for Health, in his reply to my right hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mr. Galley) on 12 December 1986 at column 284, announced the Government's plans to allocate an extra £550,000 in 1987-88 to help families with pre-school children. Up to £400,000 of this sum would be available in the form of tapering grants to help projects, currently funded under the under-fives initiative, secure alternative funds from statutory or other sources after 31 March 1987. The balance would be used to set up a scheme under which selected national voluntary bodies active in the under-fives field would be able to give small capital grants to local groups.

Over-80s (Pension)

33. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to seek to bring the over-80s into the state retirement pension scheme.

Mr. Major: People aged over 80 are not excluded from the state retirement pension scheme. Contributory pensions are payable for life, and non-contributory pensions are payable to those people over 80 who either have no entitlement to a contributory penson or whose rate of pension is below the level of the over-80s non-contributory pension. Eligibility for this non-contributory benefit is based on a residence test. There are no plans to alter these arrangements.

Pensioners (Single Payments)

35. Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners on supplementary benefit are ineligible for single payments because they possess £500.

Mr. Major: The latest available information comes from the November 1984 annual statistical inquiry which shows that about 560,000 supplementary pensioners had capital over £500. However, claimants who have savings over £500 are not necessarily excluded from single payments as part payments can be made for the difference between the cost of the item and the amount of capital in excess of £500.

Unisex Annuities

36. Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the proposed requirement for unisex annuities.

Mr. Major: We published draft regulations on 17 December 1986 which included a requirement on insurers to offer men and women on equal terms the annuities that will correspond to the state additional pension for people with personal or money purchase ocupational pensions. Comments on this proposal range from strong support to equally strong criticism.

Trent (Elderly Person)

37. Mr. Duffy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that among the principal objectives of the Trent regional strategic plan the additional funding for services for the elderly will be available to meet the 1993-94 target; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Trent regional health authority's strategic plan was approved by Ministers in 1986 on the basis that its objectives could be met within the long term resource assumptions issued to authorities and that it was therefore affordable. The funds that we have made available to Trent since 1984, together with the region's own cost improvement programme, have exceeded the average annual growth rates in resources on which the plan was based. The regional health authority is closely monitoring annual progress towards the plan's strategic aims to assess what action is needed in the light of that progress and of any changes in circumstances.

Sexually Transmitted Diseases

38. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to meet the increased demands for treatment in clinics dealing with sexually transmitted diseases following the Government's recent AIDS campaign.

Mr. Newton: It is for health authorities to allocate resources among their various health-care programmes in the light of local circumstances. On 23 December 1986 my right hon. Friend wrote to all district health authority chairmen stressing the importance which we attach to these services being provided with adequate resources, and additional allocations of money for services connected with AIDS have been made to the three health regions likely to be experiencing the greatest pressure.

Child Care and Family Services

40. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what response he has received to his White Paper "The Law on Child Care and Family Services."

Mrs. Currie: The White Paper which sets out the Government's intention for legislation on child care and family services has been generally well received. The proposals take account of the recommendations of the report of the working party on child care law, which was issued as a consultative document, and the many comments received. The proposals will involve a major overhaul of child care law in order to provide a clearer and fairer framework for the provision of child care services and the protection of children at risk of harm.

Amongst the key points are a positive statement of the role of local authorities in promoting the care and upbringing of children within their families, which will generally be in the child's interest; for children looked after under voluntary arrangements an emphasis on partnership between parents and local authorities in caring for the child; and improved court processes, including new rights for parents and relatives, in the interest of a better outcome for the child.

Hospital Waiting Lists

41. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he takes to monitor the efficiency of previous measures taken to reduce hospital waiting lists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Before the launch of the current three year initiative, waiting lists and times were discussed with some regional health authorities as part of the annual review process. As with all other subjects considered in these reviews, regions might be required to take specific action which would be followed up by the National Health Service management board as a matter of course.

Social Fund

42. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether each local office will have a budget for the social fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: We intend to issue separate budgets to individual local social security offices for social fund payments (other than those for maternity and funeral expenses). Decisions on the size of such budgets, and of the fund as a whole, will be taken nearer the time of the fund's full introduction in April 1988.

Liable Relative Officers (Interviews)

43. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider changing the range of questions asked by liable relative officers in interviews.

Mr. Lyell: The possibility of introducing a postal inquiry form, to filter out those cases where an interview is not necessary, is being considered. This should reduce the number of interviews by liable relative officers, thus saving time for claimants and the Department.

Disabled People

44. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now state the outcome of the discussions he has held with bodies representing local authorities with regard to the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986, and the Government's latest timetable for the full implementation of the Act.

Mr. Major: I met the local authority associations on 24 February to discuss implementation of the Act. At the meeting it was agreed that sections 9 and 10 will be brought into effect on 1 April. The local authority associations expressed concern about the possible resource implications of sections 4 and 8, and I shall be writing to them shortly about that. I hope that it will be possible to implement those sections too on 1 April. We also expect to implement section 11 during 1987.

The resource implications of sections 5 and 6 of the Act, which cover disabled school-leavers, were also discussed at the meeting with the associations. It was agreed that urgent discussions between officials from the associations and the Department should take place to estimate those resource implications more accurately with a view to a further meeting between the associations and myself in May.

It was also agreed that there should be discussions at official level to make more realistic estimates of the costs of sections 3 and 7 of the Act and that progress in these discussions will be reviewed at the meeting in May.

It is not possible to announce a timetable for full implementation of the Act. The discussions that are proceeding at official level with the local authority associations will enable us to estimate more precisely the resource implications of the various sections of the Act. This should help to make progress towards establishing such a timetable.

Mortgage Interest Payments

45. Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to amend the regulations which restrict payment of mortgage interest in the first weeks of unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: We are proposing to amend the regulation, which provides for a disregard in supplementary benefit assessments on income received from an insurance policy taken out to protect mortgage interest repayments. Our intention was that one half of any such income should be disregarded, but, as drafted, the regulation provides for the disregard of an amount equivalent to the full interest. This amendment will be included in the uprating regulation for the supplementary benefit residential care and nursing homes limits. We have no plans to make any further changes to the regulations covering the amount of mortgage interest included in supplementary benefit.

Nurses (Pay)

46. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on nurses' pay.

Mr. Newton: The Department has received approximately 150 letters about nurses' pay since last November. It is, of course, for the independent Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine to make recommendations to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on the remuneration of those groups of staff within its remit.

Local Authority Expenditure

47. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on the effects on social services programmes of Government policies which constrain local authority expenditure.

Mr. Newton: We have identified about 70 such representations from right hon. and hon. Members, local authorities and other interests in the last six months. In the rate support grant settlement each year the Government set national indicative figures for spending on individual local authority services. The figure for personal social services takes account of demographic and other pressures. For 1987-88 an extra 1 per cent. has been allowed for the development of community care policies. It is, however, for each local authority to decide what to spend on personal social services and the degree of priority this should be given against other areas of expenditure.

Disabled Persons (Single Payments)

48. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase the assistance from single payments for furniture for disabled persons being resettled in the community.

Mr. Major: We have no plans to make changes to the single payments furniture rules which already contain special protection for supplementary benefit claimants who are chronically sick or mentally or physically disabled.

Nurses and Auxiliaries

49. Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the present number of untrained nursing aides and auxiliaries at present employed in the National Health Service; if he includes this category within the total figures issued by his Department for nurses employed; and what steps his Department is taking to protect the professional and legal status attaching to the title of nurse.

Mr. Newton: The whole-time equivalent number of National Health Service staff directly employed as nursing auxiliaries, nursing assistants and other unqualified nursing staff was 91,600 in England at 30 September 1985 (the latest date for which such detail is available). This figure excludes nurse learners undertaking basic nurse training and those undertaking post-basic training such as midwifery, health visiting and district nursing.

These staff are normally included by the Department in the presentation of figures relating to total nursing and midwifery staff.

The professional and legal status attaching to the title of nurse is covered by sections 10 to 14 of the Nurses, Midwives and Health Visitors Act 1979.

AIDS (Haemophiliacs)

50. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received from the Haemophilia Society about haemophiliacs who are AIDS victims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Haemophilia Society has recently made representations about provision of HIV counselling for haemophiliac children attending Birmingham children's hospital. In 1987-88 we are allocating £16,000 to the West Midlands regional health authority for counselling at the Birmingham haemophilia centre, part of which is based at the children's hospital.

Social Fund

51. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether those appealing against a refusal of assistance from the social fund will have a right to an oral hearing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Decisions on payments from the social fund for maternity and funeral expenses will be subject to the normal appeal procedures of the social security adjudication system, and claimants wishing to appeal will have a right to an oral hearing by a social security appeal tribunal. Those who are dissatisfied with decisions about other payments from the fund will have a right of review, in the first instance by local management, and will be given the opportunity at that stage of an interview at which to discuss their case.

Speech Therapy (Northern Region)

52. Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with the Northern regional health authority about the provision of speech therapy services in the northern region.

Mr. Newton: None. The provision of speech therapy services is a matter for individual health authorities to determine in the light of their judgment of priorities and available resources.

Wexham Park Hospital

53. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what the capital cost of Wexham park hospital has been to date.

Mrs. Currie: Wexham park hospital was originally built in 1952. A major programme of redevelopment commenced in 1979 aimed at developing the hospital as one of East Berkshire's two main district general hospitals. From 1979 to date capital expenditure at Wexham park hospital has been £21·5 million, with a further £2·5 million remaining to be spent over the next two years.

Leicestershire (Hospital Closures)

54. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning plans for the closure of hospitals in the county of Leicestershire.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities routinely inform the Department when they are consulting on a proposal to close a hospital. The Department has been advised of the following such consultation exercises in Leicestershire:

Kibworth Hall hospital for mentally handicapped people
Glengate hospital for mentally handicapped people

The hon. and learned Member may wish to contact the chairman of Leicestershire health authority for fuller details of the proposals listed and for information on any proposals which are not yet subject to public consultation.

Maternity Allowances

55. Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase his Department's publicity effort in relation to the changes in maternity allowances which come into force on 6 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: Yes. Further advertising in the national and regional press and in women's magazines is planned on the maternity changes over the coming weeks. At the same time a new poster will appear in post offices, antenatal clinics and social security offices, with revised versions of DHSS leaflets also available at the same outlets.

South Birmingham Health Authority

56. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total amount of capital investment announced by his Department for expenditure in the South Birmingham health authority.

Mr. Newton: Allocations to individual health authorities are a matter for the regional health authority. I understand, however, that some £37 million has been allocated to the South Birmingham health authority in the West Midlands regional health authority's operational capital programme over the period 1986-87 to 1993-94. This includes provision for the replacement of the Birmingham accident hospital. My hon. Friend may also wish to be aware that the capital allocation to the West Midlands regional health authority for the years 1986-87 and 1987-88 have been the highest in the country at some £82 million and £88 million respectively.

St. James's Hospital, Balham

57. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with the Wandsworth health authority as to supplies of bedding at St. James's hospital, Balham, SW12.

Mrs. Currie: None. This is a matter wholly for Wandsworth health authority.

Hospital Projects

58. Mr. Dicks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many major hospital projects in England are due to be completed in the next three years.

Mrs. Currie: In England over 100 health building schemes each costing over £1 million are due for completion in the next three years, at a local cost of about £700 million. A list is in the Library.

South East Thames (Hospital Waiting Lists)

59. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to seek to reduce hospital waiting lists in the south-east Thames health region.

Mr. Newton: In July 1986 my right hon. Friend asked the chairman of regional health authorities to review waiting lists within their districts, and to report on current measures to reduce waiting lists and times and proposals for future action within existing resources. In November last year regions were asked to submit bids against the £50 million waiting list fund for 1987-88 and 1988-89 established to assist progress to this end. Details of the first year's allocation of £25 million were announced by my right hon. Friend on 17 February.

South East Thames regional health authority will receive £2·04 million in 1987-88. This will allow hospitals in the region to treat an additional 11,300 waiting list cases through 31 separate projects. These will include 830 extra joint replacements and 808 extra cataract operations. This is in addition to measures already being taken to reduce waiting lists from within existing resources.

West Midlands Health Region (Waiting List Fund)

60. Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is able to make a statement on the allocation of the waiting list fund within the west midlands health region.

Mr. Newton: West Midlands regional health authority is to receive £2·88 million from the waiting list fund in 1987-88. The region is still negotiating with districts to achieve the most cost-effective use of the money and only £1·207 million has as yet been allocated to specific projects. The amount already allocated will enable hospitals in the region to treat an additional 4,500 waiting list cases through 22 separate projects.

Housing Benefit (Rates)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of people now in receipt of housing benefit for the full amount of their domestic rates.

Mr. Lyell: It is estimated that in autumn 1985 the total number of people receiving housing benefit for the full amount of their domestic rates was 3·3 million.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, following his statement of 23 June 1986 on invalid care allowance, Official Report, column 21, how many successful invalid care allowance claims require recovery action because of the overlapping benefit rule; and, of these, how many involved supplementary benefit.

Mr. Major: None; but to date arrears of invalid care allowance have been abated in some 8,000 cases on account of other social secrity benefits paid to or for the claimant. In about 800 cases the other benefit was supplementary benefit.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, following his statement of 23 June 1986 on invalid care allowance, Official Report, column 21, how long it will take to clear the backlog of invalid care allowance claims.

Mr. Major: To date about half the invalid care allowance claims received from married women have been decided. We estimate that the remainder will be cleared within the next 18 weeks.

Cervical and Breast Cancer

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many laser treatment centres for the treatment of cervical cancer there are in England and Wales; how many patients those centres have treated in the last five years for which figures are available; and what plans he has to increase provision of such centres.

Mrs. Currie: The information is not available centrally. Lasers are one of a range of treatment options for pre-malignancies of the cervix and the provision of such treatment is a matter for individual health authorities.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time for women in England and Wales who have tests for cervical cancer to receive details of the test at the latest date.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally in the form requested.

Our target for laboratories is that they should hold no more than one month's work. Last month 157 Districts in England reported that they were meeting that target. Where backlogs do exist they are being tackled mainly by the recruitment and training of more staff.

Cervical cancer screening in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women have died from cervical cancer in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside in each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table.

Number of deaths registered to usual residents of (a) Liverpool Metropolitan District and (b) Merseyside Metropolitan County, with underlying cause of death as malignant neoplasm of cervix uteri (ICD(9)[1] 180) 1979-85

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women have died from cancer of the breast in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside in each of the past 10 years.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time for women in England and Wales who have had tests for breast cancer to be informed of the tests at the latest date.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many tests for cervical cancer have been made on women in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside in each year since 1979;

(2) if he will make a statement on the facilities provided for the screening of cancer of the breast at (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement on the facilities for screening of cervical cancer in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will make a statement on the facilities provided for the detection of cancer of the breast in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside; and if he will make a statement;

(5) how much has been spent by the National Health Service on cervical cancer in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside in each of the past five years;

(6) how much has been spent by the National Health Service on the screening of cancer of the breast in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside in each of the past five years;

(7) what in the average waiting time of women in Liverpool who have had tests for cervical cancer to receive details of the test; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Residential Homes

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce legislation to bring three-bed residential and nursing homes within the existing statutory inspection procedures; to what extent the current review of registration arrangements will take account of such homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Nursing homes with three patients already have to be registered with district health authorities and are inspected by them. The registration and inspection of residential care homes with three or fewer residents will be considered as we take stock of the system in the light of current studies involving residential care.

Muscular Dystrophy

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average life expectancy of children with muscular dystrophy.

Mr. Major: Muscular dystrophy is not a single disorder and the various types are differentiated by mode of inheritance, age of onset, distribution of weakness and rate of deterioration. While in Duchenne muscular dystrophy, the commonest, death usually occurs from respiratory infection by the age of 20, and in Becker muscular dystrophy death is likely in middle age, average life expectancy does not provide a prognosis in the individual case. There are five other, even less common forms of muscular dystrophy which may present in childhood.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children are currently suffering from muscular dystrophy; and if he has been given any information on the proportion of these whose arms are too weak for them to propel their own wheelchair.

Mr. Major: There is no exact information on the number of children currently suffering from muscular dystrophy. There are probably 1,300 to 1,500 boys and young men with Duchenne muscular dystrophy in England and Wales. By the age of 10-12 most sufferers are using a wheelchair. No information is available as to the proportion of children with muscular dystrophy who are unable to propel their own wheelchairs.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has made any estimate of the cost of providing all children who could benefit from it with dual purpose powered wheelchairs.

Mr. Major: We have no central records to indicate how many children could benefit from dual purpose powered wheelchairs and therefore an estimate of cost has not been possible.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the average cost per wheelchair provided by his Department over the last 10 years.

Mr. Major: Since the Department supplies a wide variety of wheelchairs, at greatly differing prices, an average cost figure would not be helpful. The average purchase prices, excluding administrative costs, of four typical models of non-powered wheelchairs and one typical powered wheelchair over the last ten years are as follows:

Year	non-powered £	powered £
1978	80·32	223·00
1979	94·85	295·00
1980	101·44	340·00
1981	117·43	364·00
1982	111·37	None purchased
1983	115·86	380·00
1984	110·24	437·00
1985	118·43	458·00
1986	117·79	466·00
1987	129·72	468·00

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current cost of the wheelchair service; and for how many people it provides wheelchairs.

Mr. Major: The current annual budget for the purchase and maintenance of wheelchairs, excluding administrative costs, is a little under £27 million. It is estimated that at 31 December 1986 there were 435,000 people making use of the service.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to make a decision on the recommendation of the McColl report that there should be dual purpose powered wheelchairs.

Mr. Major: I am unable usefully to add to my reply to the right hon. Member on 29 January at column 370 when I indicated that we are still considering this major issue. I will announce our conclusions as soon as they are reached.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost of a dual purpose powered wheelchair for a child; and what is the expected number of years usage such a chair would provide.

Mr. Major: Wheelchair manufacturers' catalogues indicate that the retail cost of a dual purpose powered wheelchair for a child ranges between £800 and £3,000, largely depending on the degree of sophistication that is built into the wheelchair. The life of such a wheelchair is heavily dependent on the nature of its use and the age and development of the child, but we would expect that typically such equipment, with adequate maintenance, would remain serviceable for between three and five years.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the Muscular Dystrophy Society urging the provision of dual purpose powered wheelchairs; and what response he made.

Mr. Major: The Muscular Dystrophy Group submitted a detailed response to the McColl report immediately following its publication. Its view, that the recommendation to provide dual purpose powered chairs should be implemented as a matter of urgency, has since been repeated in a number of letters received from local branches of the Group. In addition, on 7 May 1986, my predecessor the Minister for Health accepted a petition from Sir Richard Attenborough, the president of the group, in support of this request.

I have advised the Muscular Dystrophy Group, as I have advised other organisations anxious to see the provision of dual purpose powered chairs, that we are still considering this major issue in the context of decisions on other important aspects of the artificial limb and appliance centre services raised by the McColl report.

Artificial Limbs and Appliances

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current cost of artificial limb and appliance centres; and for how many people they provide appliances.

Mr. Major: The estimated cost in 1986-87 of services provided through the artificial limb and appliance centres is £82·9 million. This includes the cost of artificial limbs and appliances, wheelchairs and administration costs. Artificial limb and appliance centres provide appliances to war pensioners, of whom almost 13,000 currently have an appliance on issue.

South Manchester Health Authority (Vice-Chairman)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details including home addresses of all candidates who were considered for the post of vice-chairman of the South Manchester health authority; and if he considered any candidate for the vice chairmanship of the South Manchester health authority resident in south Manchester.

Mrs. Currie: This information is not held centrally. Responsibility for electing one of their number as vice-chairman, lies with the chairman and members of a health authority. The hon. Member may therefore wish to seek this information from the South Manchester health authority.

Christie Hospital, Manchester

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on present and future funding plans for Christie hospital, Manchester.

Mrs. Currie: The funding of the Christie hospital is a matter for the South Manchester health authority to consider in conjunction with the North Western regional health authority. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 4 March at column 625 which gave details of additional funding for the Christie hospital.

Maternity Payments

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Peckham claimed maternity grant for each of the years 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Lyell: Information is not available in the precise form requested.

The Peckham constituency is covered by the Department's local offices at Kennington Park and Peckham although their boundaries are not conterminous with the constituency. The numbers of claims for maternity grant received at those local offices were as follows:

	Kennington Park	Peckham
1982	[1]304	[2]
1983	663	[2]
1984	637	2,097
1985	672	1,845
1986	731	1,958

[1] 1982 figure relates only to claims with an expected/actual date of confinement of 4 July 1982 or later. No earlier records held.
[2] Records for 1982 and 1983 are not available.

Benefit Claims

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the backlog of claims at the (a) Highgate, (b) Finsbury Park and (c) Arcola street offices of his Department in January 1986, July 1986 and January 1987.

Mr. Lyell: The table sets out the information requested about outstanding claims to social security benefits.

Benefit	14 January 1986	27 July 1986	13 January 1987
(a) Highgate
Sickness/Invalidity	201	207	242

Spinal Injury Beds

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many spinal injury beds are available at National Health Service hospitals in each of the four Thames regional hospital authorities in the current year; and what are the planned facilities for 1990.

Mrs. Currie: The spinal injuries unit at the Royal National Orthopaedic hospital provides 20 beds to all four Thames regions as a supra-regional service. There are no plans at present to alter this number.

Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital, Stanmore

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many beds for orthopaedic patients will be lost as a result of the proposed closure of the Royal National Orthopaedic hospital at Stanmore;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the proposed closure of the Royal National Orthopaedic hospital at Stanmore.

Mrs. Currie: There are no proposals to close the Royal National Orthopaedic hospital. I would confirm previous assurances given by this Government that proposals for any substantial change to services at Stanmore will be subject to a final decision by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State.

The Royal National Orthopaedic hospital at Stanmore is currently the subject of an options appraisal by Bloomsbury health authority which is intended to clarify the future role of the hospital and consider its most appropriate location.

So far this year we have received four letters from members of the public referred by hon. Members, and three letters direct from the public, which have anticipated the results of this options appraisal.

Southend General Hospital (Radiotherapy Unit)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many letters he has now received from the public about the proposal by the North East Thames regional health authority to close the radiotherapy unit in Southend general hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have received 15 letters which have been referred by hon. Members together with about 670 letters direct from members of the general public.

NHS Management

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list (a) regional and district health authorities which have employed management consultants for each year since 1979, (b) the reasons given for the employment of management consultants by those health authorities, (c) the names of the management consultants employed by those health authorities and (d) the fees charged by the management consultants employed by those health authorities;

(2) if he will list regional and district health authorities which have sought help from university or polytechnic schools of management in rationalising services; which schools of management have been used; and what fees have been paid to them for each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The employment of management consultants and schools of management is a matter for individual health authorities. Details of such employment and the expenditure consequently incurred are not routinely collected centrally.

Ophthalmic Surgery (Bolton)

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate the length of waiting time for ophthalmic surgery in Bolton; and how this compares with waiting time for such treatment on a regional or national basis.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member all the information he seeks. For cases treated in 1984, the latest year for which information is available centrally, the estimated median interval between the date a patient was placed on the waiting list and the date of admission to ophthalmology beds in NHS hospitals in North Western regional health authority area and in England was 13 weeks and 11 weeks respectively. The numbers in the central data sample are too small for reliable estimates to be made below regional level. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Bolton district health authority for the information he requires.

Health Education Council (Advisory Groups)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the proposed disbandment of the Health Education Council's advisory groups;

(2) if he will make a statement on the proposed abolition of the joint advisory committee on nutritional education.

Mr. Newton: The joint advisory committee on nutrition education, like the other advisory committees and groups set up by the Health Education Council, will automatically cease to exist when the council comes to an end on 31 March. It will be for the new Health Education Authority to determine the source of any specialist professional advice it may require.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he proposes to make any changes in the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations.

Mr. Major: We propose to make three small changes in the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations dealing with claimants in residential care and nursing homes.

Since the beginning of the supplementary benefit scheme the policy has been that all charges levied by nursing and residential care home owners or proprietors should be treated together as the board and lodging charge. Recent legal advice has however cast doubts on this long-standing interpretation. We propose, therefore, to amend the regulations to give clear effect to the original policy intention that people in residential care and nursing homes should not be entitled to additional requirements which relate to items which normal charges may be expected to cover, such as heating, extra baths and laundry. At the same time we propose to amend the regulations to ensure that charges for these items can be included with the board and lodging charge. For claimants who are currently getting these additional requirements there will be transitional protection to safeguard their overall benefit entitlement.

Secondly, we propose to correct an unintended effect in regulation 9(18) of the requirements regulations. This regulation allows transitionally protected claimants an increase in benefit of up to a maximum of £10 to help meet any increase in fees since April 1985. As currently drafted the regulation would allow some claimants to get an increase of more than £10 at the next up-rating. However, at future up-ratings the same claimants would lose that increase and the amount of benefit in payment to them would be reduced. The proposed amendment would restore the original policy intention.

Thirdly, we propose to clarify the supplementary benefit provisions governing local authority residential accommodation set up under the National Health Service Act 1977 so that it more accurately reflects the diversity of provision that local authorities are now making. Regulations will make it clear that the part III rate should only apply to residential accommodation provided by local authorities where full board is available and which is not a hostel.

The social security advisory committee has agreed that the proposed amendments do not need to be referred to them. These amendments will be included in the uprating regulations for the supplementary benefit residential care and nursing home limits which will be laid before the House shortly.

Meningococcal Infections

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list the research projects currently in progress into meningococcal infections;

(2) what plans he has for further research into meningococcal infections.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 11 February 1987, c. 283-4]: On research currently in progress, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 26 February at column 410. The main body for Government-funded biomedical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science. The council is, I understand, being contacted by a team at Edinburgh university researching a possible link between the non-secretion of blood group antigens and susceptibility to bacterial meningitis.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Colour Television Sets

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Lord Privy Seal what television licence fees are payable in respect of the 41 colour television sets in the Palace of Westminster provided by the Department of the Environment.

Mr. Biffen: No licence fees have ever been regarded as payable in respect of these sets.

DEFENCE

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers of entrants to his Department from the ethnic minorities in the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; if he will also list the monitoring procedures used to ascertain the percentage of the work force represented by ethnic minorities and their patterns of promotion; and what are his methods of recruitment of minorities into his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The ethnic origins of new civilian entrants have been surveyed since October 1985. The latest available information for the period up to 5 March 1987 is as follows:

	Number
Total new entrants	10,810
Ethnic origin:
White	7,588
Black/Asian	192
Not stated	3,030

A phased programme of departmental surveys of the ethnic origin of non-industrial civil servants by means of voluntary self-classification is being conducted. By the end of 1986 all non-industrial staff in the county of Avon, the north-west, the east and west midlands, London, the south-east and East Anglia had been surveyed. Consideration is being given to ways of using the data on the ethnic origin of staff in post to monitor promotion.

All departmental recruitment is conducted on the basis of fair and open competition and selection on merit. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Privy Council Office on 20 February (Official Report, Vol. 110, column 882) reporting the arrangements being made to encourage people from the ethnic minorities to apply to the Civil Service.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) to what extent the National Radiological Protection Board will be analysing its figures of death and cancer amongst those who took part in nuclear tests according to the level of the radiation dose received;

(2) how the National Radiological Protection Board decided the size of group to be studied in connection with the nuclear tests of the 1950s and 1960s;

(3) in what ways the National Radiological Protection Board searched for the statistical data to be used in its study of the health of nuclear test veterans; and if there was any appeal for evidence;

(4) if he will explain the term cancer registration used in connection with the study of the health of nuclear test veterans by the National Radiological Protection Board;

(5) which aspects of the health of nuclear veterans are being studied by the National Radiological Protection Board, and why.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This is a matter for the NRPB.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to receive the report of the National Radiological Protection Board on nuclear test veterans; when the report was commissioned; at what date it was then expected to be completed; what further expected dates for completion have been given and when; and what has been the reason for the delay.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: When the NRPB health study was commissioned in October 1983, it was anticipated that it would take about three years to complete. However, the NRPB have now sought more time to do further checks on the data base. Additional work is needed to identify a small proportion (about 10 per cent.) of the study population, which in total now comprises 45,000 names, half participants and half controls. The Board now expect the results to be available toward the end of this year.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many awards have been made to service personnel because they served in areas where nuclear tests were carried out and suffered damage.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any of the civilians who took part in nuclear tests in the 1950s have attempted to seek compensation for injury or death; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A small number of claims have been received but no compensation awards have been made.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Atomic Energy Authority or his Department took out insurance cover for any of the personnel who took part in the nuclear tests of the 1950s and 1960s; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what exposure to ionising radiations was considered to be the maximum consistent with safety at the time of the nuclear tests of the 1950s and 1960s; and what is the corresponding figure today.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The exposure limits used for the United Kingdom Atmospheric Nuclear Weapon Tests were according to the appropriate Medical Research Council Sub-Committee recommendations and were not appreciably different from the current planned special exposure limits defined by the International Commission on Radiological Protection.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many of those who took part in the nuclear tests of the 1950s and 1960s were exposed to ionising radiation at a level higher than that considered at the time to be safe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No personnel serving at any of the tests were exposed to ionising radiation above a level that was considered to be harmful.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has about the number of children with congenital defects born to the children of service personnel who served in areas where nuclear tests were carried out; and how this number compares with the normal incidence of such congenital defects.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 21 April 1986, column 87.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) civilians and (b) forces personnel took part in the nuclear test programme in the 1950s and 1960s; and how many in each category received doses of radiation that were (i) low, (ii) high and (iii) especially high.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Approximately 1,500 civilians and 20,000 United Kingdom Servicemen participated in the test programme. Approximately 15,000 of the 20,000 participants were not exposed to additional radiation at all. Most of those who were exposed to ionising radiation other than natural background, received a radiation dose less than one tenth of the limit prescribed for radiation workers.

No personnel serving at any of the tests were exposed to ionising radiation above a level that was considered harmful.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many awards have been made to widows whose husbands served in areas where nuclear tests were carried out and who suffered damage.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many nuclear weapon tests took place during the 1950s and 1960s; and what were the sizes of the explosions.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A list of the 21 United Kingdom Atmospheric Nuclear Weapon tests carried out between 1952 and 1958, together with the yields, is available in the Library of the House.

Accidental Deaths and Injuries

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, following the completion of the review of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947, he now has available figures for the number of accidental deaths and serious injuries requiring full and formal investigation that occurred in the services since 1957.

Mr. Freeman: No central records are held of the number of such investigations which have been undertaken since 1957.

Service Personnel

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service people have been invalided out of the forces following an accident during each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: During the last five years 1981 to 1985, the latest years for which complete data are available, the following numbers of service personnel were medically discharged principally because of injuries sustained during non-combatant duties:

	Number
1981	56
1982	43
1983	72
1985	177

These figures cover injuries sustained on duty, but exclude self-inflicted injury, assaults and a small number of cases where details of the circumstances are not readily available.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service people have died in each of the last five years for which figures are available as a result of an accident or misadventure.

Mr. Freeman: During the five years 1982 to 1986 the following numbers of service personnel have died in circumstances where the underlying cause of death was injuries received during non-combatant duties:

	Number
1984	58
1985	70
1986	[1]59

These figures cover injuries sustained on duty, but exclude self-inflicted injury, assaults and a small number of cases where details of the circumstances are not readily available.

Accidents (Military Vehicles)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 24 February, Official Report, columns 210-11, how many accidents involving military vehicles in the United Kingdom in 1986 required the hire of civilian equipment to recover the vehicles involved; what was the total cost; how many of those accidents involved dangerous cargoes; if civilian employees involved in military recovery operations are informed of all the possible hazards in undertaking such work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I will answer shortly.

KMS Ltd.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department at any time over the past five years has had contracts with KMS Ltd.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I know of none.

Marconi Ltd.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of inquiries by the serious crime section of the Ministry's police into allegations of serious crime in Marconi Ltd. at Portsmouth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This is not a matter for Ministers.

Procurement Expenditure

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the estimated percentage share of procurement expenditure on equipment purchased from England, Wales and Northern Ireland in the 1986-87 financial year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [pursuant to my answer, 9 March 1987]: Estimates of regional equipment expenditure are only available for completed financial years. Of defence equipment expenditure in 1985-86, it is estimated that 82 per cent. was in England, 2 per cent. in Wales and 1 per cent. in Northern Ireland.

Airborne Early Warning System

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will hold discussions with Plessey about the eventual control of the high technology development as a result of their £1,100 million agreement with Boeing; and whether it will pass to American control.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [pursuant to his reply, 13 January 1987, Official Report, c. 158]: I would refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) on 27 February at columns 459-60.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Investment Programme

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the value in real terms of the housing investment programme for 1987-88 after excluding capital receipts and expressed as a percentage of the housing investment programme for 1978-79.

Mr. Tracey: Because of the success of the right to buy, local authorities can now fund the greater part of their capital expenditure on housing from capital receipts, without needing borrowing approvals. The total planned net capital expenditure on housing in England in 1987-88, after deducting forecast receipts, is £1,959 million, 45 per cent. in real terms of net expenditure in 1978-79.

Local Government Finance (Waltham Forest)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the housing investment programme and the total capital expenditure, respectively, for the London borough of Waltham Forest since 1979.

Mr. Tracey: Housing investment programme allocations and total capital expenditure on housing for the London borough of Waltham Forest since 1979 have been as follows:

£ million

	Allocations	Expenditure
1978-79	12·720	12·678
1979-80	17·046	17·240

[1] the authority's estimate

Since 1981-82 local authorities have been able to increase their capital spending power by making use of their receipts from sales of assets, as well as their HIP allocations.

Radioactive Discharges

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the quantity of liquid and gaseous radioactive discharges in gigabecquerels over the years 1970 to 1986 for the following nuclear installations: (a) Chapelcross, (b) Amersham International plc, and (c) Harwell.

Mr. Waldegrave: Quantities of liquid and gaseous radioactive discharges from 1976 to 1984 for Chapelcross, Amersham International plc, and Harwell are set out in the Department of the Environment Digest of Environmental Pollution and Water Statistics, and associated additional tables. Figures for liquid radioactive discharges are also given for 1970 to 1975. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House. There are no comprehensive tables for gaseous discharges prior to 1976. Figures for 1985 will be contained in the Environmental Statistical Bulletin (87) 3 (Radioactivity) to be published shortly. Figures for 1986 are being compiled.

County Hall, Wakefield

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if the West Yorkshire residuary body has consulted his Department about the bid made by the Wakefield metropolitan district council for the purchase of County hall, Wood street, Wakefield; what percentage of the proceeds will be returned to the ratepayers of the West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the West Yorkshire residuary body has consulted his Department about the bid made by the West Yorkshire police authority for the purchase of County hall, Wood street, Wakefield; what percentage of the proceeds will be returned to the ratepayers of the West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The proposed sale of County hall, Wakefield, is primarily a matter for the residuary body. My Department has not been consulted specifically about the bid made by Wakefield MDC. After deduction of the appropriate fees and costs all the proceeds of any sale will be distributed to the district councils in west Yorkshire on a per capita basis.

Council and Housing Association Tenants

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average current weekly subsidy to council tenants and housing association tenants, respectively, per dwelling, both inclusive and exclusive of housing benefit; and how this compares with the average weekly benefit to owner-occupiers in the form of tax relief on mortgage interest.

Mr. Tracey: For 1986-87 the amount estimated to be paid as housing subsidy and rate fund contributions to local authority housing revenue accounts in England is equivalent on average to £4·20 per dwelling per week. The amount received by local authority and new town tenants as rent rebates is equivalent on average to £8, per dwelling per week. In total these forms of support are equivalent on average to £12·20 per week for each local authority dwelling.

Comparable information cannot be given for housing associations, because subsidy on their schemes is paid in the form of a capital grant, and because statistics are not available of housing benefit paid to housing association tenants.

The relief given on mortgages in 1986-87, including mortgage interest relief at source, is estimated to be equivalent to £6·20 per week for each owner-occupier.

Nuclear Waste Disposal

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to accept for nuclear waste only those sites that are acceptable to the local planning authority and local residents.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is my right hon. Friend's policy that there should be ample opportunity for all interested parties, including the local planning authority and local residents, to make their views known before planning permission is given for a disposal facility for nuclear waste. We have already announced that any planning application from UK Nirex Ltd. for a facility at any of the four sites currently under investigation as a possible site for a disposal facility for low level waste will be called in for my right hon. Friend's own determination, so that there will be a public inquiry under an independent inspector.

Nature Conservation

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to revise his advice to local planning authorities on the subject of nature conservation and planning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer this question shortly.

Home Owners

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many British citizens were buying their own houses on mortgage in 1979; and how many in 1987;

(2) how many British citizens owned their own house in 1979; and how many in 1987.

Mr. Tracey: The proportion of households owning their own homes and buying their homes with a mortgage are estimated from information collected in the annual General Household Survey; the latest results available are for 1984. The figures below are derived from those proportions and from estimates of total households produced by this Department and the Scottish Development Department.

Owner-occupiers: Great Britain million households

	Owning outright	With mortgage
Mid-1979	4·4	5·8
Mid-1984	4·9	7·1

Estimates of how many of those owner-occupiers were British citizens are not readily available. However, from the 1984 Labour Force Survey, it is estimated that at least 96 per cent. of all household heads had British nationality.

CIVIL SERVICE

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he will publish the results of the Civil Service Commission scheme to monitor the departmental recruitment of ethnic minorities.

Mr. Luce: The ethnic monitoring being carried out by the Civil Service Commission is of its own recruitment schemes only. Monitoring of departmental recruitment is being carried out by Departments individually.

The results of the first year of the Commission's monitoring of executive officer recruitment will be made public within the next few months once the candidates covered by this monitoring have passed through the selection process and the analysis of their progress has been completed. The results of the first year's monitoring of other Commission recruitment schemes will be made public in the Civil Service Commissioners' annual report for 1987.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers' Pay and Conditions

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects the consultation on the composition of the advisory committee on teachers' pay to be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how soon he will appoint the chairman and deputy chairman of the advisory committee to advise him on teachers' pay and conditions.

Mrs. Rumbold: The interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions will be set up by the autumn and possibly earlier.

Primary School Closures

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science in respect of how many section 12 orders to close primary schools he has reversed the decision of the local education authority in each of the last four years; what percentage this represents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The table shows the number of proposed primary school closures rejected by my right hon. Friend over the last four years, and the percentage this represents of the total number of primary school closures considered in each year.

Primary school closures

	1983	1984	1985	1986
Rejections	15	13	2	3

GCSE

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to his Department from (a) reports and returns made by district inspectors of Her Majesty's inspectorate, (b) reports and returns made by local education authorities and (c) any other source, as to the adequacy of (i) facilities and resources for in-service training, (ii) training undertaken by teachers on the new syllabi, (iii) training undertaken by teachers and headteachers on techniques and management of in-course assessment and (iv) relevant books and equipment, in each local education authority for the introduction of the general certificate of secondary education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Discussions are being held with GCSE examining groups, LEAs and teachers' associations as part of a monitoring exercise to assess GCSE resource needs and demands on teachers' time. In addition, details provided by LEAs about actual expenditure on books and equipment and on teacher training will be scrutinised to help determine future resource needs and policy developments.

Her Majesty's inspectorate is also monitoring the implementation of the GCSE through (a) its normal programme of school visits; (b) specialist subject visits; (c) termly discussions with LEA officers, inspectors and advisers; and (d) the annual analysis of LEA's expenditure policies.

Her Majesty's inspectorate is also evaluating GCSE in-service teacher training.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to his Department on the work load consequences for teachers in changing to the new general certificate of secondary education; what studies have been undertaken or commissioned on the work load relating to in-course assessment; if he will publish a table showing, for each existing examination board, the number of different general certificate of education O-level or certificate of secondary education syllabi (a) with in-course assessment and (b) without in-course assessment, and the number of children taking examinations under each heading in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The GCSE, and in particular its course work assessment, will make demands on teachers. Such assessment is not new—it had its place in many CSE and some O-level syllabuses—but it will now be more extensive: demands vary between subjects and between syllabuses. Her Majesty's inspectorate is monitoring the work load consequences for teachers as part of its wider GCSE monitoring exercise and discussions with the teachers' associations have also provided valuable information.

Under the previous system, some 20,000 O-level and CSE syllabuses in many hundreds of subject titles were offered by the 20 separate examination boards, and schools were free to choose the ones which best met their needs. The number of GCSE syllabuses is far fewer, but information about individual syllabuses is not held centrally.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to his Department on the extent to which the change from general certificate of education or certificate of secondary education syllabi of different examination boards to the new general certificate of secondary education requires new books and equipment; if he will publish such information as is available to identify the examination boards and subjects for which (a) little replacement or (b) major replacement of books and equipment is considered to be necessary; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The introduction of the GCSE does not require the wholesale replacement of existing textbooks: the need is rather for these to be supplemented and updated over time, in the light of demands of particular subjects and individual syllabuses. These needs will vary from school to school subject to subject, and syllabus to syllabus. The Government have provided substantial resources to ensure that schools are able to purchase additional books and equipment for GCSE courses.

Examinations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing, for each local education authority, the numbers of children taking general certificate of education O-level or certificate of secondary education examinations of each different examination board in the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not available centrally.

Salaries

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much is spent per head of population of each of the metropolitan borough councils on the salaries of (a) teaching staff and (b) other staff, broken down into those categories which are available.

Mr. Rumbold: The amounts spent on salaries per head of the 5 to 24-year-old populations are given in the following table.

Higher Education

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to publish a White Paper on higher education.

Mr. Walden: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 17 February 1987, at column 584.

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what rationalisation of higher education institutions there has been since 1979 to 1987 in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: None within the University of Wales. Responsibility for other higher education institutions rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid-trade Provision

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 26 February, Official Report, column 353, about aid-trade provision, if he will list in the Official Report similar figures for aid-trade provision for the period since 1970, broken down into four-year intervals.

Mr. Eggar: The earliest year for which comparative OECD information is available is 1981. The table, drawn up on the same basis as for my hon. Friend's reply of 26 February, shows figures for 1981, and also gives an annual average figure for the four-year period 1981 to 1984:

Aid used in mixed credits and less concessional tied aid loans as a percentage of gross bilateral aid commitments

Japan	16	11·5
United Kingdom	12	20

Refugee Camps (Beirut)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid has been offered to the refugee camps in Beirut since 1 January.

Mr. Eggar: Most British aid goes through the European Community to which we contribute 20 per cent. Since January this has included a commitment of £650,000 for emergency medical assistance for the camps in Lebanon. The Community is considering a further allocation of some £2 million in response to appeals from various international agencies.

We are also urgently considering our own response to appeals from the United Nations Relief and Works Agency and the International Committee of the Red Cross for their 1987 programmes in Lebanon including emergency operations in the camps.

Developing Countries (Loans)

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for which developing countries, for what amounts, and at which dates respectively, retrospective terms adjustment has converted loans into grants.

Mr. Eggar: The following 21 countries, plus the east African community, have benefited from the policy of retrospective terms adjustment in relation to past aid loans:

	Country	Amount £ million	Date
1	Afghanistan	0·98	13 November 1979
2	Bangladesh	15·67	14 August 1979

[1] India has continued to make aid loan repayments, but receives an equivalent amount of grant aid to help meet the local cost of development projects.

Overseas Aid

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent decisions have been made by the Council of Ministers of the European Economic Commission concerning aid to non-associates.

Mr. Eggar: The 1987 budget of the European Community includes 220 mecu in commitment appropriations and 284 mecu in payment appropriations for the programmes of aid to Asia and Latin America (including the former non-associates programme funded from chapter 93). This includes a new programme to provide compensation for shortfalls in exports earnings from specified agricultural products for the poorest countries in Asia and Latin America. The regulations governing this scheme (known as Compex) were adopted by the Council of Ministers on 27 January.

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the agricultural projects supported by the aid programme in each of the last three years, giving the amount committed, the period for implementation, the nature of the project, and the country concerned, excluding projects financed under the aid and trade provision.

Mr. Eggar: Information to the end of 1985 is given in the ODA document "Projects by Sector — Allocations and Expenditure 1981-85", copies of which are in the Library. Projects in the "Agriculture and Livestock" sector, none of which was financed by the aid and trade provision, are listed on pages 1 to 9; the top half of each page gives allocations (commitments to individual projects) and the bottom half expenditure.

New allocations in 1986 are listed in table 1; increases to existing allocations agreed in 1986 are listed in table 2.

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each project supported by the aid and trade provision since 1979, giving its amount, its nature, its date of approval and the country concerned.

Mr. Eggar: The aid and trade provision projects agreed with recipient countries since 1979 are listed in the following schedule. Details of such projects on which expenditure is still being incurred are now in the Supply Estimates: Table 2 to subhead B2 of the overseas aid vote.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

European Investment Bank (Loans)

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when and why exchange rate cover was withdrawn from European Investment Bank loans;

(2) what has been the impact of the withdrawal of exchange rate cover from European Investment Bank loans; how many businesses benefited from European Investment Bank loans in each of the three years before the Government withdrew exchange rate cover; and how many since cover was withdrawn.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Exchange risk cover was withdrawn from loans provided by the European Investment Bank (EIB) to private sector businesses in the United Kingdom with effect from 18 July 1985, but subject to transitional arrangements for applications which were under consideration at that date. The reasons for doing so were given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont) the then Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry, on 18 July 1985, at column 205, in reply to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard). The number of separate loans provided by the EIB to United Kingdom private sector businesses in each year since 1982 (excluding loans made from new community instrument funds raised by the EC Commission) was as follows:

[1] Number of EIB loans made with exchange risk cover (including loans through intermediaries.

[2] Number of EIB loan commitments made without exchange risk cover.

Withdrawal of exchange risk cover has reduced very significantly the number of loans made to private sector business in the United Kingdom, and has meant that EIB loans are in practice no longer made to United Kingdom small businesses through intermediaries.

Business Loans

Mr. Cabom asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the number of allocations to United Kingdom businesses under global loans for 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986 from EIB own resources and new Community instrument resources;

(2) what was the global amount of financial resources given to British businesses through the EIB own resources and new Community instrument resources for each of the years 1983 to 1986.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information about loans to private sector businesses in the United Kingdom from European Investment Bank (EIB) and New Community Instrument (NCI) resources under the global loan arrangements operated by financial intermediaries is given in the following table:

	(EIB)		(NCI)
	Number of loans	Total amount lent £ million	Number of loans	Total amount lent £ million
1983	33	8·1	131	10·8
1984	29	5·3	65	7·1
1985	73	31·6	37	4·4
1986	6	1·9	—	—

In addition, the EIB also made a larger volume of direct loans to such businesses from its own resources, but not from NCI resources.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the change in the net capital expenditure expressed in 1984 prices, between 1979 and 1984 in the south, defined as the south-east, south-west, East Anglia, and east midlands regions, and in the rest of Great Britain.

Mr. Butcher: The requested information is shown in the following table. The figures relate to investment by manufacturing industry (excluding leased assets).

Net capital expenditure in the South of England and the rest of Great Britain in 1979 and 1984 at 1984 prices

	1979 £ million	1984 £ million	Percentage change
South of England	3,881	3,366	−13
Rest of Great Britain	5,829	4,039	−31

Sources: Annual Census of Production and United Kingdom National Accounts.

Arms Exports (End User Certificates)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will (a) detail the checks that are made to see that the end user certificates issued when arms export licences are granted are adhered to, and (b) list any countries that do not need end user certificates when an arms export licence is granted, explaining in each case why the certificate is not needed.

Mr. Alan Clark: (a) Export licences are not issued unless the Government are satisfied that the end use will be as stated on the application. It is not Government practice to disclose the nature of checks made.

(b) An international import certificate or an end user certificate is required for arms export licences for all destinations where the consignee is not a Government body.

Lonrho plc

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will refer the three opinions of counsel given to the inspectors appointed by the Department of Trade to inquire into the affairs of Lonrho plc to the Attorney-General for further consideration.

Mr. Howard: Opinions of counsel were sought by, and given to, the Director of Public Prosecutions in 1976 and not to the inspectors who conducted the Companies Act inquiries into Lonrho plc. Whether advice given in relation to these inquiries should now receive further consideration is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General.

Shareholders (Statistics)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many British citizens he estimates to have held stocks and shares in 1979; and how many in 1987.

Mr. Howard: Statistics on the number of individual shareholders are not kept by this Department. But it is generally accepted that the number of individual share owners has approximately trebled since 1979.

Life Insurance

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many British citizens he estimates held a life insurance policy in 1979; and how many in 1987.

Mr. Howard: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Schools (Information Technology)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to ensure an increased supply of information technology equipment in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Yes. My Department has made excellent progress towards the introduction and use of information technology equipment in schools and continues to do all it can to support this continuing commitment.

Following the success of the "Micros in Schools" and "Modems in Schools" schemes, which supported the additional purchases of equipment by schools, my Department launched a three-year scheme — "Support for Educational Software"—in October 1985 which aims to ensure that existing hardware in schools is supported by an adequate supply of educational software.

Notwithstanding the success of these schemes it has been found that the provision of IT hardware, including peripheral equipment in schools, is uneven and in certain respects still less extensive than schools need. In order to help counter this shortfall my Department launched a "IT Equipment for Schools" initiative on Monday 9 March. This will make available a further £3·5 million to be spent on IT equipment in schools in the remainder of the current financial year to enable local education authorities to give a modest boost to their existing provision of equipment. This offer of additional funding is available throughout the United Kingdom both to the state and to independent sectors and I hope it will go some way towards enabling the education system to maximise the potential of existing hardware by purchasing printers and disc drives to complement their micro computers, modems and software. Where schools within local education authorities are adequately provided with this equipment, the remaining sums may be devoted to purchase micro computers.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Attorney-General if he will list the numbers of entrants to his Department from the ethnic minorities in the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; if he will also list the monitoring procedures used to ascertain the percentage of the work force represented by ethnic minorities and their patterns of promotion; and what are his methods of recruitment of minorities into the Department.

The Attorney-General: The ethnic origins of new entrants to the Lord Chancellor's Department have been surveyed since October 1985. The latest available information for the period up to September 1986 is as follows:

Total new entrants to the Lord Chancellor's Department in the period 1 October 1985 to September 1986 is 1010:

Ethnic origins	Number
White	680
Black/Asian	50
Not stated	280

A phased programme of departmental surveys of the ethnic origin of non-industrial civil servants by means of voluntary self-classification is being conducted. By the end of 1986 all non-industrial staff in the county of Avon, the north-west, the east and west midlands, London, the south-east and East Anglia had been surveyed. All remaining staff will be surveyed by 1987. Consideration is being given to ways of using the data on the ethnic origin of staff-in-post to monitor promotion.

All departmental recruitment is conducted on the basis of fair and open competition and selection is on merit. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Privy Council Office on 20 February 1987, at columns 880-81, reporting the arrangements being made to encourage people from the ethnic minorities to apply to the Civil Service.

As regards my own Department, the Law Officers' Department, staff come on secondment from other Departments and there are therefore no new entrants to the Civil Service.

Crown Prosecution Units

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Attorney-General if he will detail the 31 Crown prosecution areas in the United Kingdom, giving the number of solicitors working in each unit, the original number of solicitors planned for each unit and any estimated increase in these numbers planned within twelve months.

The Attorney-General: The 31 areas of the Crown prosecution service are as listed, together with the details for each area of the present complement of lawyers; the number of lawyers actually in post; and the planned increase in complement during the next 12 months. For these purposes, the term "lawyers" refers both to barristers and to solicitors.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Attorney-General if he is satisfied with the manpower operations of the Leicester/ Northampton Crown prosecution unit and the London South/Surrey Crown prosecution unit; and whether there are to be specific increases in the number of Crown prosecution solicitors.

The Attorney-General: I am satisfied with the excellent work being done by all the staff, both legal and non-legal, in the two Crown prosecution areas to which my hon. Friend refers. However, there is a significant shortfall of lawyers in both areas, as indicated in my answer to the previous question, and the Director of Public Prosecutions is urgently considering what further steps should be taken to improve the position there and throughout the Crown prosecution service.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will list the numbers of entrants to his Department from the ethnic minorities in the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; if he will also list the monitoring procedures used to ascertain the percentage of the work force represented by ethnic minorities and their patterns of promotion; and what are his methods of recruitment of minorities into his Department.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The ethnic origins of new entrants have been surveyed since October 1985. The latest available information for the period up to 31 December 1986 is as follows:

	Number
Total new entrants to Crown Office and the Procurator Fiscal Service in period 1 October 1985 to 31 December 1986	98
Ethnic Origins
White	89
Black Asian	1
Not stated (non respondents)	8

A phased programme of departmental surveys of the ethnic origin of non-industrial civil servants by means of voluntary self-classification is being conducted. By the end of 1986 all non-industrial staff in the county of Avon, the north-west, the east and west midlands, London, the south-east and East Anglia had been surveyed. All remaining staff will be surveyed by 1988. Consideration is being given to ways of using the data on the ethnic origin of staff-in-post to monitor promotion.

All departmental recruitment is conducted on the basis of fair and open competition and selection is on merit. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Privy Council Office on 20 February 1987 at columns 880-81 reporting the arrangements being made to encourage people from the ethnic minorities to apply to the Civil Service.

Fraud

Mr. Bill Walker asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what advice the Crown Office has given to procurators fiscal in connection with cases of fraud involving company directors.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Procurators fiscal have been advised of the power available to courts under the Companies Acts to make disqualification orders on company directors and others on conviction of an indictable offence which would include a conviction for fraud. This power is now contained in the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986, which came into force on 29 December 1986. No other specific advice has been given in connection with cases of fraud involving company directors.

Legal Aid

Sir Hector Monro asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what assistance procurators fiscal will provide to claimants in relation to criminal legal aid in Scotland after 1 April.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Providing assistance to claimants in relation to criminal legal aid is, in general, not part of the procurator fiscal's function; however, documents issued to accused persons to draw attention to the possibility of legal aid are presently being revised to stress the importance of seeking advice on the matter without delay.

Fox Hunting

42. Mr. Canavan asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland how many prosecutions have taken place over the past year for alleged offences arising from fox hunting.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: So far as I can ascertain, proceedings have been taken against 28 persons for such offences during the past year.

Child Abduction

43. Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Scottish Law Commission report, "Child Abduction" (Cm. 64).

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The Scottish Law Commission's report on child abduction was recently received by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and was published on 12 February. The report makes a number of recommendations for change in both common law and statute relating to the abduction of children, and these are now being considered. The report also points to jurisdictional problems which the Commission considers arise from the provisions of the Child Abduction Act 1984 and which it does not regard as capable of solution by changes confined to Scotland. Full consultation before any conclusions are reached would therefore seem appropriate.

Irresponsible Drivers

44. Mr. Pollock asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland when he met representatives of Scotland's campaign against irresponsible drivers; what subjects were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: I met Mrs. Brydie of Scotland's campaign against irresponsible drivers on 2 March 1987. Amongst the issues discussed were the charges brought against accused drivers, the sentences open to the courts, the holding of fatal accident inquiries and the provision of informaton to victims' families. I share the concern that any death should occur as a result of reckless driving, and those who cause death by driving recklessly can fully expect to be prosecuted in the courts when sufficient evidence exists.

Small Claims Procedure

Mr. Hirst asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland what progress he is making towards the introduction of a small claims procedure in Scotland.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: A consultation paper was issued on 9 March on behalf of my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate and on behalf of the Sheriff Court Rules Council. The paper invites views on the Lord Advocate's proposals for the definition of a small claim and on expenses awardable in a small claim. Views are also invited on whether the existing summary cause limit of £1,000 should now be increased. The paper contains the Sheriff Court Rules Council's draft procedural rules, together with a commentary on them, and invites views for consideration by that council.

TRANSPORT

Ports

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish figures covering the last five years in respect of major British ports showing (i) numbers of ships movements in the categories of container, bulk, cereal and general cargoes, and (ii) values of cargoes imported and exported.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I regret that the information requested is not all readily available. Table 4.19 in "Ports Statistics 1985", a copy of which is in the Library, shows the numbers of tankers, ro-ro vessels, container vessels and other dry cargo vessels entering each port in 1985. Table 4.16 in the same publication gives the value of imports and exports at each major port. The shipping movement data are not available in my Department for earlier years and I refer my hon. Friend to Lloyd's maritime information service, which supplied the 1985 data. Earlier import and export value data were published by the British Ports Association in its "Quarterly Statistical Abstract of the UK Ports Industry".

Boeing 737 Fire (Manchester)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the Greater Manchester fire and civil defence authority concerning steps to implement the recommendations of the coroner's inquest into the Boeing 737 fire at Manchester airport on 22 August 1985; what reply he is sending; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Greater Manchester fire and civil defence authority wrote to me on 26 February 1987 asking what action was considered necessary to ensure that positive steps are being taken to implement the recommendations of the coroner's inquest into the Boeing 737 fire at Manchester airport. Any action to improve aviation safety that arises from this tragic accident is the statutory responsibility of the Civil Aviation Authority. I have therefore asked the chairman of the authority to respond to the Manchester fire and civil defence authority's inquiry.

Motorways (Lighting)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the most recent available night-time accident figures for the unlit sections of the M25; how these compare with those on the M1 and M6; and what is the average night-time accident rate per mile of unlit motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is as follows:

	Number of accidents at night on unlit sections: 1985	Number of night-time accidents per unlit kilometre: 1985
M25	34	0·54
M6	130	0·47

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now consider lighting any junctions on the M25 which were subject to local undertakings that they would not be lit for a period following the commencement of motorway amalgamation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The need for lighting at these junctions on the M25 is kept continually under review to reflect any changing circumstances. If, at a future date, lighting is proposed at any junction where undertakings have previously been given, then the need for further consultations will be considered.

ENERGY

AGRs (Control Rods)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how many control rod sections in how many control rods will need to be replaced or refurbished at Heysham and Torness advanced gas-cooled reactors, following the discovery of (a) external damage, (b) internal damage to bearing surfaces and (c) faulty workmanship; and what is the estimated cost;

(2) whether destructive tests have been performed, and whether any are proposed, on articulated joint bearings of control rods at the advanced gas-cooled reactor stations at Hinkley Point and Hunterston, in order to confirm that they do not suffer wear of the kind discovered at Torness and Heysham;

(3) what steps have been taken to discover whether wear has occurred in the control rod joint at the advanced gas-cooled reactor stations at Hinkley and Hunterston;

(4) what evidence was available to the Central Electricity Generating Board that potential instability in control rods due to gas flows existed in the advanced gas-cooled reactor design at Hunterston and Hinkley, before construction of similar designs began at Heysham and Torness;

(5) what is the cost and estimated delay as a result of the design failures of the control rod assemblies at Torness and Heysham; and if a proven design has yet been found;

(6) if any steps were taken to rig-test control rod assemblies at Heysham and Torness advanced gas-cooled reactors after minor redesign of the gas inlet nozzles from the original Hunterston/Hinkley design; and if he will make a statement;

(7) on how many previous occasions control rods have failed to insert fully on demand into the reactors at Hunterston and Hinkley advanced gas-cooled reactors; and for what reasons.

Mr. Goodlad: I have asked the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to write to the hon. Member on behalf of both South of Scotland Electricity Board and CEGB.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Frank Cook asked the secretary of State for Energy what is the number of Central Electricity Generating Board employees at the following power stations (a) Hinkley Point A, (b) Hinkley Point B, (c) Oldbury, (d) Sizewell A, (e) Trawsfynydd, (f) Drax A, (g) Drax B, (h) Cottam, (i) West Burton and (j) Didcot.

Mr. Goodlad: The number of Central Electricity Generating Board employees at the following stations are as follows:

	Number
Hinkley Point A and Hinkley Point B	[1]1,412
Oldbury	632
Sizewell A	532
Trawsfynydd	604
Drax A and Drax B	[1]1,257
Cottam	728
West Burton	769

[1] Figures for each station are not compiled separately.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the average number of power station workers employed at (a) a large advanced gas cooled nuclear station and (b) a large coal-fired station.

Mr. Goodlad: I understand from the Central Electricity Generating Board that the average number of power station workers employed at a large advanced gas-cooled nuclear station and a large coal-fired station is 675 and 750 respectively.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the number of people employed by (a) the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, (b) British Nuclear Fuels Limited and (c) the National Nuclear Corporation.

Mr. Goodlad: The number of people employed in the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, British Nuclear Fuels and the National Nuclear Corporaion at 31 March 1986 were as follows:

	Number
United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority	13,916
British Nuclear Fuels	[1]16,285
National Nuclear Corporation	3,843

[1] Average number of persons employed in 1985-86.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the number of United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority employees currently engaged in work in (a) the fast breeder programme, (b) pressurised water reactor research (c) Magnox and advanced gas cooled reactor research, (d) nuclear waste, (e) decommissioning nuclear power plants, (f) energy conservation, (g) renewable energy and (h) nuclear fusion.

Mr. Goodlad: A full breakdown of the number of persons employed by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority is not available in the form requested. However the numbers of scientific engineering man-years expected to be deployed directly to particular business areas during 1986-87 are as follows:

	Number
(a) Fast Reactor	890
(b) Pressurised Water Reactor Safety	230
(c) Advanced Gas Cooled Reactor	270
(d) Nuclear Materials and Radioactive Waste Management R and D	314
(e) Decommissioning and Radioactive Waste Management operations	60
(f) and (g) Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy	100
(h) Nuclear Fusion	400

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the number of people currently employed by the Central Electricity Generating Board whose work is directly related to the generation of electricity from nuclear power.

Mr. Goodlad: About 9,500 people are currently employed by the Central Electricity Generating Board on nuclear specific work.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the number of Central Electricity Generating Board employees in 1960, 1965, 1970, 1975, 1980, 1982, 1984 and 1986.

Mr. Goodlad: These figures are available in the Central Electricity Generating Board's annual reports and accounts. For convenience, however, the figures are given below.

At 31 March	CEGB Employees
1965	68,580
1970	72,895
1975	66,099
1980	61,726
1982	[1]55,487
1984	[1]50,250
1986	[1]47,998

[1] Excludes employees who left the Board's service on that date and staff on secondment to British Electricity International.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the number of people employed in 1970, 1975, 1980 and 1986 in (a) the South of Scotland Electricity Board, (b) the Central Electricity Generating Board, (c) British Coal and (d) British Gas.

Mr. Peter Walker: These figures are available in the industries' annual reports and accounts. Electricity in Scotland is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. For convenience, the data are given below.

At 31 March	[1]SSEB	[1]CEGB	[2]British Coal	[1]British Gas
1970	14,541	72,895	287,200	116,300
1975	13,839	66,099	246,100	103,000
1980	13,658	61,726	232,500	104,400
1986	12,172	[3]47,998	154,600	89,700

[1] All employees
[2] Average men on colliery books in financial year
[3] Excludes employees who left the Board's service on that date and staff on secondment to British Electricity International.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the number of jobs directly and indirectly related to the energy conservation industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. David Hunt: It is not possible to calculate the total number of jobs related to the energy efficiency industry in the United Kingdom, as companies involved in the provision of energy efficiency products or services fall into a wide range of industrial categories, and are often also involved in the provision of other products or services.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is his Department's current estimate in man-years of the employment likely to be generated by the decommissioning of a nuclear power plant;

(2) what is the current estimate at 1986 prices of the cost of fully decommissioning a Magnox, advanced gas-cooled reactor and pressurised water reactor power station, respectively;

(3) what is his Department's current estimate, at 1986 prices, of the waste disposal costs arising from the decommissioning of a nuclear power station, indicating the assumptions made for the type and location of the disposal sites.

Mr. Goodlad: The CEGB has estimated that the number of persons likely to be employed on-site during the active stages of decommissioning a nuclear power station will be about one quarter of the number of persons employed during the operation of that station.

The CEGB has estimated that full decommissioning of a Magnox power station would cost between £180 million and £330 million, at 1986 prices, depending on assumptions made about the timing of the various stages of decommissioning. Costs for an AGR power station are expected to be of the same order of magnitude.

International studies have indicated that the decommissioning of a commercial PWR power station might cost between £33 million and £170 million at 1986 prices. The figures make no specific assumptions about the type or location of waste disposal sites.

Capital Investment (Employment)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list the publicly available studies on the employment impact and potential of capital investment on energy production and energy conservation carried out by his Department or by other Government Departments;

(2) if he will list the publicly available studies on the employment impact of energy production and capital investment in the energy field in the United Kingdom carried out by his Department or by other Government Departments.

Mr. Peter Walker: There are no such publicly available studies carried out since 1979 by my Department nor, as far as I am aware, by other Government Departments.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy to what extent the employment impact of investment in power station construction is a factor taken into consideration when decisions are made over such capital expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Decisions on construction of new power stations are based on how best to meet the needs of electricity consumers.

Nuclear Power Stations (Inquiry Reports)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make available in the Library the official inspector's reports on the public inquiries into Bradwell nuclear power station, Hinkley Point A, Hinkley Point B, Hunterston A, Hunterston B, Dungeness A, Torness, Sizewell A, Connah's Quay, Trawsfynydd, Heysham 1, Wylfa, Portskewett, and Oldbury.

Mr. Goodlad: I have placed in the Library the inspectors' reports in respect of Bradwell, Hinkley Point A, Dungeness A, Connah's Quay, Trawsfynydd, Wylfa, Portskewett and Oldbury. No public inquiries were held in the case of Hinkley Point B, Sizewell A and Heysham 1. The remaining stations, Hunterston A and B and Torness, are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Sandia

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his answer 11 February, Official Report, columns 213-4, he will place in the Library the report of the representatives of Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive who visited the Sandia site; if he will indicate the main finding of the report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: A steel containment model was deliberately tested to destruction at roughly four times the pressure it was designed to withstand. The United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission has issued a report—NUREG/CR-4209. Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate is sending me a copy of it which I shall place in the Library of the House.

Electricity and Gas (Disconnections)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Energy what are the numbers of domestic consumers disconnected from (a) their electricity and (b) their gas supply in (i) the quarter and (ii) the 12 months to December 1986 in each electricity and each gas region in England, Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Peter Walker: This is a matter for the industries themselves. I have asked the chairman of the Electricity Council and British Gas plc to write to the hon. Member with the information requested. The question of electricity disconnections in Scotland should be pursued through my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

British Coal (Objectives)

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has set objectives for the chairman of the British Coal corporation.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have settled objectives with the British Coal corporation chairman, Sir Robert Haslam in the following terms:

1. Coal production, like any other business, must earn a satisfactory return on capital while competing in the market place. The basic objective of British Coal must be to earn a satisfactory rate of return on its net assets and achieve full financial viability without Government support. British Coal should accordingly aim to improve its profitability so as to achieve, after payment of interest and accrual of social grants, breakeven for the year 1988-89 as a whole (though it is hoped that a breakeven position might be attained during the latter part of 1987-88) and thereafter generate an increasing surplus on revenue account and to contribute increasingly to self-financing.

2. British Coal should aim to maximise its long-term profitability by concentrating on low-cost production and on those sales which maximise profit on a continuing basis in competition with other fuels. It should plan its marketing, production, capital investment and research and development accordingly, bring productive capacity into line with its continuing share of the market, and ensure an adequate return on new capital investment in accordance with the principles set out in the White Paper "The Nationalised Industries" (Cmnd. 7131).

3. British Coal's objective should be to ensure that over the period to 1989-90 the operating costs of its mining activities per gigajoule of coal produced are reduced in real terms by at least 20 per cent., compared with the level recorded in 1985-86.

4. Either British Coal or the Government may propose additional objectives from time to time: any consequent adjustment to existing objectives would need to be discussed.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EEC (Budget)

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Walthamstow of 27 February, the European Economic Council and the Assembly are under an obligation to accept transfers from the negative reserve as to substantive budget lines; and if such negative reserves are to be used only in the event of there being equivalent amounts of unused expenditure.

Mr. Brooke: As in the 1986 precedent, the Council and the European Parliament have agreed to enter negative reserves in the 1987 budget. These are to be cancelled on the basis of transfer proposals which the Commission has undertaken to bring forward by the end of October of this year.

By their nature transfer proposals require the existence of unused expenditure in the budget.

Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the estimated gain to the Exchequer from (i) an increase of 1p in the standard rate of income tax and (ii) a reduction of £100 in, respectively, the married and single allowances.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates — consistent with information provided in the Autumn Statement 1986 (Cm 14)—are as follows:

	1987-88	1988-89
Increase of 1p in basic rate[1]	1,100	1,450
Reduction of £100 in:
married man's allowance[2]	235	300
single[2] and wife's earned income allowance	290	380

[1] Including the consequential effect of an increase in the rate of advance corporation tax.
[2] Excluding age allowance

Personal Income and Expenditure Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the percentage of real disposable incomes taken by (a) mortgage payments and (b) rent in each of the years 1957, 1967, 1977 and 1979 to date.

Mr. Norman Lamont: All the information required is not available but some can be derived from published data held in the House of Commons Library.

Available information can be found in the following publications:

United Kingdom National Accounts.
Economic Trends Annual Supplement.
Financial Statistics.

Research and Development (Tax Incentives)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state what tax incentives exist to support civil research and development programmes; what representations he has received in favour of more such incentives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Most private sector R and D expenditure qualifies for immediate tax relief either by deduction in full as a normal trading expense or by way of capital allowances. Capital expenditure on trade-related scientific research qualifies for the special 100 per cent. scientific research allowance. Capital expenditure which a trader incurs on other plant and on industrial buildings will qualify for relief under the normal capital allowances system. My right hon. Friend has received a small number of representations in favour of further incentives. It would be inappropriate for me to comment further at this point.

Official Debt

Dame Judith Hart asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has about the total official debt, and its category, of Brazil, Argentina, Columbia, Mexico and Peru, respectively.

Mr. Lawson: A breakdown of the total official external debt (owed to Governments and international financial institutions) of Brazil, Argentina, Colombia, Mexico and Peru is shown in table 2 of the OECD External Debt Statistics, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Interest Rates

Mr. Tony Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what instructions he has given in the past two weeks to the Bank of England regarding the level of interest rates.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Discussions between the Chancellor and the Governor of the Bank of England are confidential.

Gilt-edged Stock

Mr. Tony Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the Bank of England issued £1 billion of gilt-edged stock on Wednesday 4 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No Government stock was issued on 4 March.

Discount Houses

Mr. Tony Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the Bank of England conducted a spot check into the books of the discount houses on the night of Thursday 5 March.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Bank of England undertakes spot checks to satisfy itself that the prudential framework for the activities of the discount houses is being continuously observed.

Mr. Tony Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why discount houses were asked by the Bank of England to accept £640 million eight-day loans on Thursday 5 March.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The object of the Bank of England's operations on 5 March was to offset the anticipated money market shortage.

Council of Finance Ministers

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Council of Finance Ministers meeting on 9 March; and if, in particular, he will state whether the Council discussed the opinion of the Court of Auditors that the Commission scheme for spending 3·2 billion European currency units on the emergency disposal of the European Economic Community butter mountain was unlawful.

Mr. Brooke: The EC Economic and Finance Council met in Brussels on 9 March. I represented the United Kingdom.

Following the conclusion of conciliation procedures with the European Parliament, the Council adopted the new Community instrument (NCI IV) to facilitate global loans to small and medium-sized enterprises in non-assisted areas.

The Council reviewed the economic situation in the Community, and agreed that there was no need to change the policy guidelines set out in the 1986-87 annual economic report adopted last December.

The Council discussed again the question of delayed reimbursement to member states of losses incurred on the disposal of butter stocks. The main focus of the discussion was the financial impact of the proposal on Spain and Portugal. The Council asked the Commission to examine the problems raised by these two countries.

The Court of Auditors' opinion on the proposal was on the table for the discussion. I had already made clear at the February meeting of the Council the view that the proposal, while justified by agricultural savings resulting from accompanying measures, should be regarded as exceptional. A similar view was expressed on this occasion by the Commission and other member states.

The Council discussed other issues arising from the European Court of Auditors' report on the 1985 Community budget. The Presidency concluded that further measures to improve the control of expenditure were still needed. The Council approved the resolution on the discharge of the 1985 budget.

Subject to United Kingdom and German parliamentary reserves, the Council agreed on a regulation to strengthen Community measures aided at detecting and combating fraud in Community trade with third countries.

Gold Bullion Coin

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Government have any plans to issue a new United Kingdom gold bullion coin.

Mr. Lawson: Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to approve my recommendation, as Master of the Mint, that a new bullion coin containing 1 oz of fine gold be issued, to be called the "Britannia", together with bullion coins of smaller denominations.

Cash Limits

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give revised cash limits for 1986-87 which take account of the decision by some Departments not to seek supplementary provision to cover the carry-forward allowed under the end-year flexibility scheme.

Mr. MacGregor: Under the end-year flexibility schemes announced in 1983, some 32 1986-87 cash limits were increased to allow for the carry forward of capital underspend in 1985-86. (Official Report, 22 July 1986, c. 143-46). In the case of four voted cash limits, the relevant Departments have not sought parliamentary approval for the extra provision in a Supplementary Estimate. To keep the control figures in line with provision the cash limits are accordingly being reduced; a list is shown in the following table:

Revision to 1986-87 cash limits resulting from the carryforward of capital underspend in 1985-86 not being required

Voted cash limits

Class	Vote	Accounting Department	Description of expenditure	Current cash limit £000	Decrease £000	Revised cash limit £000
V	5[1]	Department of Trade and Industry	International trade: export credit services, insurance of investment overseas (central services)	43,469	315	43,154
XI	3	Home Office	Central, administrative, miscellaneous and community services and civil defence —England and Wales	365,238	2,000	363,238
XVII	5	Welsh Office	Civil defence, tourism, roads and transport, housing, other environmental services, education and science, arts and libraries, and centrally funded health services and personal social services, Wales	187,047	787	186,260
XIX	11	Department for National Savings	Economic and financial administration	156,977	58	156,919

[1] Capital expenditure on this vote is not classified as public expenditure.

Income Tax

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the cost to the Exchequer if income tax thresholds were raised to £65 per week for a single person and £130 per week for a couple, married or otherwise.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 2 March 1987; c. 521]: The direct revenue cost at 1987-88 forecast levels of income would be at least £8 billion in a full year compared with an indexed income tax regime. The precise cost would depend on the rules for unmarried couples and whether a separate wife's earned income allowance was retained.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Irish Republic

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to meet the Foreign Minister of the Irish Republic.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have no plans at present, but am likely to see the Foreign Minister of the Republic of Ireland at the Foreign Affairs Council on 16 March.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's diplomatic relations with Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Renton: Relations with Saudi Arabia are better than at any time in the past. The Prince and Princess of Wales paid a highly successful visit to the Kingdom last November and already this year my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Defence and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and I myself have visited Saudi Arabia. We are all looking forward to the state visit of King Fahd later this month.

Soviet Union

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects he expects to discuss on his forthcoming visit to the Soviet Union.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I expect to discuss a wide range of subjects including arms control, human rights, regional and bilateral issues.

Argentina

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Anglo-Argentine relations.

Mr. Eggar: We continue to seek more normal relations with Argentina, while honouring our commitment to the Falkland islanders. We look to the Argentine Government to respond positively to our efforts.

Lebanon

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent talks with President Gemayel of Lebanon.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We had a full discussion of all aspects of Lebanon's current difficulties. I stressed Britain's commitment to Lebanon's sovereignty, unity, independence and territorial integrity.

Official Secrets Act

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied with the means available to Her Majesty's Government of assessing the public interest, under Scottish law, in cases where the Foreign Office is the victim of alleged infringement of the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Renton: The Lord Advocate is responsible for assessing the public interest in such cases in Scotland.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the matters to be discussed at the Council of Ministers meetings on 16 and 17 March.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 27 February. The agenda for the 16-17 March Foreign Affairs Council has not yet been decided. A statement to the House on the outcome of the Council will be made in the usual way.

Tibet

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Chinese Government on alleged abuses of the human rights of Tibetans.

Mr. Renton: We have regularly made clear at the United Nations and other international bodies our concern about human rights abuses wherever they occur. The Chinese Government are well aware of our views.

South America

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Foreign Office staff deal with (a) the Falkland Islands and (b) all South American countries.

Mr. Eggar: In the Diplomatic wing five officials deal with the Falkland Islands and ten deal with South American countries. Three officials divide their time between these areas. These officials are supported by 13 clerical and secretarial staff.

In the Overseas Development wing three officials deal with the Falkland Islands and five deal with South American countries. Other staff, including heads of Department and support staff, spend part of their time on these responsibilities. There are also a number of professional advisers in both wings who are concerned with the Falkland Islands and South America.

Foreign Compensation (USSR)

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the response to the advertisement about the Foreign Compensation (USSR) (Registration and Determination of Claims) Order 1986.

Mr. Eggar: As envisaged in my answer of 13 January 1987 to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley), these advertisements were carried in the national press at the end of January and early in February. Up to the end of February some 10,000 requests for application forms were received and dealt with in response to the advertisements. Approximately 70 per cent. of these requests were related to claims by holders of Russian bonds. However, the number of completed application forms which had been returned to the Foreign Compensation Commission by the end of February was low—slightly over 600. It is therefore important that potential claimants should bear in mind the strict closing dates for the receipt of completed forms. The closing date for claims in respect of bonds is 31 March 1987; while the closing date for applications in respect of other claims is 30 June 1987.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many women have died from cervical cancer in the Province in each of the past five years.

Mr. Needham: The information for the last five years for which figures are available, is as follows:

Year	Deaths from cervical cancer
1981	43
1982	48
1983	39
1984	30
1985	27

Breast Cancer

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many women have died from cancer of the breast in the Province in each of the past five years.

Mr. Needham: The information for the last five years for which figures are available, is as follows:

Year	Deaths from cancer of the breast
1981	294
1982	267
1983	282
1984	302
1985	308

AIDS

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report the age and sex of persons who have died from AIDS in the Province at the latest available date.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Age	Sex
50	Male

Gaelic Athletic Association

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has had any recent discussions with the Gaelic Athletic Association concerning its funding; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: I have not discussed funding arrangements with the GAA nor am I currently planning to do so.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what grants have been made to the Gaelic Athletic Association in each of the past three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information for the latest available years, (which includes grants to affiliated clubs) is as follows:

1983-84	120·9
1984-85	223·2
1985-86	198·2

EMPLOYMENT

Training Grant Payment

Mr. Freud asked the Paymaster General what percentage of training costs he expects to repay employers via the training grant payment mechanism in the next year.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Freud asked the Paymaster General what is the total sum annually available for training grant payments from the Road Transport Industry Training Board.

Mr. Trippier: The Road Transport Industry Training Board's annual report for the year ended 31 March 1986 (the last year for which figures are available) shows that training grants amounting to £11,821,000 were paid out during the year.

Mr. Freud asked the Paymaster General what is the average delay between an employer's claim for a training grant payment and receipt of that payment from the Road Transport Industry Training Board.

Mr. Trippier: I am advised by the Road Transport Industry Training Board that grant claims have to be submitted by the end of September of each year. These are then offset against levy and either a payment is made to the company or alternatively a net levy requirement is invoiced to the company in December.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Taxis

Mr. Parry asked the Lord Privy Seal what representations he has received from representatives of hon. Members' secretaries concerning the recent decision of the House of Commons (Services) Committee on the use of taxis at the Members' entrance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: I have received one letter from a Member's secretary on this point. In addition, I understand that the branch secretary of the TGWU 1/427 parliamentary branch has written to the chairman of the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee on behalf of those secretaries and research assistants who are members of that branch. Both letters urge reconsideration of the Services Committee's decision.

These and other representations on this matter have now been considered by the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee. In view of the complaints made by Members about the taxi queue over a number of years, the Sub-Committee was unwilling to recommend the rescission of the Services Committee's resolution. But it has been agreed that no steps will be taken to implement the resolution before 1 July this year, and that the Committee should review the matter before that date. The Committee's final decision on this issue is likely to depend on the willingness of other users of the Members' Entrance to observe the rule that Members are to have priority at all times when taxis draw up for hire.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Metropolitan Police Vehicles (Accident Statistics)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury of 17 February, Official Report, column 557, what is the ratio of the number of fatal accidents, the number of persons killed and the number of persons injured in Metropolitan police vehicle accidents to the total mileage travelled by Metropolitan police vehicles in each of the years 1984, 1985 and 1986; and how this compares in each case to the equivalent ratio of vehicle accidents, fatalities and injuries to total vehicle mileage for all vehicles in the Greater London area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has provided the following information on the ratio between accidents involving police vehicles and the distances travelled by all police vehicles in the Metropolitan police district. Distance is given in vehicle kilometres for ease of comparison with the available accident figures for all vehicles.

	Fatal accidents	Persons killed	Persons injured
1984	1: 8,684,985	1: 7,237,487	Not available
1985	1:13,749,486	1:11,785,274	[1]1:56,350

[1] Period 1 October to 31 December 1985 only.

The information collected on accidents involving all vehicles is not directly comparable because it relates to Greater London rather than the Metropolitan police district and includes accidents and mileage only on motorways and class A(M) and A roads. The available information is given in the following table. Figures for 1986 are not yet available.

Number of kilometres travelled per incident

	Fatal accident	Persons killed	Persons injured
1984	1:40,650,400	1:39,379,652	1:476,347
1985	1:45,662,100	1:44,383,954	1:485,169

Fire Safety

Mr. Merlyn Rees asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the houses in multiple occupation in Leeds are inspected for fire precautions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the west Yorkshire fire service that it has inspected about 10 per cent. of the estimated number of houses in multiple occupation in Leeds, and that most of these inspections have been carried out in response to requests from the city council as housing authority.

Police Consultative Committee (Hackney)

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue guidance to the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis under section 106(3) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 proposing the postponement of the inaugural meeting of the police consultative committee in Hackney, scheduled for 11 March, to extend the time for consultations between himself, the commissioner, local Members of Parliament and the council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the meeting to be held in Hackney on 11 March, to which representatives of the borough council and other interested parties have been invited, will give further consideration to the constitution and membership of a police/consultative committee for the borough, but that it will not be regarded as the first meeting of such a committee. My right hon. Friend does not think that it would be right to seek to intervene in any way with the 11 March meeting. He continues to hope that a consultative committee can be established in the borough with the agreement of all interested parties.

Tamils

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Tamils have arrived in Britain from India seeking political asylum in the latest six months for which figures are available; how many have been returned to India; and how many of these have not been accepted by the Indian authorities.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 29-30]: Although statistics are not maintained in such a way as to give a precise answer to the question and are not maintained on an ethnic basis, it is estimated that at Heathrow terminals 3 and 4, which handle the majority of direct flights from India, a total of 350 Sri Lankan nationals have applied for asylum on arrival from India in the six months September 1986 to February 1987, inclusive. Of these, 36 have so far been removed to India, a number of whom have not been accepted by the Indian authorities.

WALES

Dairy Farms (Inspector)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many dairy farmers in Wales (a) numerically and (b) as a percentage of the whole will be eligible to pay for the costs of dairy inspection at the reduced rate of £80 per visit.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: As at June 1986, 1,533 main holdings were eligible for the reduced rate of costs of dairy inspection. This represents 20·3 per cent. of all holdings with dairy cows in Wales. However, not all these holdings are registered for milk production under the Milk and Dairies Regulations.

Sheep

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many sheep farmers in each of the Welsh counties have 1,000 ewes or over; and what were the corresponding figures for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information is given in the following table:

Number of Holdings in Wales with 1,000 or more breeding ewes

	Clwyd	Dyfed	Mid Glamorgan	South and West Glamorgan	Gwent	Gwynedd	Powys	Wales

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many lowland sheep farmers in each of the Welsh counties have 500 breeding ewes or over; and what were the corresponding figures for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information requested is given in the following table:

Number of lowland holdings in Wales with 500 or more breeding ewes

	Clwyd	Dyfed	Mid Glamorgan	South and West Glamorgan	Gwent	Gwynedd	Powys	Wales

Dairy Quotas

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what further representations he has received from the farming unions in Wales concerning the danger of the knock-on effects from the dairy quotas having a detrimental impact on the beef and sheep sectors; and what response he has been able to give to such representations.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The farming unions in Wales have made a number of such representations to me. The knock-on effects of the cuts agreed for the dairy sector will depend upon individual management and husbandry decisions.

Dairy Inspection Charges

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set out the cost per cow in a year of the charges for dairy inspection in respect of (i) those farmers who will pay £90 per visit and (ii) those farmers who will pay £80 per visit.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: As my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food indicated in the debate in the House on 2 March 1987, for an average herd size of 60 cows the charge for a visit once every three years is 50p per cow set against current annual public support of £90 per cow.

PRIME MINISTER

Achievements

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Prime Minister if she will update her answer of Monday 24 February, Official Report, column 402-6, listing the attainments of Her Majesty's Government from 1979 to date, to take account the achievements for 1986-87, giving a breakdown of those achievements within Scotland, England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: I would refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply to him of 24 February 1986 (Official Report c. 404-8) and my reply to the hon. Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) of 20 February (Official Report c. 801-9) which taken together list the achievements of the Government since 1979 in respect of the whole of the United Kingdom.

More detailed information in respect of Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is as follows:

Wales, in common with the rest of the United Kingdom, has benefited from the Government's economic policies. These have helped to tackle the problems arising out of the fundamental changes which are taking place in the structure of industry. The historical dependence of Wales on coal and steel has now ended but both sectors continue to make a substantial contribution. The steel industry currently operates profitably and major improvements in performance have been achieved by British Coal with output per manshift increasing by 70 per cent. since 1983-84. Substantial investment is being made in both industries.

The promotion of industrial change has been actively supported. Unemployment has been falling steadily in Wales since the early part of 1986 and has fallen faster in Wales than most other parts of Britain. Since 1979, £235 million has been contributed under regional selective assistance for projects forecasting 61,000 new jobs and safeguarding a further 33,000 jobs. Since the new regional development grant was introduced in November 1984, £74 million of grant has been offered for projects forecasting over 20,000 new jobs in addition to the above.

Following the establishment of WINvest in 1983, 213 inward investment projects have been secured creating 25,000 jobs. The Welsh Development Agency has played an important part in the regeneration of communities through the provision of factories, investment packages, land reclamation and other services. Factory allocations by the Government agencies have reached record levels — 2·5 million sq ft in 1986, more than double the highest recorded figures prior to 1979. A large number of new industrial projects by companies throughout Wales has been announced in the past year.

The youth training scheme has given vocational training to nearly 74,000 young people since it was launched in 1983. Of these over 16,500 have entered two-year YTS. About 18,500 adults are expected to receive MSC training in 1986-87. Through the expanded enterprise allowance scheme nearly 14,000 unemployed people in Wales have been helped to start up in business.

It is estimated that the number of self-employed had risen to over 154,000 by 1986, an increase of 39,000 over June 1981; more than a quarter of the manufacturing plants have opened since 1979. Enterprise agencies are actively helping to create jobs and further measures to support the small firm sector are being developed. The three enterprise zones contain over 440 companies and nearly 4,000 jobs in these zones have been created since designation. EC funds have contributed £1,311 million since 1979 to assist the development of new industries in areas most affected by structural change.

A major programme of investment has been undertaken to tackle the problems associated with urban decay. £144 million has been spent on urban programme schemes which have made a substantial contribution to social and economic development. In addition the urban development grant scheme has helped bring forward fifty private sector investment projects totalling £144 million "triggered" by a public contribution of £25 million. A valleys initiative was launched in 1986 which is helping to improve substantially the environment of urban centres in the South Wales valleys. A major redevelopment of south Cardiff has been launched and a Cardiff bay Development Corporation established which is expected to encourage investment on a very large scale around Cardiff bay.

The Development Board for Rural Wales continues to assist with the provision of factories, investment advice and a range of community developments within its area. A new grant, the development of rural initiative, venture and enterprise has been introduced to stimulate private sector investment of benefit to rural areas. In 1984 the less favoured area was extended to include about 80 per cent. of the country and this enabled additional support to be given to farmers. Substantial support continues to be given to the farming industry; proposals have been made to help farming and the rural economy to adapt to the need to reduce agricultural surpluses. Increased weight is being given under the planning procedures to the protection of the environment and job creation.

A substantial trunk road programme of £700 million has been undertaken since 1979 providing 22 miles of new or improved motorway and 93 miles of trunk road. Twenty-six miles of trunk road are now under construction. A major scheme to upgrade the A55 dual carriageway across North Wales is currently underway and this includes the very large civil engineering contract for the tunnel crossing on the Conway estuary. Significant progress has been made in improving rail services. The de-regulation of local bus services has been completed with the level of provision remaining the same but with a saving in the level of revenue support. The Government are committed to safeguarding the existing Severn crossing and to be in a position to provide a second crossing by the mid-1990s.

A substantial programme of housing renovation has been achieved and the promotion of home ownership has been an important consideration. Owner occupation has increased from 59 per cent. of stock in 1979 to 67 per cent. currently. Some 57,000 public sector dwellings have been sold to their tenants and over 50,000 new homes have been built for sale.

Between April 1980 and December 1986 some £383 million was paid on 120,000 renovation grants to the private sector. Over the same period local authority capital expenditure on the renovations of their own stock totalled £294 million. Over the last two years allocations to the housing authorities and to the Housing Corporation have increased by 40 per cent.

Current expenditure on education in 1984-85 was 2·5 per cent. more in real terms than in 1978-79. Pupil numbers in that period have dropped by 10 per cent. so that expenditure per pupil is at a record level. 69 per cent. of the under-fives are in nursery classes, an increase of 40 per cent. since 1979. The number of enrolments in local authority colleges of higher education has increased by 50 per cent. since 1979 and taking all higher education sectors in Wales together, student numbers have increased by 20 per cent. in that same period.

The promotion of improved standards of education has continued in line with developments in England. The Government have also pursued a policy of active support for the Welsh language and direct Government expenditure of over £13·5 million has been made since 1979-80.

Spending on the Health Service in Wales is up by 28 per cent. in real terms since 1979; the number of staff directly concerned with patient care has increased by 13·5 per cent. between 1979 and 1985. Five major new hospital developments have been completed as well as two innovative new community hospitals in that time. Between April 1979 and March 1988, £490 million will have been spent, at 1986-87 prices, on the hospital building and development programmes. The number of patients being treated in hospitals has increased—in-patient cases are up by 76,000 per annum (22 per cent.) and the numbers of new out-patients by 64,000 or 15 per cent. New services have been introduced, including three renal dialysis units and a computerised kidney donor register, a bone marrow transplant unit and a genetics centre. In addition, whole-body scanners have been installed at strategic locations throughout the Principality. The general management function has now been established in all Welsh health authorities and a corporate management programme for the service has been issued for consultation. Two significant initiatives have been introduced relating to the care of mentally handicapped people and the elderly.

In Scotland, since 1979 over 89,000 public sector tenants have bought their homes and owner occupation has risen from around 35 per cent. to over 42 per cent. 140,000 new homes have also been built since 1979.

Over 200,000 private sector grant applications have been approved and the number of houses below tolerable standards reduced from 114,000 in March 1980 to 57,000 in 1986. The annual capital allocations to local authorities for expenditure on their own housing stock have risen by 60 per cent. over the last three years. The numbers of sheltered dwellings and of amenity dwellings have both more than trebled since 1979. The housing association movement's investment programme has exceeded £100 million in each of the last six years.

Expenditure per pupil is higher than ever before, an extra £60 million is being allocated to local authorities in 1987-88 to resource the deal on teachers pay and conditions of service; more students are in full-time higher education than ever before (79,000 against 69,000 in 1979); the number of students in non-advanced vocational further education has increased by 27 per cent. (1979-80 —140,500 to 1985-86—178,400).

A recently agreed package of EC structural proposals will cover a range of measures designed to encourage new construction and modernisation of fishing vessels, to constrain excess capacity and to expand fishing opportunities outside EC waters. In particular the package extended the list of preference areas to include the "West of Scotland" and this will enable applicants from this area to qualify for a higher rate of community aid. The value of fish landings in Scotland reached a new record in 1986 at £234 million, more than double the 1980 value of £114 million. White fish value increased by 11 per cent. and shellfish by 18 per cent. offsetting the decline in the mackeral catch due to the poor weather.

Fish farming recorded continued success with increasing value and employment both direct and in processing. Continuing confidence in the future is reflected on the investment side. In 1986 the sea fish industry authority paid out Government grants amounting to £7,902,408 for the construction of new fishing boats and the modernisation of existing vessels in Scotland. As part of our commitment to practical conservation fishery protection and control have been strengthened.

In 1986-87 Government support to Scottish agriculture will amount to over £330 million. The Government successfully secured the Agricultural Development Programme to improve the structure of agriculture in the islands. We plan to put some £38·7 million into the programme over five years. The details of the ADP are now being worked up in consultation with local interests. The ADP should be in operation towards the end of this year.

Manufacturing productivity in Scotland has increased by nearly 6 per cent. a year between 1979 and 1985. Scottish manufacturing exports in 1985 showed an increase of over 4 per cent. on 1984. Service sector employment in Scotland showed an increase of over 40,000 between June 1983 and June 1986 and over the same period the number of self-employed increased by 24,000. Over 85,000 people are now covered by the Government's employment and training measures in Scotland. Estimated expenditure on the YTS in Scotland is £85 million in the current year.

In 1985 there was a net growth of 1,400 in company registrations in Scotland. Between 1979 and 1985 the output of the Scottish electronics industry rose by around 150 per cent., in real terms, and electrical and instrument engineering output in Scotland nearly doubled. Under the new regional development grant scheme introduced in 1984, offers amounting to over £100 million have been made to industry in Scotland, associated with the creation of some 30,000 jobs. Since its establishment in 1981 the "Locate in Scotland" organisation has helped to attract to Scotland projects expected to result in planned investment by 300 overseas companies of over £1·8 billion, and to create or safeguard some 40,000 jobs. The Scottish Development Agency is currently spending some £130 million a year, and the Highlands and Islands Development Board some £35 million a year, on economic development in Scotland. The budgets of both agencies have been substantially increased since 1979, and their roles enlarged.

Between 1979 and 1986, the Scottish Development Agency offered almost 1,300 loans to small firms valued at £20·4 million. The SDA's small firms information centre received almost 106,700 inquiries between 1979 and 1986, from which more than 38,700 counselling sessions were arranged.

Since the inception of the extended enterprise allowance scheme in 1983, 18,600 unemployed people have been helped to start up in business in Scotland.

Over £600 million has been invested in the motorway and trunk road network, and 221 miles of motorway and major trunk road improvements have been completed. The 127 mile reconstruction of the A9 from Perth to Easter Ross has been completed; substantial progress has been made on other routes, including the Perth to Aberdeen route (which has been largely upgraded to dual carriageway standard) and the A75 Gretna to Stranraer route; and 25 bypasses have been opened, relieving communities of through traffic. A further 30 miles of motorway and major trunk road improvements, including four bypasses, are under construction. Over the same period, annual expenditure on structural maintenance of existing trunk roads has increased by about 50 per cent. in real terms.

The Government have continued to develop and improve the sea transport services in the Highlands and Islands, recognising the importance of good transport systems to the economic and social well being of the island communities. Government support for ferries and coastal shippers has increased from £5·1 million in 1979 to £13·6 million in 1986-87, an increase of 55 per cent. in real terms. Capital expenditure on piers and ships, completed or in progress, is £40 million.

The Countryside (Scotland) Act 1981 gave regional councils power to designate areas as regional parks to make provision for and maintain informal recreation facilities in selected areas of countryside without interfering with other established land uses such as farming, forestry or commercial sporting management. So far two regional parks have been designated (Fife regional park and the Pentland Hills regional park) and two others (Loch Lomond and Clyde/Muirshiel) are proposed.

A new grant scheme to ssist the care costs of voluntary bodies in the environmental field has been introduced in Scotland, with an allocation of £150,000 in 1987-88. Arrangements are also being made to extend UK 2000 to Scotland.

On law and order, the chief constables have been encouraged to increase the visible police presence on the beat and in public places. The rate of police grant has been increased to 51 per cent. in 1986-87, providing an additional £3 million for policing, and a major programme is in hand to replace police and fire service radio communications. New powers for the regulation of public processions and demonstrations have been enacted and increased attention has been devoted to crime prevention with local authorities being encouraged to play their part.

We are intensifying the campaign against drug misuse. The 21-man drugs wing of the Scottish crime squad has been established and all eight Scottish forces now have a specialist drug squad or unit. Further legislative changes are being made to improve the criminal law including providing powers which will enable the courts to confiscate the proceeds of drug trafficking and will provide customs officers with enhanced powers of detention for suspected drug smugglers. Aside from enforcement and prosecution we are providing central funding amounting to over £1 million annually to support local facilities for the rehabilitation of drug misusers, some of whom have now become infected with the AIDS virus; and we are continuing to promote major public health education campaigns to counter drug misuse and curtail the spread of AIDS.

We have established the Scottish Legal Aid Board which will take over responsibility for most aspects of legal aid administration on 1 April 1987.

Between 1970 and 1986 the number of doctors has increased by nearly 7 per cent., the number of qualified nurses by over 26 per cent. and those working in the professions allied to medicine by 25 per cent.

A further five major new hospital developments bringing the total since 1979 to 47, have provided a total of over 5,400 beds and over 450 day places. Management of the NHS in Scotland has been strengthened by the appointment of a general manager for each health board and of unit general managers within boards. This will make for more effective planning and decision-taking and better use of resources. We are already seeing the fruits of these initiatives in the form of improved efficiency within boards, thus ensuring that the optimum amount of resources are devoted to patient care.

In Northern Ireland, the dedication and professionalism of the security forces have continued to bring successes against terrorists. Considerable numbers have been arrested, and successful prosecutions mounted for terrorist offences, while large numbers of weapons and explosives have been seized. The Royal Ulster Constabulary has, by its conduct over the period, further enhanced its reputation for even handed and disinterested enforcement of the law.

The Government remain committed to the Anglo-Irish Agreement, signed in 1985, which seeks to develop further our unique relationship with the Republic of Ireland. In particular, it offers a framework for co-operation with the Republic, including improving co-operation on security matters between the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Garda Siochana. The agreement also offers reassurance to both sides of the community that their identities and interests will be respected, and that any change in the status of Northern Ireland would come about only with the consent of a majority of the people of the Province. Good progress has been made in implementing the agreement.

Substantial resources have been made available to finance the job creation efforts of the Industrial Development Board (IDB), the Local Enterprise Development Unit (LEDU) and the various training and retraining schemes. IDB and LEDU promoted 6,685 jobs and renewed or maintained a further 8,178 in 1986. Since the inception of the IDB in September 1982 over two thirds of new inward investment has been attracted to the areas of greater need in Northern Ireland.

At the end of December 1986, 25,600 people were benefiting from the special employment and training measures run by DED, including 6,450 on action for community employment schemes, 1,950 on the enterprise allowance scheme and 9,000 on the youth training programme.

Gross expenditure on the housing programme has increased by 64 per cent. since 1980-81. The level of unfitness in old housing has reduced from 14 per cent. in 1980-81 to around 10 per cent.; the proportion of dwellings lacking basic amenities has been halved. Grant aid for the improvement and repair of private dwellings in 1986-87 is twice the 1980-81 level; expenditure by housing associations has tripled in the same period. Over 32,000 houses have been sold by the Housing Executive, and an estimated 60 per cent. of householders in Northern Ireland now own their properties.

Expenditure on the health and personal social services increased by 13·9 per cent. (after adjustment for inflation) between 1979 and the last financial year. Staff numbers increased by over 9 per cent.; in patient cases by 10 per cent.; and the number of out-patient attendances by 23 per cent. A new tower block at Belfast city hospital was completed in 1984 at a cost of £70 million and is now fully commissioned. Work began last year on a new block at the Mater hospital, Belfast at a cost of £10 million, and forward plans include a new hospital in Antrim at a cost of £35 million.

In education there is a higher participation rate amongst the under-fives and for those over compulsory school age. Spending per student in secondary schools is 16 per cent. above the 1979 level in real terms.

There is a continuing successful programme for the revitalisation of the city centres of Belfast and Londonderry. A total of £28 million was recently allocated towards urban regeneration in Belfast over the next three years, in addition to existing budgets for comprehensive development, environmental improvement and urban development grant. Since 1981 an additional 2,325 jobs have been created in the Belfast enterprise zone; 1,600 of these were new to Northern Ireland.

Total investment to date amounts to £28 million of which £20 million is from the private sector. Urban development grant of £14 million through pump priming attracted £44 million of private investment. These grants have assisted a wide range of commercial and industrial projects including the provision of 300 units of speculative accommodation for small businesses and 400 units of private sector housing. Private sector investment in major retail and office developments either completed in the past three years, underway or committed, is in excess of £150 million and this is a further indication of the growth of confidence in Belfast.

Afghanistan

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will discuss the Afghanistan peace proposals in her meeting with Mr. Gorbachev.

The Prime Minister: I shall raise with Mr. Gorbachev the continuing Soviet occupation of Afghanistan and will press again for the complete and rapid withdrawal of all Soviet troops.

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to meet the President of Afghanistan; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Surplus Butter

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the distribution points in the London borough of Wandsworth where EEC surplus butter is made available for pensioners living in the borough to collect; and if he will give the quantity of butter so far distributed in the London borough of Wandsworth.

Mr. Gummer: My Department does not maintain records of distribution points or of quantities distributed in particular geographical areas.

Milk

Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the prices paid to farmers in national currencies for milk in each European Economic Community country in the last marketing year and in the current marketing year.

Mr. Gummer: All the available information about prices paid to farmers for milk in each member state of the European Community of 10 is given in Eurostat (agricultural prices) No. 3 1986, pages 40 and 41, and in the Cronos Data Bank (PRAG domain), both of which are accessible in the Library of the House. Information for Spain and Portugal is not available.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current annual cost of storing and financing European Economic Community intervention stocks in the United Kingdom; how much of this cost is borne directly by the United Kingdom taxpayer; and what percentage change will take place in these costs over the next three years.

Mr. Gummer: Intervention storage costs in 1986-87 are expected to be about £134 million, towards which the Community will contribute about £60 million. The final cost of financing stocks will not be available until the intervention buying accounts for the calendar year 1986 are completed but the Community's contribution, at standard rates, for 1986-87 is expected to be about £75 million.

It is not possible to predict the percentage change which will take place in these figures over the next three years because expenditure will depend on market conditions including levels of production, trade and world prices for individual commodities. Costs of maintaining intervention stocks have been on a rising trend in recent years as stocks of most commodities have built up. But the major reforms of the beef and milk regimes agreed at the December Council and decisions still to be taken on cereals should lead to reductions in surpluses and to lower intervention costs.

Wheat

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will show the average ex-farm price of wheat in the United Kingdom for 1979 and each subsequent year in actual and at constant prices, showing 1979 prices and also showing 1979 as 100 per cent.

Mr. Gummer: The information is as follows and includes the figures supplied in my written reply to my hon. Friend on 26 February 1987 at column 368.

	Ex-farm price of home-grown wheat[1] (£ per tonne)		Price index (1979 = 100)

Lakes (Radioactivity)

Mr. Wigley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has carried out any analysis of lake water of flora and fauna in lakes, and of land surrounding lakes, to ascertain changes in the level of radioactivity following the Chernobyl disaster.

Mr. Gummer: Yes. The relevant data were published last October in a report from my Ministry entitled "Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles — Monitoring of Fallout from the Chernobyl Reactor Accident". A copy of this report was placed in the Library of the House. A further report on radioactivity in the aquatic environment will be made this year as part of the Ministry's annual series and a copy of it will be placed in the Library.

In addition, my Department carried out a comprehensive sampling programme for food and agricultural products, the results of which were published last month in a report entitled "Radionuclide Levels in Food, Animals and Agricultural Products — Post Chernobyl Monitoring in England and Wales". A copy may be found in the Library.

Sheep Compensation Scheme

Mr. Wigley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the proportion of expenditure incurred to date under the second leg of the sheep compensation scheme 1986 paid in respect of lost sheep (a) in England, (b) in Wales and (c) Scotland.

Mr. Gummer: Expenditure authorised to 27 February 1987 under the second leg of the sheep compensation scheme 1986 (which compensates for market price losses under the mark and release scheme) was:

	£	per cent.
England	50,959	3·1
Wales	805,119	48·9
Scotland	789,065	48·0
Total	1,645,143	100

Caesium (Cumbria)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department was testing for caesium contamination in the potential human food chain in Cumbria prior to the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

EC (Food Distribution)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to his answer of 25 February, Official Report, column 260, he (a) has now or (b) plans to have available in the future any breakdown of the distribution of European Community butter and beef; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Ryedale (Mrs. Shields) Official Report, 25 February, column 260, why he does not have figures of the geographical distribution of free EEC butter and beef; and if he will take steps to obtain this information.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1987, c. 682]: Figures are available to me showing, for each intervention storage location and charitable organisation, tonnages authorised for release and physically removed during particular periods. There are no central figures of actual distributions by geographical area, nor are there plans to compile this information because the costs to charitable organisations and to my Department would be disproportionate to the benefits.

Cereals

Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what account he takes, in seeking to secure export licences for cereals, of the likely effects upon other sectors of production in the industry.

Mr. Gummer: The quantities of cereals for which export licences are issued is determined weekly by the Commission in consultation with the cereals management committee. In deciding upon the quantities to be exported, full account is taken of the possible implications for the cereals and other sectors of the industry.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what it the total quantity of grain produced in each of the European Economic Community countries in 1986 and also the total amount of co-responsibility levy paid by each member state in pounds sterling.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1987, c. 683]: The cereals co-responsibility levy is payable when grain from the 1986 harvest is processed, exported or taken into intervention. Grain from the 1985 crop year entering such outlets in 1986 was not subject to levy.

[2] Not subject to levy.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the definition of a small farmer which will be used in establishing who will receive part of the 120 million ECU/£75 million in cereal co-responsibility refunds; how much of this total will be received by British small farmers and when; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1987 c. 683]: According to EC regulations, small producers of cereals who have borne the cereals co-responsibility levy are eligible for the aid. In defining the recipients of the aid within its own boundaries a member state is required to take into account the area of a holding under cereals and/or the utilised agricultural area of a holding and/or the proportion of a holding's incomes which is derived from cereals. The definition of the recipients of this aid in the United Kingdom is currently under consideration and we hope to be able to make an announcement shortly. The United Kingdom has been allocated 5·35 million ecus (£3·35 million) of the aid, which is to be paid out before 31 December 1987.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average ex-farm price of wheat received by (a) British farmers, (b) French farmers, (c) German farmers and (d) the EEC generally in 1979, 1984, 1985 and 1986, in pounds sterling.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 5 March c. 683]: The information requested by my hon. Friend is not yet available for the 1985-86 marketing years. I set out below the information for the 1979-80, 1983-84 and 1984-85 marketing years. Ex-farm prices for the European Community as a whole are not available.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the level of spending on social security benefits for sick and disabled people in each of the years 1978-79 and 1986-87; how this expenditure breaks down between the different social security benefits for sick and disabled people; what was the average annual increase in expenditure for the period 1979-80 to 1986-87 inclusive in real terms; how much of that increase in real terms was attributable to (a) increases in the real value of the social security benefits concerned and (b) increases in the number of people claiming each of the benefits; and what was the average annual increase in such expenditure in real terms for the period 1974-75 to 1978-79 inclusive.

Mr. Major: Over the period 1979-80 to 1986-87, real expenditure on social security benefits for sick and disabled people increased by an average of £230 million a year (at 1986-87 prices): roughly 70 per cent. of the increase was due to increases in the number of recipients and the remainder to increases in the average amount paid. The average annual real increase over the period 1974-75 to 1978-79 was £195 million (at 1986-87 prices). A breakdown of total expenditure among individual benefits is given in the table.

Expenditure on social security benefits paid to sick and disabled people in 1978-79 and 1986-87, by benefit—Great Britain

Bacteria MRSA

Sir Richard Body asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospitals have been affected by the bacteria Methicillin-resistant staphylocollus aureus (MRSA); and whether he will make a statement about its control.

Mrs. Currie: Methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) has spread widely throughout hospitals in London and to a lesser extent elsewhere. In 1986, MRSA was reported by 170 hospitals participating in a national survey.

High standards of hygiene for both patients and staff are important for control. All staff and patients moving between hospitals known to have a current outbreak of MRSA should be checked to see if they are carriers.

Patients who succumb to MRSA infections are isolated. Thorough cleaning of infected wards is an important preventive measure. Infection control nurses have an increasingly vital role to play in the maintenance of hygiene standards and avoidance of cross infection through effective liaison with all levels of hospital staff, including the organisation of training programmes for health care workers.

A national survey of MRSA is in continual progress. This survey, conducted jointly by the division of hospital infection of the public health laboratory service and the communicable disease surveillance centre, makes its results available to microbiologists allowing them to know whether patients and staff transferred to their hospitals come from areas where MRSA is prevalent.

Guidance on the control of multi-resistant staphylococcus aureus is available. The joint public health laboratory service/DHSS hospital infection working group has produced draft guidance on hospital infection in general. This document is presently out for consultation.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the numbers of entrants to his Department from the ethnic minorities in the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; if he will also list the monitoring procedures used to ascertain the percentage of the work force represented by ethnic minorities and their patterns of promotion; and what are his methods of recruitment of minorities into the Department.

Mr. Lyell: The ethnic origins of new entrants have been surveyed since October 1985. The surveying is conducted initially during the induction period with a follow-up some time later. The available information for the period up to 31 May 1986 for which both procedures are complete is

Total New Entrants to DHSS in period 1 October 1985 to 31 May 1986 = 6,803

Ethnic Origins	Number
White	4,386
Black/Asian	378
Not stated	2,039

The latest information available for the period up to 31 December 1986 for which only the initial issue is completed is

Total New Entrants to DHSS in period 1 June 1986 to 31 December 1986 = 6,281

Ethnic Origins	Number
White	1,493
Black/Asian	131
Not stated[1]	4,657

[1] This figure will substantially reduce following the reminder stage.

A phased programme of departmental surveys of the ethnic origin of non-industrial civil servants by means of voluntary self-classification is being conducted. By the end of 1986 the majority of non-industrial staff in the county of Avon, the north-west, the east and west midlands, London, the south-east and East Anglia had been surveyed. All remaining staff will be surveyed by 1988. Consideration is being given to ways of using the data on the ethnic origin of staff-in-post to monitor promotion.

All Departmental recruitment is conducted on the basis of fair and open competition, and selection is on merit. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Privy Council Office to her on 20 February at columns 880-81 reporting the arrangements being made to encourage people from the ethnic minorities to apply to the Civil Service.

Residential Homes

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has plans to seek to include local authority residential and nursing homes within the statutory inspection procedures relating to the private sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No. Local authorities have no responsibility for the provision of nursing homes: only for residential homes. The standards and proper conduct of local authority residential homes are primarily matters for the authority itself. My right hon. Friend also has certain powers under the National Assistance Act 1948 to carry out inspections of local authority provision.

The registration and inspection arrangements in the Registered Homes Act 1984 were designed specifically for the regulation and control of standards in the independent sector of residential care. It is not appropriate to apply these arrangements to local authority homes.

Maternity Payments

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any of the items previously considered essential under the Department of Health and Social Security single payment regulations will not be included in the new maternity payment.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery) on 25 February at column 322.

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payments for maternity items were made to women in Sheffield, Heeley; in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lyell: The information requested is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Bray asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Motherwell, South claimed the maternity grant in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the precise form requested.

The Motherwell, South constituency is covered by the Department's local offices at Motherwell, Hamilton and Wishaw, although their boundaries are not conterminous with the constituency. The numbers of claims for maternity grant received at those local offices during the 1986 calendar year were as follows:

	Number
Motherwell	944
Hamilton	1,968
Wishaw	792

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Lambeth claimed the maternity grant in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) on 23 February at columns 119-20.

Mr Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Lambeth received maternity allowance in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) on 23 February at column 120.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) following his statement of 23 June 1986 on invalid care allowance, Official Report, column 21, if he will state (a) the number of successful invalid care allowance claims to date and (b) the number of unsuccessful invalid care allowance claims to date;

(2) following his statement of 23 June 1986 on invalid care allowance, Official Report, column 21, if he will state the number of invalid care allowance claims received to date.

Mr. Major: The latest available information is set out in the table:

Invalid Care Allowance: Claims by Married Women at 27 February 1987

Claims	Number
Received	106,000
Decided	53,000
Successful	40,000
Unsuccessful	13,000

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payments for additional heating expenditure incurred this winter have been made in Walthamstow; what was the total cost; and what was the average cost of each payment.

Mr. Major: Up to 24 February 1987, the Walthamstow local office had made some 4,000 cold weather payments at £5 each. The total amount paid out was about £20,000.

Children

Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many voluntary organisations receive grants from his Department for dealing with child homelessness and child prostitution; and if he will list the organisations by name as well as the amount of funding they receive.

Mrs. Currie: Local authorities have certain responsibilities and a range of statutory powers to meet the needs of children who may be homeless or otherwise in need of care and protection. In addition a number of voluntary organisations provide facilities and guidance. The Department made grants in 1986-87 as listed to organisations providing services to homeless people, some of whom would be children and young people:

Campaign for Single Homeless	32,000
Homes for Homeless People	44,000
National Association of Voluntary Hostels	5,000
North Lambeth Project	13,000
Children's Society, Central London Teenage Project	20,000

The Department made no grants to voluntary organisations specifically to deal with child prostitution. The criminal law relevant to child prostitution is a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary.

Registered Homes Act 1984

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what reply he sent to the Director of the Catholic Social Services concerning the letter to him of 9 December 1986 regarding the Registered Homes Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I wrote to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 19 February in reply to the letter dated 9 December from the director of Catholic Social Services.

Pensions

Mr. Higgins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the extra cost to public funds of increasing the national insurance pension to pensioners who have no other source of income by £1 per week.

Mr. Major: No estimates are available of the number of pensioners with no income other than the basic pension. Most pensioners without income from other sources would qualify for supplementary benefit in addition to their basic pension, and for housing benefit if they were householders. The cost of increasing the basic pension by £1 for all single pensioners and by £1·60 for a married couple in 1987-88 would be about £450 million. This estimate does not take account of any savings on supplementary benefit or housing benefit.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many births there were in Sheffield in the last year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery) on 24 February at column 230.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many births there were in Tooting in the last year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: During 1985 there were 1,337 live births to women living in the parliamentary constituency of Tooting.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what instructions have been issued to regional health authorities concerning waiting lists and times for treatment in the National Health Service; if he is satisfied that an early fall in waiting lists and times can be achieved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Food Additives

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set up an urgent inquiry into the effect on the health and well-being of children arising from additives contained in food manufactured for children; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

AIDS

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the age and sex of persons who have died from AIDS at the latest available date.

Mr. Newton: AIDS cases and deaths are reported in confidence by doctors to the voluntary monitoring system operated by the communicable disease surveillance centre. The operation of the system is currently being computerised and it is hoped that an age and sex distribution of AIDS cases and deaths will be available very shortly. I will then let the hon. Member have a further reply.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the facilities for the screening for AIDS in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: This information is not kept centrally. The hon. Member may wish to approach the Mersey regional health authority directly for the information.

Occupational Pensions

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people at work in 1979 were contributing to an occupational pension, or were covered by a non-contributory occupational pension scheme; how many in 1987; and in both cases what percentage of the working population it represented.

Mr. Major: The Government Actuary's surveys of occupational pension schemes indicate that in 1979, 11·6 million employees were covered by an occupational pension scheme, whether contributory or non-contributory, representing some 50 per cent. of employees in employment. In 1983, the latest survey available, 11·1 million employees were covered, representing some 52 per cent. of those in employment. In addition, about 1·8 million people were either in employment without occupational pension scheme coverage, but had preserved rights from earlier employments, or had preserved rights but were not in employment at the time.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many retirement pensioners received an occupational pension in 1979, additional to their basic state retirement pension; how many in 1987; and in both cases what percentage of all retirement pensioners it represented.

Mr. Major: The best information available is derived from the "Family Expenditure Survey" and relates to tax units with heads over minimum state pension age. These units may represent single pensioners or married couples. It shows that in 1979, 41 per cent. of pensioner tax units —2·6 million — received at least one occupational pension, whereas by 1985, the latest figures available, some 51 per cent. (3·4 million) did so. In 1985, some 70 per cent. of recently retired married couples had an occupational pension. The Government Actuary's surveys of occupational pension schemes show that in 1979 there were 3·7 million occupational pensions in payment, and 5 million in 1983. However, these figures include pensions to widows and to persons below state pension age.

It is not possible to say precisely how many pensioners received an occupational pension in addition to their basic state retirement pension. The great majority of pensioners with entitlement to an occupational pension would also have entitlement to a state basic pension where they had reached minimum state pension age and had retired.

Draught-proofing Grants

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to ensure local authority tenants are fully aware of the single payments for draught-proofing currently provided by his Department.

Mr. Major: Publicity for these payments is not specifically targeted on local authority tenants. Single payments for draught-proofing materials are referred to in two leaflets produced by the Department, and callers to the Department's freephone service are informed of their availability where appropriate. The Monergy hotline and freepost services, through which callers are referred to "Neighbourhood Energy Action", have also been widely advertised by the Department of Energy.

Patients' Records (Bolton)

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will investigate the mislaying of patients' records at Bolton general hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Bolton Health Authority which has responsibility for patient care services in this hospital has already investigated the situation. Approximately 300 patients were affected. Immediate action has been taken to admit patients for in-patient treatment where urgent treatment is required and General Practitioners have been notified of patients classified as non urgent so that they can review the urgency of their classification.

Heart Transplant Centre (Wythenshawe)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 95, when he expects to receive the advice of the supra regional services advisory group about the recognition of Wythenshawe hospital as a heart transplant centre; how long he expects his consideration of that advice to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We expect to receive the advice of the supra regional services advisory group during the autumn. A statement about the fourth designated heart transplant centre will be included in my right hon. Friend's announcement at the end of the year.

Wessex RHA

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people are currently on hospital waiting lists for day surgery in the Wessex regional health authority;

(2) how many people have been on hospital waiting lists in the Wessex regional health authority for more than one and two years from the latest available date.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member all the information he seeks. At 31 March 1986, the latest date for which information is available centrally, the number of cases on the waiting list for more than one year for admission to NHS hospitals in Wessex was 10,164. Statistical information on cases awaiting day surgery will be collected centrally from 1 April 1987 when the recommendations of the steering group on health services information are implemented. The hon. Member may wish to write to the Chairman of the Wessex regional health authority for the rest of the information he requires.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of full-time ancilliary workers working for the Wessex regional health authority for each of the last four years.

Mr. Newton: The table shows all ancillary staff directly employed by Wessex regional health authority during the last four years:

Ancillary staff in post in Wessex regional health authority[1]

At 30 September	Whole time equivalent[2]
1983	8,590
1984	8,050
1986[3]	6,620

[1] On 1 April 1984 some 150 (wte) Operating Department Assistants were re-classified from Ancillary to Professional and Technical staff group. These figures have not been adjusted for this re-classification.
[2] Figures are rounded to the nearest 10 whole time equivalents.
[3] Provisional.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have been added to the out-patients appointment list of hospitals in the Wessex regional health authority over the last six months for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. member the information he seeks. It is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Wessex regional health authority for the information requested.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the weekly amounts of standard housing benefit currently payable (assuming a grant-aided period of 38 weeks) to a single grant-aided student without dependents or disability, aged under 25, studying on an advanced course at a London college and living in privately rented accommodation by way of (i) rent allowance for eligible rents of £18, £20, £22, £24, £26, £28 and £30 per week; and (ii) rate rebate (assuming the student's eligible rent to exceed £17·70 per week) for eligible rates of £2·50, £3, £4 and £5 per week; and what will be the weekly amounts of benefit payable to the same student in the same circumstances under the housing benefit scheme to be introduced under the Social Security Act 1986 on the basis that the tapers for rent allowance and rate rebate will be 60 per cent. and 20 per cent., respectively, that 20 per cent. of rates will be ineligible for benefit and upon the assumption that the basic level of income support for a claimant aged under 25 will be £25 per week; and if he will present the above information in tabulated form so as to show losses or gains as between comparable claims under the present and intended new systems.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Abortions

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 23 February, Official Report, column 113, if he will indicate the owner and registered company address of each of those private clinics licensed to perform abortions; and if he will indicate in the case of each such clinic whether agency arrangements exist for the carrying out in the clinic of National Health Service-funded abortions.

Mr. Newton: Information on ownership is provided by applicants for approval under the Abortion Act to my right hon. Friend for his own use and is not intended for publication. My hon. Friend should approach approved places direct for this information.

Information is not routinely collected about the existence of agency arrangements.

Medicines

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take to deal with the increased work in connection with human medicines arising under the Medicines Act 1968.

Mr. Newton: Applications for licences of various sorts have been rising by about 10 per cent. a year. It is encouraging to see this evidence of success in an industry that is responsible for an important part of health care provision in this country, and one of the objectives of the new pharmaceutical price regulation scheme that we introduced last October is to provide further encouragement to research and development in this field. But this increase in activity—and increases in applications for export certificates and in work on adverse reactions, enforcement and other aspects of medicines control—has necessarily given rise to a substantial increase in the work undertaken by the Department's division concerned with the administration of the Medicines Act.

We have added a number of posts to the staff of medicines division, and are reviewing the use of information technology for all aspects of the Division's work. But licence applications and other work on the control of medicines are expected to increase year by year, and it is important to ensure that our arrangements are fully capable of meeting future needs. I have therefore decided to commission an independent study of the matter. It will be carried out by Dr. John Evans, previously a Deputy Chief Medical Officer in DHSS, and by Mr.

Peter Cunliffe, who will retire from the Chairmanship of the pharmaceuticals division of ICI at the end of this month. Their terms of reference will be:

"To examine the issues for DHSS arising from the continued increases in licence applications and other work under the Medicines Act and to recommend ways of dealing expeditiously with this work, while maintaining adequate standards for the safety, efficacy and quality of human medicines in the United Kingdom".

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 16 January, Official Report, column 348, if a severe disability premium will be payable to a person who has someone living with him to care for him who is ineligible for invalid care allowance on account of (a) receipt of an overlapping benefit such as retirement pension or (b) earnings of more than £12 a week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: [pursuant to his reply, 9 February 1987, c. 130]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 2 March at columns 505-506.

Cervical and Breast Cancer

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many tests for cervical cancer have been made on women in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside in each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 10 March 1987, c. 163-64]: The information requested is as follows:

Information for 1986 is not yet available centrally.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the facilities provided for the screening of cancer of the breast at (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the facilities provided for the screening of cervical cancer in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement on the facilities provided for the detection of cancer of the breast at (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside; and if he will make a statement;

(4) how much has been spent by the National Health Service on cervical cancer in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside in each of the past five years;

(5) how much has been spent by the National Health Service on screening of cancer of the breast in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside in each of the past five years;

(6) what is the average waiting time of women in Liverpool who have had tests for cervical cancer to receive details of the test; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 10 March 1987, c. 163-64]: I am sorry that I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. It is not available centrally. The provision of cancer screening services in Liverpool and other health districts in Merseyside is the responsibility of Mersey Regional Health Authority. The hon. Members may therefore wish to contact the regional chairman.

SCOTLAND

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how his projection of manufacturing output in Scotland in 1987-88 compares with that of 1979-80; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Formal projections are not available, but I expect manufacturing output in Scotland to rise in 1987-88.

Scottish New Towns

13. Mr. Lambie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the employment prospects in the five Scottish new towns.

Mr. Lang: Recent decisions by a number of companies suggest that over 4,000 permanent jobs will be created in the new towns in the next few years. The most notable recent example is the decision by Kymmene-Stromberg to set up a paper mill in Irvine new town.

Railways (Punctuality)

14. Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his assessment of the impact on the Scottish economy which would result from all railway trains running on time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: It is not possible accurately to quantify in economic terms the effect of late-running trains. However, I understand from British Rail that 89 per cent. of trains in Scotland now arrive within five minutes of schedule and that ScotRail is making continuing efforts to improve this record, for example by a programme of rolling stock replacement.

Construction Industry

15. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to meet the representatives of employers and employees in the construction industry to discuss the unemployment position in that industry; and what steps can be taken to reduce the unemployment figures particularly in the Banff and Buchan constituency.

Mr. Ancram: The Government hold regular meetings with the Scottish construction industry group, on which employers and employees are represented, in order to discuss many aspects of the industry including employment issues. I shall be meeting the group again in the near future and expect to hear soon about the issues which the industry's representatives wish to discuss on that occasion. Employment prospects depend on the continuation of this Government's policies of promoting economic recovery and creating the right environment for growth.

Women (Health Care)

16. Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the level of resources being channelled towards preventive and primary health care for women in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: My noble Friend the Minister of State announced on 25 February that £1 million would be made available in 1987-88 to enable a start to be made in Scotland on the implementation of the Forrest report on breast cancer screening. We are considering at present a report about the cervical cancer screening service in Scotland.

The Scottish Health Education Group has a number of programmes directed towards the needs of women. Its "Well Women" booklets are distributed to individuals, self-help and community groups and its "Book of the Child" is distributed to expectant and nursing mothers. The family practitioner and community health services provide, inter alia, advice and treatment on maternal and child health and family planning: in neither case, however, is it possible to identify the level of resources devoted specifically to women.

Prisons (Overcrowding)

17. Mr. Hugh Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set up a inquiry to establish the extent of overcrowding in Scottish prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The measures which my Department will be taking to achieve a better balance between adult and young offender accommodation, together with the additional 468 places which will become available following the opening of phase II of Shotts prison this summer, should largely eliminate overcrowding, provided that there is no significant increase in the inmate population or loss of accommodation.

My right hon. and learned Friend therefore sees no need to set up an inquiry.

GEAR Project

18. Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will reconsider his decision to bring the Glasgow eastern area renewal project in the east end of Glasgow to an end on 31 March 1987; and if he will make a statement as to his estimate of the effect this will have on employment in the area.

Mr. Ancram: The decision to end the GEAR project as such in March 1987 was taken in 1983 by all the sponsoring bodies collectively and not by my right hon. and learned Friend. The sponsoring bodies have, however, jointly prepared plans for their continuing commitment to the GEAR area from 1 April. There is no reason to expect that employment in the area will be adversely affected by the changed arrangements.

Forestry Operations

19. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek to give the Forestry Commission wider powers to restrict forestry operations in Scotland where grant approval has not been given.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend sees no justification at present for seeking to give such wider powers to the Commission.

Prison Conditions

20. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next proposes to meet the Association of Scottish Prison Governors for discussions on conditions in Scottish prisons.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no request for such a meeting. I met the trade union side of the Scottish prison service, which included the Society of Civil and Public servants (Governors' Committee), on 23 January to discuss a number of matters, including overcrowding, affecting the Scottish prison service.

Muir Construction Ltd.

21. Mr. Gourlay asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he was notified by the Fife regional council of Muir Construction Ltd.'s application in respect of a retail and industrial development at Mitchelston industrial estate, Kirkcaldy; when he expects to announce his decision; how long the extended period of consideration has taken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Fife regional council notified me of this planning application in a letter of 6 November last. On 20 November, following the receipt of further necessary information from the council, we started the 28-day period within which I normally decide whether to call in an application of this kind. The issues arising from this application, however, are not straightforward. We have, therefore, extended the time for consideration at intervals since 20 November, latterly until 12 March—an overall period of just under four months. I require more time to reach my decision and the period is being further extended until 9 April, although I hope to reach a conclusion before then.

Caterpillar Tractor Co.

22. Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he intends to take to recover any of the £7½ million given to Caterpillar in grants and assistance since 1975.

Mr. Rifkind: This figure relates to grants to all Caterpillar United Kingdom plants. There are well-established rules regarding repayment of grants and I shall act in accordance with them when the need arises.

29. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will arrange a further meeting with senior Caterpillar management representatives about the future of the factory at Uddingston; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have no plans at present for a further meeting with senior Caterpillar management.

Ayr Road Route

23. Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his proposed timetable for any public inquiries concerning the line of the Ayr road route.

Mr. Rifkind: I am not yet in a position to say whether, or when, a public inquiry into the proposed line of the Ayr road route will be necessary. This will depend on the nature and substance of objections received and whether or not they can be resolved by negotiation.

Scottish Development Agency

24. Mr. Pollock asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to extend the role of the Scottish Development Agency in areas of high unemployment which do not enjoy assisted area status.

Mr. Rifkind: There is no need to do so since the Scottish Development Agency already provides services throughout Scotland. In the area covered by the Highlands and Islands Development Board the agency complements the services of the board.

Mentally Handicapped People

25. Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to issue guidelines to health boards for carrying out their policy of care in the community for the mentally handicapped along the lines of those recently issued in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend does not intend to issue such guidelines since he believes that it is for health boards themselves to determine how mentally handicapped persons are transferred from hospital to the community in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Police Surgeons (Strathclyde)

26. Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police surgeons there are in the Strathclyde region; and of these how many are male.

Mr. Lang: At present 97 police surgeons (of whom I understand 91 are male) are employed or retained by Strathclyde regional council. In addition, in the light of the circular on the investigation of complaints of sexual assault which the Scottish Home and Health Department issued to chief constables in November 1985, Strathclyde police have engaged the services of seven female doctors, who, although not police surgeons, are willing, where necessary to examine women complaining of sexual assault.

Aberdeen and North-East Scotland

27. Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will initiate a study into the economy of Aberdeen and north-east Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I have no plans to initiate such a study.

Beef Producers

28. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the Scottish National Farmers Union to discuss the problems confronting beef producers in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: I discussed the present state of the beef sector with the president of the National Farmers Union of Scotland when we met on 13 February. The union will have a further opportunity for a discussion with my right hon. and learned Friend and me when we attend its AGM this week.

Newspaper Industry

30. Sir Alex Fletcher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his assessment of the effect of the current state of the Scottish economy on the newspaper industry in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The prospects for the Scottish economy are seen to be substantially better for 1987 than for 1986 and Scotland should benefit from the current improvement in the United Kingdom and world economies. In general, the newspaper industry in Scotland is performing soundly, its profitability is not a cause for concern, and it is experiencing major technological changes.

Moray House College of Education

31. Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans there are for developing nursery school training and qualifications at Moray house college of education; and what specific funding is being provided.

Mr. John MacKay: In common with other colleges of education Moray house offers a range of pre-service and in-service courses which include training for work in nursery schools. The development of such traning is in the first instance a matter for the governing body. At present, the college receives specific funding to meet the running costs of its own nursery school. That funding will be withdrawn from the end of June this year, bringing Moray house into line with other colleges of education.

Oil-Related Activity

32. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the impact of the diminution of oil-related activity on Scottish employment and output.

Mr. Lang: The decline in oil-related activity resulting from the fall in the price of oil is estimated to have resulted in the loss of 20,000 jobs in Scotland in 1986, broadly equivalent to 1 per cent. of total Scottish employment. The downturn in oil-related activity is likely to continue to have an adverse effect on the Scottish economy in the short term and this is a source of concern. However, Scottish industry should be well placed to capitalise on the opportunities provided by the anticipated recovery in the United Kingdom and world economies in 1987.

Boat Building

33. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with representatives of the Scottish fishing industry regarding grants for boat building.

Mr. John MacKay: I met representatives of the Scottish Fishermen's Federation and of the Fishing Boatbuilders Association during December 1986, and grants for boatbuilding were amongst the subjects discussed.

Labour Statistics

34. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about current levels of unemployment in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The continuing problem of unemployment, particularly in Scotland, remains one of the Government's principal concerns. The impact over the last year of lower oil-related employment, notably in Grampian region, has been a key factor. Scotland might well otherwise have experienced a fall in unemployment in line with the rest of the United Kingdom.

The primary objective of the Government's policy is to create the conditions in which unemployment will fall. The rate of inflation has been brought down, providing a more stable environment for industry, and a wide range of measures to assist employment, improve incentives and increase flexibility has been introduced. Our current action for jobs campaign aims to ensure that everyone knows about the range of practical help on offer to tackle the problems of unemployment.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many young people under 25 years of age are unemployed in the Greenock travel-to-work area and Strathclyde region; and of these how many have been unemployed for more than one, two, three and four years.

Mr. Lang: On 8 January 1987 (the latest date for which information is available) the numbers of unemployed claimants under 25 years of age in the Greenock travel-to-work area and Strathclyde regional authority by duration were as shown in the table.

Duration Unemployed	Greenock travel-to-work area Number of Unemployed Claimants	Strathclyde Regional Authority Number of Unemployed Claimants
Up to 1 year	2,447	54,786
1 to 2 years	668	12,009
2 to 3 years	260	4,915
3 to 4 years	113	2,755
over 4 years	155	3,583
Total	3,643	78,048

This information is available in the Library.

Local Income Tax

35. Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Institute of Fiscal Studies regarding administrative options for a local income tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no such representations.

Community Charges

36. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received concerning the introduction of community charges.

Mr. Ancram: Over 200 representations have been received from individuals and a wide range of organisations since the publication of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Bill.

Rheumatism

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of people suffering from rheumatism; and if he can provide a breakdown by age group.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not centrally available.

Senile Dementia

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of people suffering from senile dementia; and what is his estimate of the percentage of the (a) post-70, (b) post-75 and (c) post-80 years age groups suffering from it.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available since it is not possible to estimate accurately the national prevalence of a disease the less severe cases of which may not be recorded. However, the number of residents in mental hospitals and psychiatric units who are suffering from senile dementia provides some measure of the prevalence of the more severe forms of this disease. At the beginning of 1985 the number of such patients in Scotland was 727 aged 65 to 74 years; and 3,588 aged 75 years and over. These figures correspond to rates for Scotland of 0·6 per thousand population for those aged 65 and over and 1·2 per thousand for those aged 75 and over.

Commissioner for Local Administration

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to the recommendations that have been made in reports of the Commissioner for Local Administration in Scotland that remedies therein proposed should be statutorily enforceable.

Mr. Ancram: This matter was recently considered by the Widdicombe committee, which endorsed the view that there should be a statutory mechanism for the enforcement of a remedy recommended in a report by any of the local ombudsmen for Scotland, England or Wales. We have encouraged widespread debate on the many important issues raised in the Widdicombe committee's report (Cmnd. 9797) and have received a large number of comments and representations on the report. We shall want to consider all these very carefully before coming to any conclusions.

Crown Estate Commissioners

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether in the last two years he has given any directions to the Crown Estate Commissioners as to the discharge of their functions under the Crown Estate Act 1961; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Neither I nor any predecessor have given any such direction to the Commissioners in the last two years.

Distillers and Bells (Takeovers)

Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received concerning the Guinness takeovers of Distillers and Bells.

Mr. Lang: In addition to correspondence from my hon. Friend since the beginning of December 1986 my right hon. and learned Friend has received representations from six hon. Members, the STUC, Cumbernauld and Kilsyth district council, the Amalgamated Engineering Union and from two people employed in the industry.

Renfrew Economic Initiative

Mr. Buchan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the Renfrew economic initiative.

Mr. Lang: I have done so in the light of recent representations. I have concluded that the proposals discussed between the Scottish Development Agency and its potential partners in Renfrew form an excellent basis for an effective economic initiative. I hope that all the participants will now proceed to agreement to implement the proposals as soon as practicable.

Elderly People

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for increasing the number of sheltered houses, residential home places and hospital beds for elderly people in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The stock of sheltered housing has increased more than threefold since 1979 and we shall continue to give strong encouragement to further expansion wherever it is required. The stock of residential home places is increasing more slowly consistent with the relative priorities of local authorities. We have made it clear that we back strongly the priorities given to health provision for the elderly in the report "Scottish Health Authorities Priorities for the Eighties".

Trunk Roads (Dumfries and Galloway)

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money was spent on trunk road improvements in Dumfries and Galloway in the years 1974 to 1979 and 1979 to 1987; and what expenditure is projected for 1987 to 1992.

Mr. Rifkind: Details of expenditure by region are available only from 1975 onwards. In the four financial years up to 1979, £7·5 million was spent on trunk road improvements in Dumfries and Galloway. Expenditure in the eight financial years from 1979 to date has amounted to over £50 million.

As to the future, 11 major schemes in Dumfries and Galloway, with a total value of £41 million, are possible starts in the period up to 1992.

Sheriffs

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sheriffs are currently in post in Scotland; and of these how many are female.

Mr. Lang: Eighty-nine and four, respectively.

AIDS

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the age and sex of persons who have died from AIDS at the latest available date.

Mr. John MacKay: Ten men and one woman had died from AIDS in Scotland by the end of February 1987. Their ages when they were registered with the Communicable Diseases (Scotland) Unit as suffering from AIDS were as follows:

Male 1 aged 23 years.
3 aged 34 years.
1 aged 35 years.
1 aged 37 years.
1 aged 41 years.
1 aged 47 years.
1 aged 48 years.
1 aged 63 years.

Female 1 aged 34 years.

Retraining Centres (Strathclyde)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the retraining centres for unemployed people in Strathclyde.

Mr. Lang: The Manpower Services Commission funds adult training courses at the following establishments in Strathclyde. Each of these centres offers training and retraining for both unemployed and employed people.

Health Boards (Financial Allocations)

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial allocations he has made to health boards for 1987-88.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend has allocated £1,535 million to health boards to meet their gross recurrent expenditure commitments on hospitals and community health services in 1987-88. After expected income is taken into account, the net cash limited allocations to individual health boards are as follows:

Health Boards (Capital Allocations)

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what capital allocations he has made to health boards for 1987-88.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend has allocated £107·82 million to health boards to meet their gross capital expenditure commitments on hospital and community health services in 1987-88. This includes £21 million specifically for the improvement and upgrading of the NHS estate. In addition, a further £5 million will be made available for projects not specifically allocated to individual health boards.

The allocations to individual health boards are as follows:

Health boards	Capital allocation (£ million)

Public Health (Scotland) Act 1897

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what responses he has received to the consultation paper issued by him in April 1986 on the future of part II of the Public Health (Scotland) Act 1897; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend is grateful to the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and other bodies and individuals who responded to the consultation paper. While there was general support in principle for reassessing and modernising the present legislation, the general tenor of the responses did not indicate that this was seen as an immediate priority. We shall now make a detailed study of the comments received, and will announce in due course the action which it is proposed to take.

DEFENCE

Expenditure

Mr. Neale asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total expenditure on defence for the financial years 1969-70 to 1986-87, all figures at constant 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Stanley: The information is as follows:

1986-87	18,480

The figures have been calculated using GDP deflators and have been adjusted to reflect a uniform definition of the defence budget throughout the period.

Nuclear Weapons (Transportation)

Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what advance information is given to fire and police authorities about movements of vehicles carrying nuclear warheads;

(2) what advance information is given to area health boards about movements of vehicles carrying nuclear warheads;

(3) what advance information is given to district councils in Scotland about movements of vehicles carrying nuclear warheads.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) on 22 October 1984 at column 437. Information about nuclear weapon movements is not given to health authorities or to local authorities.

COBRA

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the progress of discussions made on his behalf within the independent European programme group about the proposed collaborative COBRA counter artillery radar tracking system; and what proportion of the cost of this programme is expected to be funded by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In conjunction with our French and German partners we are currently evaluating project definition study reports submitted by three industrial consortia in December last. We expect that a decision on whether to proceed to full development and, if so, under what arrangements, will be taken by about the middle of this year.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

News International Publications

Mr. Greenway asked the Attorney-General what information he has as to the total costs of public funds of the court cases involving the ban by three London boroughs on News International publications in public libraries; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The total cost to central Government of these cases is estimated at £4,600. This includes the cost of court accommodation and the salaries of the judiciary and court staff involved. As regards fees to the legal profession, these are for the parties concerned. News International obtained an order for costs.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Seat Belts

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought under the legislation relating to the compulsory wearing of seat belts in vehicles for each of the years since its enactment; in which constabulary areas these took place; and how many resulted in convictions.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the total number of proceedings and findings of guilt for seat belt offences is published annually in "Offences relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables", (table 5 of the issue for 1985). The information for individual police force areas which can be provided without disproportionate cost is shown in the following table.

Prisoners (Escort)

Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to the prison service of escorting prisoners to court in each of the last three financial years.

Mr. Mellor: The cost to the prison service of escorting prisoners to court, including the costs of manning the Crown court, is estimated at £32·9 million in each of the financial years 1984-85 and 1985-86. Comparable information for 1983-84 is not available.

Remand

Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to reduce time spent on remand by unconvicted prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: The steps which we are taking were outlined in my reply to a question from the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) on 17 February, at column 559. On 6 March we laid regulations which will introduce statutory time limits on periods in custody in criminal proceedings from 1 April in the three police areas of Avon and Somerset, Kent and the west midlands.

S4C

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will specify the funds allocated to Sianel 4 Cymru during each year since its inception, differentiating between the contributions from the Independent Broadcasting Authority, operating charges and cost of programmes supplied by the British Broadcasting Corporation, Harlec Television and independent producers.

Mr. Mellor: Programmes provided by the BBC are supplied at nil cost to S4C. The other information requested, which has been taken from S4C's annual reports, is as follows:

Electoral Registration Forms

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultation took place with the representatives of political parties and English electoral registration officers over the design and wording of the new forms 7, 7B and 9; and how this differed from consultation on previous occasions when the design and wording for the electoral registration forms was revised.

Mr. Hurd: There was full consultation with the political parties, local authority associations and bodies representing electoral registration officers in England and Wales on the content of the Representation of the People Regulations 1986, which largely govern the wording of these forms. The need to have the forms available by 1 January this year did not allow time for consultation on the design, although there was some informal consultation on the size of the forms. If my hon. Friend has any suggestion to make about the forms, we would be glad to consider it.

There was extensive consultation when the electoral registration form A was changed, but on that occasion there had been no previous discussions on regulations prescribing the content of the form.

Citizenship

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of Commonwealth citizens, resident in the United Kingdom prior to January 1973 with right of abode, who qualify for the registration of citizenship under the Nationality Act 1981 before 31 December.

Mr. Waddington: The number with such an entitlement cannot be accurately calculated. However, we have received 170,000 applications for registration between 1 January 1983 and 28 February 1987, the great majority for which related to an entitlement, and we have budgeted for a further 55,000 such applications for the rest of this calendar year.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what publicity campaign he plans to remind Commonwealth citizens, resident in the United Kingdom prior to January 1973 with right of abode, to register their citizenship under the Nationality Act 1981 before 31 December.

Mr. Waddington: The Home Office published last July an information leaflet on registration rights entitled "Your Right to British Citizenship", together with a poster drawing attention to the leaflet. Copies of the leaflet were placed in the Library. The leaflet is now available in seven languages. In recent weeks advertisements have been placed in selected local newspapers and in newspapers serving ethnic minority communities drawing attention to the registration provisions and the leaflet. We will consider whether a further reminder is required later in the year.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking allocation of resources forfeited by drug offenders towards assistance to rehabilitation schemes for drug addicts.

Mr. Mellor: We have received two letters on this subject recently. The Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 empowers the Crown court to order the confiscation of the proceeds of drug trafficking and, in accordance with established Government accounting arrangements, provides for the money thus realised to be paid into the Consolidated Fund, which is used to finance Government expenditure generally. The Government are providing substantial funding for measures to tackle all aspects of the drugs problem, including the development of services for drug misusers.

EMPLOYMENT

Community Programme

Mr. Merlyn Rees asked the Paymaster General what alterations have been made in rates of payment to voluntary organisations sponsoring community programme schemes in respect of agency fees and operating costs since 1982.

Mr. Lee: The community programme agency fee and the maximum level of operating costs that can be reimbursed, are £100 and £440 per place, per annum, respectively. There have been no changes to these rates since 1982.

However, we keep under review the levels of approved costs which can be reimbursed and make changes whenever this would improve the cost-effective use of taxpayers' money.

Mr. Merlyn Rees asked the Paymaster General what percentage reduction in authorised and filled places is planned in community programme schemes run by voluntary organisations in 1987-88; what are the planned percentage reductions in schemes run by local authorities and by the private sector respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Information in the form requested is not available centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Places are allocated to regions and areas in the light of both national priorities set out in the planning guidance for 1987-88, and priorities determined locally in consultation with area manpower boards.

Collective Bargaining

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Paymaster General what assessment he has made of the effect of levels of unemployment upon the pattern of collective bargaining over the past seven years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Training Schemes (Leicester)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General what plans the Manpower Services Commission has for the two adult preparation training schemes in Leicester; how many adults are currently in training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Crosville Bus Company

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General if he will meet the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside, to discuss the sacking of 270 transport workers by the Crosville Bus Company at Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The resolution of disputes is a matter for the parties concerned. The assistance of the independent Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service is available to them and I understand that ACAS officials have been in touch with the parties. I do not think, therefore, that a meeting with the hon. Member would be appropriate at this stage.

Job Training

Mr. Wareing asked the Paymaster General how many young people in each of the five Merseyside districts have been recruited into the job training scheme; what is the average length of time of the training/work placements in the area; what has been the nature of the jobs provided; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The new job training scheme will begin in Merseyside in April.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Arms Control (Geneva)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent information he has received on the state of the arms control talks in Geneva.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The seventh round of the Geneva nuclear and space talks was due to end on 4 March. The element of the talks dealing with INF has been extended to enable further discussions to take place. The United States tabled a full draft Treaty on INF on 4 March.

We have also welcomed the statement by Mr. Gorbachev of 28 February in which there were three positive aspects. First, he accepted the concept of an INF agreement based on the zero option which the Alliance put forward some six years ago. Second, he removed the Soviet-imposed linkage between an INF agreement and SDI. Third, he made no reference to United Kingdom and French deterrents being included.

Our aim remains an agreement eliminating LRINF missiles from Europe and incorporating constraints on shorter-range systems. Thereafter we envisage subsequent negotiations on remaining INF systems. Effective verification will be an essential part of all these negotiations.

The chemical weapons negotiations resumed on 3 February. We hope it will be possible to build on the encouraging progress last year.

Blowpipe Missiles

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to ensure that Blowpipe missiles made in the United Kingdom are not being supplied to any Government or organisation which might supply them to Contra forces in Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: Allegations in the media that we have given approval to the supply of Blowpipe to the Contras are totally unfounded. Following the publication of the Tower commission report the US Government have assured us that there are no Blowpipes in Contra hands and that there is no US intention to supply Blowpipe to the Contras. We have made it clear that the problems of this region cannot be solved by armed force and support the Contadora objectives which call for a reduction in arms levels. The system of licensing exports of military equipment enables us to control the supply of arms from the United Kingdom in accordance with this policy.

Nuclear Tests (Monitoring)

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to respond to the offer to place a British seismic monitor in the Soviet Union to share in the monitoring of future Soviet nuclear tests.

Mr. Renton: No such offer has been made to us. In the case of the monitors installed in the Soviet Union by a non-official US body, we understand that they were in fact not operating at the time of the Soviet test on 26 February.

Military Equipment (Export Licences)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) on how many occasions in 1985 and 1986 his Department was consulted over the granting of export licences for Blowpipe missiles;

(2) on how many occasions in 1985 and 1986 his Department was consulted over the granting of export licences for military walkie-talkie radios.

Mr. Renton: This Department is consulted over all export licence applications for military or paramilitary equipment. This consultation takes place at different levels and in different forms and we do not maintain a record of the number of occasions on which we are consulted over particular applications.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions in 1985 and 1986 his Department was consulted over the granting of export licences for military uniforms.

Mr. Renton: Military uniforms are not covered by the Export of Goods (Control) Order. The question of this Department being consulted over the granting of export licences does not therefore arise.

Nicaragua (Arms)

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to complete his inquiries into allegations of the supply of British arms to the Contra forces in Nicaragua; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Recent allegations of British arms supplies to the Contras have already been denied as unfounded. All British arms exports are subject to control through the export licensing procedure. There are thus no grounds for holding an investigation, nor has evidence been produced to support the allegations.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many individuals and how many organisations have contacted the city technology college unit since his Department's publication of "A New Choice of School"; how many of these expressed an interest in starting a college; and how much money has been offered.

Mrs. Rumbold: Several hundred individuals and organisations have contacted the city technology college unit since the publication of "A New Choice of School". Many of these have expressed interest in assisting with the establishment of colleges, whether financially or in other ways. In addition to the £1 million in sponsorship offered by Hanson Trust, several other individuals and organisations have expressed a willingness to provide funding. Some of these offers are conditional or subject to discussion, and I am not prepared to confirm offers until sponsors are ready to make their decision public.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide the figures for capital expenditure financed by central Government for the universities and public sector higher education for each of the last five years, together with the projections for 1987-88, broken down on a per capita basis, as expenditure per full-time equivalent student, after making allowance for medical capital expenditure in the universities.

Mr. Walden: The following table shows capital expenditure per full-time equivalent student, financed by central Government on universities in Great Britain and direct grant institutions of higher education in England for each of the last five years, and projections for 1987-88, excluding medical capital expenditure in the universities. Capital expenditure in the local authority sector of higher education is not financed directly by central Government.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide the figures of universities' total spending on minor building works, defined as projects under £1 million in value, which are funded out of revenue block grant, in the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Walden: The available information on minor works met specifically from the University Grants Committee's recurrent grant is given in the table. Only the figures for the last two years relate to outturn. This information was not collected centrally for previous years for which figures for intended provision are given.

Workers Educational Association

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about Government support of the Workers Educational Association.

Mr. Walden: It is the policy of my right hon. Friend to maintain existing educational opportunities for adults, and to extend provision for groups with special needs such as the unemployed and those lacking basic literacy and numeracy skills, within the constraints of available resources. While tackling new priorities inevitably involves changes in existing funding structures, my right hon. Friend remains committed to the support of liberal adult education through courses provided by the Workers Educational Association. About £2,545,000 in grant-aid has been made available to the Association for this purpose in the current financial year.

My right hon. Friend is aware that some WEA districts are currently facing particularly acute financial difficulties, and he is considering a request for additional grant. He expects to announce his decision soon.

Conductive Education

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the latest progress towards Her Majesty's Government's evaluation of conductive education.

Mr. Dunn: The University of Birmingham submitted a formal research grant application on 25 February, towards the cost of evaluating the conductive education project being established by the National Foundation for Conductive Education in Birmingham. The application is receiving urgent consideration.

Mature Students

Mr. Randall asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the percentage change in the number of mature students entering full-time grant aided education since (a) 1979 and (b) 1983.

Mr. Walden: Grant aided education has been taken to mean universities and public sector higher education. The number of students aged 21 or more entering full-time and sandwich Higher Education courses are given in the following table:

Higher Education in Great Britain

Academic year beginning	Entrants aged 21 or more (thousands)
1979	34·0
1983	36·8
1985	40·1
	(percentage change)
(a) 1979-1985	+18·2
(b) 1983-1985	+9·0

Education Authorities (Consultation)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what draft circulars to local education authorities he expects to issue for consultation purposes before August; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The following draft circulars to local education authorities are expected to be issued for consultation purposes before August:

Local Education Authority Training Grants Scheme 1988-89;

Education Support Grants Programme 1988-89;

Staffing Standards for Special Education;

Role of the Education Service in Combatting Child Abuse;

Application of Section 51 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986;

Automatic Recoupment and Free Trade for Non-Advanced Further Education;

Second Circular of Guidance on the Education (No. 2) Act 1986.

This list excludes other forms of communications to local education authorities including the final versions of circulars.

It is possible that a need for the issue of other circulars on matters not listed above may be identified before August.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing, for each year 1982-83 onwards, an analysis of capital allocations expressed as a percentage of expenditure bids submitted, broken down between (a) local education authorities in Greater London, (b) metropolitan district education authorities outside Greater London and (c) non-metropolitan county education authorities; and if he will make a tatement.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish a table showing for each year from 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive (a) the total of capital allocations made to local education authorities in Greater London, (b) the total of capital expenditure bids submitted by local education authorities in Greater London and (c) the figure (a) expressed as a percentage of the figure (b); and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a table showing for each year from 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive (a) the total of capital allocations made to metropolitan district education authorities outside Greater London, (b) the total of capital expenditure bids submitted by metropolitan district education authorities outside Greater London and (c) the figure (a) expressed as a percentage of the figure (b); and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will publish a table showing for each year from 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive (a) the total of capital allocations made to non-metropolitan county education authorities, (b) the total of capital expenditure bids submitted by non-metropolitan county education authorities and (c) the figure (a) expressed as a percentage of the figure (b); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

GCSE

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information his Department has available pertaining to the progress of the production of general certificate of secondary education syllabuses for modes 1, 2 and 3; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: GCSE mode 1 syllabuses in all subjects were distributed to schools before the end of 1986. Mode 2 and mode 3 syllabuses are designed by the schools themselves and are subject to approval by the examining groups. Information about these syllabuses is not collected centrally.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what materials and in-service training have been provided to teachers for in-course assessment for the general certificate of secondary education; and if they have been provided according to the timetable originally set.

Mrs. Rumbold: Introductory GCSE training for all teachers was completed according to the timetable originally set, as was the distribution of associated training materials and subject guides. Further subject-specific training is currently in progress and will continue throughout the early years of the GCSE.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information his Department has on the progress made in introducing grade criteria for the general certificate of secondary education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Secondary Examination Council is currently revising the draft grade criteria for the 10 most commonly studied subjects which it published in September 1985. The SEC is planning to trial the draft criteria for English, history and mathematics by means of pilot examinations as soon as possible.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps have been taken by his Department to monitor the implementation of in-course assessment for the general certificate of secondary education for each regional examination board; if the process of implementation has followed the timetable originally prescribed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department receives advice from the Secondary Examinations Council about each GCSE group's plans and progress in the implementation of the requirements of the syllabuses. The GCSE groups completed the national, introductory training to the timetable originally set. Further training is continuing throughout the early years of the GCSE.

Primary School Places

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish a table showing for each non-metropolitan county education authority that replied to both of his Department's circular letters dated 5 February 1982 and 30 June 1986 requesting information on sub-standard primary school places (a) the percentage of sub-standard primary school places in 1982 within that authority's total primary provision at that date, (b) the percentage of sub-standard primary school places in 1986 within that authority's total primary provision at that date and (c) the figure by which the change between (a) and (b) differs from the percentage change between the total figures for all such authorities providing information; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a table showing for each metropolitan district education authority outside Greater London that replied to both of his Department's circular letters dated 5 February 1982 and 30 June 1986 requesting information on sub-standard primary school places (a) the percentage of sub-standard primary school places in 1982 within that authority's total primary provision at that date, (b) the percentage of sub-standard primary school places in 1986 within that authority's total primary provision at that date and (c) the figure by which the change between (a) and (b) differs from the percentage change between the total figures for all such authorities providing information; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will publish a table showing for each local education authority in Greater London that replied to both of his Department's circular letters dated 5 February 1982 and 30 June 1986 requesting information on sub-standard primary school places (a) the percentage of sub-standard primary school places in 1982 within that authority's total primary provision at that date, (b) the percentage of sub-standard primary school places in 1986 within that authority's total primary provision at that date, and (c) the figure by which the change between (a) and (b) differs from the percentage change between the total figures for all such authorities providing information; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not hold information on the number of school places in each local education authority area; the information requested cannot therefore be supplied.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will publish a table showing for each non-metropolitan county education authority that replied to both of his Department's circular letters dated 5 February 1982 and 30 June 1986 requesting information on sub-standard primary school places (a) the capital allocations made for each year 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive, in cash terms; and (b) the capital expenditure bids submitted for each year 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive, in cash terms; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a table showing for each metropolitan district education authority outside Greater London that replied to both of his Department's circular letters dated 5 February 1982 and 30 June 1986 requesting information on sub-standard primary school places (a) the capital allocations made for each year 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive, in cash terms and (b) the capital expenditure bids submitted for each year 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive, in cash terms; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will publish a table showing for each local education authority in Greater London that replied to both of his Department's circular letters dated 5 February 1982 and 30 June 1986 requesting information on sub-standard primary school places (a) the capital allocations made for each year 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive, in cash terms and (b) the capital expenditure bids submitted for each year 1982-83 to 1985-86 inclusive, in cash terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

AIDS

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans for an education programme in schools on AIDS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has already made clear that schools have a crucial role to play in ensuring that young people know the facts about AIDS. He announced on 6 March the publication of a factual booklet for teachers "Aids: Some Questions and Answers", to assist them in incorporating the subject into their teaching and in answering pupils' questions. He is also commissioning, from the BBC's production centre at the Open University, a video resource package about AIDS, intended for use with 13 to 16-year-olds in schools. We are continuing to consider urgently the need for further initiatives to assist the education service in this difficult area.

Polytechnics

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when a decision will be made on the creation of new polytechnics.

Mr. Walden: Following the deferral of advice about further polytechnic designations by the National Advisory Body for Public Sector Higher Education (NAB) last December, my right hon. Friend does not propose to take any immediate decisions.

PRIME MINISTER

Soviet Union

Q32. Sir David Price asked the Prime Minister what are the purposes of her forthcoming visit to the Soviet Union; and what issues she intends to discuss with Mr. Gorbachev.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 4 March 1987, at column 598.

Common Agricultural Policy (Sugar Regime)

Q55. Dr. Godman asked the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council those structural problems in the common agricultural policy sugar regime which put cane refineries in the United Kingdom at a serious disadvantage.

The Prime Minister: It would not be appropriate to raise this at the European Council. My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food secured an undertaking from the European Commission at the Agriculture Council on 24-25 March 1986 to review the margin available to refiners of cane sugar and to report back to the Council. We expect the Commission to make its report in the near future.

1972 Arms Treaty

Q76. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister what recent consultations she has had with the United States President or Administration on the proposed renegotiation of the 1972 arms treaty with reference to the strategic defence initiative; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: United States representatives consulted my right hon. Friends and myself on the consideration being given by the United States Administration to the future of work on the strategic defence initiative. I confirmed Britain's support for the SDI research programme which is permitted by the anti-ballistic missile treaty. We agreed that we wished to see the arms control negotiations in Geneva lead to reductions in nuclear weapons on the basis of the priorities I agreed with President Reagan at Camp David in November 1986. Subsequent consultations were held in the North Atlantic Council.

EC Own Resources

Q90. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the recent proposals of the Commission's President to enlarge the own resources of the European Economic Community; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 10 February at column 159.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 March.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 March.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 March.

Mr. Leigh asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the Prime Minister of Thailand.

Immigration Appeal Authorities

Mr. Madel asked the Prime Minister whether she will consider reallocating ministerial responsibility for the immigration appeal authorities.

The Prime Minister: I have decided to transfer full administrative responsibility for the immigration appellate authorities to the Lord Chancellor. He is already responsible for appointments to the immigration appeal tribunal and it is sensible therefore that he should appoint the adjudicators, be responsible for the procedural rules and administer the appellate authorities as a whole. The Lord Chancellor will consult the Lord Advocate in connection with appointments and procedural rules. The necessary Transfer of Functions Order is in preparation, to take effect from 1 April 1987.

WALES

Electoral Statistics

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the Welsh counties in order of percentage growth in electorate since 1981; and what has been the percentage growth and actual figures in each case.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information on the changes up to 1986 is given in the following table. Figures of the 1987 electorate will be available centrally in April.

Growth in Local Government Electorate by County since 1981

Sheep

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many sheep have been killed by dogs in Wales during the last 12 months; what were the corresponding figures for each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Statistics of livestock reported killed by dogs ceased to be kept centrally after 1978. The number of sheep killed in 1978 was 775 and in 1977 was 948. My Department will continue to give publicity to this serious problem. The Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 imposes a specific responsibility on owners to control their dogs when in the vicinity of sheep.

Ancient Monuments

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales when the John Brown Tourism, Marketing and Development Services Organisation was commissioned to report on the presentation of ancient monuments in his care; at what cost; and whether he will place a copy of their report in the Library.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The report was commissioned in August 1982 at a total cost of £18,000. I have placed a copy in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

Welfare

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to improve the arrangements for consulting service personnel and their families on welfare matters.

Mr. Freeman: [pursuant to his reply, 23 February 1987, c. 147]: I have not considered the arrangements for consulting service personnel and their families on welfare matters. The welfare of service men and their families is, of course, part of the day-to-day management function at all levels within the armed forces, both as a good employer and because it is an integral element in ensuring their continued efficiency and effectiveness.

The armed forces continually seek to improve such arrangements, and various mechanisms exist to ensure that current systems are functioning satisfactorily. Senior management concerned with welfare matters visit units on a regular basis to keep up to date with local concerns and take action accordingly. For example, the RAF personnel liaison teams, formed in 1967, are tasked to visit all RAF units once every two years and represent welfare issues that arise from service men and their wives to the appropriate service authority. Other issues are brought to the attention of service managers through the operation of existing welfare organisations such as the naval personal and family service, introduced in 1977, and voluntary organisations such as the service benevolent funds and SSAFA.

Particular studies are also instituted where necessary. For example, recent work has been carried out by the Army and Navy into the attitudes of the wives of service men, giving them the opportunity of expressing their views on a wide range of issues. Only last year a review of welfare within the RAF at station and unit level concluded that existing arrangements for its personnel and their families were generally very satisfactory.

The armed forces will continue to respond flexibly to the welfare needs of their personnel and families, ensuring that existing arrangements, including consultation, remain effective and making improvements as appropriate.

ENVIRONMENT

Fire Protection Systems

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to encourage water authorities to make the maximum use of sprinkler systems for fire protection in both public and private buildings and warehouses.

Mr. John Patten: No. It is for the owner of any premises, in consultation with his insurers, to decide what system of fire protection best suits his needs.

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he issues to water authorities on the banning of the use of sprinkler systems for fire protection in certain circumstances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: None. But my Department has issued guidance to water undertakers on the recommended protection that should be provided in such systems to prevent contamination of the public water supply from backflow or backsiphonage.

Water Authorities (Privatisation)

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to expenditure incurred by (a) the Thames water authority, (b) the Yorkshire water authority and (c) the Trent water authority for all work undertaken in preparation for privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: None.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of (a) the number of home improvement grants and (b) the total value of such grants for (i) England, (ii) the city of Manchester and (iii) the Trafford borough for the years 1983 to 1986 inclusive.

Mr. Tracey: The available information is as follows:

	Number of dwellings	£ thousand

1983 April-December	1,901	9,511
1984 not available

Antifouling Paints

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for letters to be written by his regional offices to all harbour authorities and to all boatyards asking what actions they are proposing to take to minimise the amount of antifouling debris being washed into the water from boats being stripped of TBT antifouling paints; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Authoritative advice on the stripping of antifouling paints from small boats is set out in the leaflet "Don't Foul Things Up," published last year. This should have reached all boatyards and harbour authorities. The leaflet is being revised, and similar advice dealing with larger vessels is being prepared. I shall ensure that this guidance also is sent to all boatyards and harbour authorities. It is in everyone's interest to take account of this advice and I do not believe that individual approaches to boatyards and harbour authorities would be justified.

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement as to the extent to which he will permit International Paints to continue to use areas of the River Yealm for experimental purposes, including the testing of various toxic paints; and if he will consider restricting the area and the length of time such experiments should be permitted in any one river.

Mr. Waldegrave: All experimental use of testing facilities for antifouling paints are governed by part III of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The relevant provisions come into force on 1 July 1987. The detailed arrangements which will apply in such cases are still under consideration.

Inner Area Programme (Leicester)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many inner area programme-funded projects are marked with Department of the Environment signs in Leicester; and if he will list them.

Mr. John Patten: I am informed that there are 27 inner area programme projects in Leicester which display the required signs acknowledging the Department's funding through the urban programme. These are as follows:

West Bowling Youth Centre

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to take a decision on the application, submitted by Bradford council under the urban programme, to replace the West Bowling youth centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: Further information in support of this application was received on 10 March. It is being appraised and a decision will be issued shortly.

Play Board

Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what action he proposes to take to secure the future national development of children's play in view of Play Board's decision to go into liquidation and the Sports Council's indication that it will not take on the functions of Play Board without the board's agreement;

(2) what representations he has received from the chairman of Play Board following the proposal to merge the board with the Sports Council;

(3) how many representations he has now received concerning the proposal to merge Play Board with the Sports Council;

(4) to which organisation he has allocated the sum of £700,000 budgeted for Play Board for the financial year 1987-88;

(5) how many occasions, and on what dates, the Minister with responsibility for sport has visited offices of Play Board from its establishment to date.

Mr. Tracey: I have received 120 representations from various organisations and individuals about our proposals to merge Play Board's role and functions with those of the Sports Council. Both organisations agreed last September to enter into negotiations on this.

My consultations with Play Board did not require visits to their offices but I have held meetings and maintained contact with its chairman and other members of the board. In addition my officials have maintained close and regular contact with Play Board's staff.

As part of its grant-in-aid for 1987-88, the Sports Council has been allocated £700,000 for children's play. This sum would have been available to support the work begun by Play Board had the negotiations between the council and the board succeeded.

I regret Play Board's decision not now to support our proposal for the future development of children's play. I remain of the view that the development of play within the structure of the Sports Council represents the best way forward. I am exploring urgently with the Sports Council how best our proposals can be progressed so that effective future arrangements are in place for the greater benefit of children's play.

Community Charges

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he proposes to make for those on low incomes to receive help in paying their community charges.

Mr. Ridley: The Government intend to make provision for a rebate scheme based on the revised rate rebate scheme to be introduced in 1988. Each person liable would be required to make some community charge payment. The social security White Paper suggested that each household makes at least 20 per cent. contribution towards domestic rates. Final decisions on the operation of the scheme will be taken nearer the time and in the light of our objective of improving accountability in local authorities.

Royal Aircraft Establishment Hostels

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment for how many years the Royal Aircraft Establishment hostels for apprentices or single people have remained empty at Farnborough; and if the Public Services Agency will now make these premises available for letting for cases of housing need in the locality.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have been asked to reply.

Three of the hostel blocks at the Royal Aircraft Establishment, Farnborough, have been vacant since 1980. As the hostel is located within the establishment, it has not been possible to let vacant rooms other than to Crown servants. A review of hostel accommodation is currently in hand in the light of changing requirements.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tax Revenue

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the extra revenues accruing if all income tax relief were restricted to the standard rate of tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The cost at 1986-87 levels of income of allowing personal tax allowances at rates in excess of the basic rate of income tax is estimated to be about £600 million. Information on the similar cost of other income tax reliefs is available only in respect of mortgage interest, retirement annuity premiums, employees' superannuation contributions, the business expansion scheme, and donations to charities; in total it is also about £600 million. It is not possible to estimate precisely the combined yield from restricting these reliefs and the personal allowances to the basic rate, but it is thought to be about £1,400 million. These estimates make no allowance for any possible behavioural effects if allowances and reliefs were to be restricted to the basic rate.

Ravendale Group

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies have raised business expansion scheme finance with the assistance of the Ravendale Group.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret I am unable to provide the information requested as details of the use of the business expansion scheme by particular individuals and companies are obtained by the Inland Revenue on a confidential basis.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, on the basis of the revised figures for invisible earnings, he intends to revise his projection of the balance of payments deficit for 1987.

Mr. Lawson: The next forecast of the current account of the balance of payments will be published at the time of the budget, in the usual way.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Grylls asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the percentage of the total cost in value added tax collection which is involved in collecting value added tax from businesses with a turnover of less than £50,000;

(2) what is the percentage of the total value added tax collected which comes from businesses with a turnover below £50,000.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

MV Silver Sea

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what action will be taken by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to investigate reports that the Guernsey-registered vessel Silver Sea was loaded with extra cargo after customs clearance before its departure on 15 February 1986 from Southampton;

(2) what action his Department will take to investigate reports that the Guernsey-registered vessel Silver Sea was loaded with certain items not listed on the ship's manifest when it left Southampton on 15 February 1986.

Mr. Beith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was declared to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise officials in the ship's manifest by the owners of the vessel Silver Sea in respect of recent voyages to Central America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Members have a reply as soon as possible.

European Investment Bank

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in his capacity as director of the European Investment Bank, he will state whether it remains the policy of that bank that loans should be conditional on guarantees by member states or other first-class guarantors; and if he will make a statement on the guidance given by the board of the bank in this respect when it indicated that it was content for discussions to take place between officials of the bank and the promoters of the Channel tunnel for a loan of £1,000 million.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 62.]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is a member of the board of governors of the European Investment Bank.

The European Investment Bank must act in accordance with its statute. Article 18(3) requires:

"When granting a loan to an undertaking or to a body other than a Member State, the Bank shall make the loan conditional either on a guarantee from the Member State in whose territory the project will be carried out or on other adequate guarantees."

The United Kingdom has made it clear to the European Investment Bank staff that, in the event that the EIB decides to make a loan to the Channel tunnel promoters, there is no question of a United Kingdom Government guarantee of a financial or commercial nature.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total amount of public funds contributed and subscribed to the European Investment Bank since 1 January 1973.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 62.]: The figures were given in my reply of 20 February 1987, at column 830.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in the discussions between officials of the European Investment Bank and the promoters of the Channel tunnel on a loan of £1,000 million; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 62.]: No proposal for a loan to the promoters of the Channel tunnel has yet been submitted to the European Investment Bank's board of directors. At this stage discussions on a possible loan are a matter for Eurotunnel and the EIB's staff.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ulster Defence Regiment

4. Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has had any meetings with the officer commanding the Ulster Defence Regiment within the past six weeks concerning security.

Mr. Scott: Although my right hon. Friend has not recently met the brigadier commanding the Ulster Defence Regiment, he has regular meetings with the General Officer Commanding in Nothern Ireland and the Chief Constable to discuss policy issues of common concern in the security field.

Royal Ulster Constabulary (Code of Conduct)

7. Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Royal Ulster Constabulary code of conduct will be published.

Mr. Scott: Publication of the code will be a matter for the Chief Constable. he is hopeful that it will be issued soon.

Security

12. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in the Province.

Mr. Tom King: Since I last reported to the House on 15 January, six people—a major in the Ulster Defence Regiment, a Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve constable and four civilians—have died as a result of the security situation. Three of the civilian deaths are believed to have been as a result of the Irish National Liberation Army feud.

The efforts of the security forces are continuing to yield results. Since the beginning of the year a total of 72 people have been charged with serious offences, 47 weapons, 810 rounds of ammunition and 1,617 lbs of explosives have been recovered in Northern Ireland. There was a significant find of arms, ammunition and explosives by the Garda Siochana in the border region.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

17. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to meet the Prime Minister of the Republic of Ireland to discuss the future of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to a question from my hon. Friend, the Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Silvester) earlier today.

21. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of the Anglo-Irish Agreement following the election in the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Scott: We remain committed to the agreement, as a whole, and look forward to continuing co-operation with the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

22. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current security situation; and what trend there has been in the level of border patrols since 17 February.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) earlier this afternoon.

Security forces' activity in the border region contiues at a high level and where necessary, additional military resources have been deployed in support of the RUC.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current security situation.

Mr. Tom King: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to a question by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Spencer) earlier today.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what subjects he discussed at his last meeting with representatives of the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to a question by the hon. Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell) earlier today.

RUC (Chief Constable)

23. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next expects to meet the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary to discuss security matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: I have regular meetings with the Chief Constable and the General Officer Commanding in Northern Ireland to discuss policy issues of common concern in the security field. It is not my practice to give details of the timing of these meetings.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Insurance Intermediaries

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to embody the competition principles laid down in the Fair Trading Act 1973 in any measures to be brought in under the Financial Services Act 1986 governing independent insurance intermediaries, including the self-employed and independent brokers and other small businesses, with particular reference to (a) the cost of joining a self-regulatory organisation (b) the commission charged on policies and (c) the restrictions imposed upon the business they may transact; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Financial Services Act requires that my right hon. Friend may not transfer powers to a designated agency unless he is satisfied that its proposed rules do not have, and are not intended or likely to have to any significant extent, the effect of restricting, distorting or preventing competition to an extent greater than is necessary for the protection of investors. This will apply to rules and practices affecting independent insurance intermediaries as it does to other forms of investment business, and will extend to rules specifying the fees authorised businesses must pay and restrictions on the business they may transact. The Act does not permit rules made under it to impose limits on the commission which may be paid in connection with investment business; but any commission agreement embodied or referred to in the rules of a recognised self-regulatory organisation would also be subject to the competition test.

Ravendale Group

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when his Department's inquiry into the affairs of City investment centres of the Ravendale Group was initiated.

Mr. Howard: An officer was authorised on 28 July 1986, under section 447 of the Companies Act 1985, to examine the books and records of City Investment Centres Ltd.

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what date the licence of the Ravendale Group was last renewed; by what criteria its application was assessed; and whether there were any objections.

Mr. Howard: Ravendale Group was a holding company which did not need a licence and never held one. Several companies belongings to the Ravendale Group or associated with it held licences at various times. The dates upon which new licences were last granted and the companies in question were as follows:

5 November 1985: City Investment Centres Ltd.
11 December 1985: London Venture Capital Market Ltd.
5 November 1985: Ravendale Market Makers Ltd.

If an application is complete and properly made, the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act requires a licence to be granted unless the applicant appears not to be fit and proper. Applications do not have to be advertised so there is no formal opportunity to object, but account is, of course, taken of any complaints received.

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in the current inquiry into the Ravendale Group; when he expects inquiries to be concluded; and at what stage he will decide whether to refer any papers to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Mr. Howard: My Department's inquiries under the provisions of section 447 of the Companies Act 1985 have been concluded, but four companies comprised in the Ravendale Group are in liquidation and the inquiries being made by the liquidators and the Official Receiver have not yet been completed. These inquiries, which are now concentrated on the affairs of City Investment Centres Limited, have been hampered by the absence abroad of the person who was chiefly responsible for the management of the companies, but I understand they are well advanced. However, I cannot yet say whether or when any papers will be referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Securities (Licensed Dealers)

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the minimum acceptable share issue for a company to be licensed as a dealer in securities.

Mr. Howard: No minimum is specified; but an incorporated applicant is required to state its share capital and the type of securities business it intends to pursue. These are amongst the factors taken into account in considering the application.

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many licences for securities dealing were issued by his Department in 1986; and how many are currently in force.

Mr. Howard: One hundred and twenty-seven new principle licences were issued in 1986, and 527 existing principal licences were renewed. There were 674 principal licences in force on 27 February 1987.

Information Technology (Grants)

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set up an inquiry into the control of the issue of grants by the information technology section of his Department.

Mr. Butcher: Inquiries were made recently into allegations of improper payments of grant by this Department's information technology division. No irregularities were discovered.

Investors Discount Brokerage

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set up an inquiry into methods of supervision of Investors Discount Brokerage.

Mr. Howard: Subject to the requirements of the Licensed Dealers (Conduct of Business) Rules, the methods of supervision within a firm are a matter for its management. Inquiries under statutory powers may be instituted where there is good reason to do so, but I do not normally announce the institution of inquiries under section 447 of the Companies Act or section 105 of the Financial Services Act.

US (Distribution Licensing)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list any reciprocal arrangements comparable to United States of America export controls which the United States of America Government has made to allow United Kingdom inspectors to visit companies in the United States of America and inspect their books; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom Government have never requested permission to carry out visits to companies in the United States in connection with extra-territorial re-export controls because it does not operate such controls. The United Kingdom Government reject the principle of visits designed to monitor compliance with such controls, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry said in his reply to the hon. Member on 19 February at columns 751-52.

Science and Technology Grants

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will specify the number of claims made to his Department during 1985-86 by companies based in Wales for science and technology grants; and if he will identify how many of the claims have projected costs below £100,000.

Mr. Butcher: Thirty-seven applications were received in 1985-86 from companies in Wales for project support under the principal schemes of the Science and Technology Act 1965. Fifteen applications had eligible project costs below £100,000.

Blowpipe Missiles

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications for licences for the export of Blowpipe missiles have been considered by his Department in the last 12 months.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to make public information of this kind.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on the basis of the revised assessment of the value of invisible earnings, how many times and in which months, in 1986 the balance of payments was in deficit; and if he will give the revised figures for each month.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is as follows:

United Kingdom balance of payments current account

1986	£ million, seasonally adjusted
January	976
February	187
March	−481
April	231
May	−200
June	−126
July	−12
August	−735
September	−184
October	−100
November	−384
December	−272

The invisibles component of these figures is estimated on a quarterly basis, the monthly figures are one third of the appropriate calendar quarters estimate.

Shipbuilding

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many ships have been built in shipbuilding yards of each EEC member state with the assistance of funds from the European shipbuilding intervention fund with engines supplied from non-EEC member states in each of the past five years; what has been the total value of EEC aid given in such cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

MV Silver Sea

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if an export licence has been granted to the owners of the British vessel Silver Sea in respect of goods to be shipped in that vessel to any country in central America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: No such licence has been granted to the registered owners.

ECGD

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the accounting treatment of the Export Credits Guarantee Department's tender to contract and forward exchange supplement scheme.

Mr. Alan Clark: The tender to contract and forward exchange supplement scheme, which provides a measure of protection to United Kingdom capital goods exporters who tender in foreign currencies against exchange losses in the period between submission of a tender and award of contract, has been operated by the Export Credits Guarantee Department as a trading facility since 1977. The risk of adverse exchange rate movements, which the scheme sets out to insure, does not lend itself to the type of underwriting assessment and control through which ECGD seeks to ensure the financial viability of its other trading facilities. For this reason, it has been decided that the scheme should more properly be accounted for as a public expenditure programme and the losses incurred to date written out of ECGD's trading accounts. It remains the Government's aim that the premium charged for this cover should be sufficient to cover ECGD's costs and any underwriting losses.

The necessary changes will be made in ECGD's 1986-87 trading accounts. Their precise effect will not be known until those accounts have been finalised, but the best current estimate is that the combined reserves and estimated open year trading surpluses on the national interest account will effectively be increased by £123 million. This comprises £68 million underwriting losses and administration costs and £55 million notional interest paid on the scheme's cash balance with the Consolidated Fund. The anticipated public expenditure costs of the scheme from 1987-88 were included in the 1987 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 56). The retrospective adjustment for the years 1982-83 to 1986-87 will be shown in the 1988 public expenditure White Paper as follows:

1982-83	31·6
1983-84	10·5
1984-85	1·8
1985-86	−13·9
1986-87	[1]18·9

[1] Estimated.

These figures represent the net annual cash payments to exporters. They do not sum to the estimated trading account adjustment because the latter, apart from covering the entire period from 1977-78 to 1986-87, also includes notional interest, administration expenses and accrued income and expenditure.

Life Insurance

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many British citizens he estimates held a life insurance policy in 1979; and how many in 1987.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1987, c. 196]: The Department does not collect statistics on the numbers of insurance policies issued. However, figures published by the Association of British Insurers (ABI) indicate that 101·9 million individual ordinary and industrial life policies were in force in the United Kingdom in 1979. This figure had fallen to 95 million by 1985, the last year for which data are available. Within the totals the number of ordinary life policies had risen from 21·6 million in 1979 to 31·2 million in 1985. The number of individual industrial life policies (those where premiums are collected more frequently than every two months at the assured's residence) fell from 80·3 million in 1979 to 64 million in 1985.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report details of manufacturing investment by region for each year from 1975.

Mr. Butcher: The requested information is shown in the following table. The figures relate to investment by manufacturing industry (excluding leased assets). The latest year for which data are available is 1984.

ENERGY

Plutonium

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Workington of 12 February, Official Report, column 316, on plutonium, he will publish separate tables of plutonium produced each year from Hinckley Point A in the periods (a) 1965 to 1969 inclusive and (b) 1970 to 1979 inclusive; where this plutonium is currently stored or put to further use; and what proportion of the total civil origin Central Electricity Generating Board magnox plutonium produced in the respective periods listed this constitutes.

Mr. Goodlad: Information about the plutonium produced in the United Kingdom generating boards' magnox reactors before 1971 cannot be disclosed for the reason given at footnote (g) to my reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 21 July 1986, at columns 10-11.

The CEGB informed the Sizewell B public inquiry that because of the cost and effort which would be involved, it could not provide information on the plutonium content of fuel dispatches from magnox reactors for the period 1971 to 1977. The enquiry was given such information for the years 1978-79 to 1983-84 (CND/S/57).

On storage and use of plutonium I refer the hon. Member to the Prime Minister's answers of 15 and 18 April to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) at columns 330 and 525 respectively, and to the answer of 21 July 1986 referred to above.

Severn and Mersey (Barrages)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's current estimate of the number of direct and indirect jobs likely to be created by (a) the Severn tidal barrage and (b) the Mersey barrage.

Mr. David Hunt: Estimates for the possible number of jobs created by the construction of a barrage close to Cardiff and Weston were published in the report from the Severn Tidal Power Group in 1986. The study was financially supported by my Department.

There are as yet no equivalent estimates for the Mersey but the studies currently being undertaken by the Mersey Barrage Company with financial support from my Department should produce such estimates.

Wind-power Generation

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's current estimate of the number of jobs likely to be created by a substantial wind-power farm generating (a) 10 mw, (b) 100 mw and (c) 1,000 mw.

Mr. David Hunt: The technical and economic feasibility of large-scale electricity generation from wind in the United Kingdom is still being investigated by the Department and it is too early to say how many jobs might be created by the large-scale exploitation of the resource with any certainty.

Combined Heat and Power (Job Creation)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his Department's current estimate of the number of jobs likely to be created by combined heat and power schemes in (a) London, (b) Edinburgh, (c) Leicester, (d) Belfast, (e) Sheffield, (f) Newcastle.

Mr. David Hunt: Estimates in Energy Paper No. 53 (published 1984) indicated that additional local employment might result over a 12 to 15-year period from installing the heat distribution systems and consumer connections in the following individual cities:

	Number
(a) London	500
(b) Edinburgh	300
(c) Leicester	175
(d) Belfast	250
(e) Sheffield	200
(f) Newcastle	300

Other employment would arise from the construction of new CHP plant and heat-only boiler plant.

The above estimates were based on cost assumptions for schemes outlined in the Atkins report and on the basis that such schemes would proceed. Actual additional employment arising from the construction, operation and maintenance of major urban CHP/DH systems will depend on the outcome of the present lead city studies and the nature and size of the schemes adopted.

Coal Industry

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will give details of current manpower levels in British Coal, giving indications of manpower reductions by category of employment in the past 12 months;

(2) if he will publish details of manpower levels in the Nottinghamshire coalfield area, giving indications of manpower reductions by category of employment in the last 12 months;

(3) if he will give details of manpower levels by coalfield within British Coal for each year since 1979 to the present.

Mr. David Hunt: British Coal manpower by area in each year since end financial year 1978-79 is as follows. A breakdown of the manpower reductions by category of employment is not available.

End Financial Year	Scottish	North East	North Yorkshire	South Yorkshire	North Derbyshire	Nottinghamshire	South Midlands inc. Kent	Western	South Wales	Total

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give details of all pit closures which have occurred since 1979, giving in each case details of manpower effects and an indication of coalfield areas.

Mr. David Hunt: For details of closures until 11 July last I refer to my reply to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. MacKay) on 12 July 1986. Closures since then have been as follows:

Area	Pit
Scottish	Comrie
North East	Whittle
North Yorkshire	Ledston Luck
	Kinsley
South Yorkshire	Cadeby
North Derbyshire	—
Nottinghamshire	Hucknall/Babbington
South Midlands	Birch Coppice
Western	Bersham
South Wales	Cwm
	Nantgarw
Kent	Tilmanstone

The immediate effects of particular closures on manpower will depend on such factors as numbers transferring to other pits. Details of manpower reductions by area are given in reply to the hon. Member's other question today.

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give details of all fatal accidents which have occurred in the coal industry since 1979, broken down according to coalfield areas.

Mr. David Hunt: Fatalities since 1978-79 have been as follows:

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give details of all serious accidents which have occurred in the coal industry since 1979, broken down according to coalfield areas.

The Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurences Regulations 1985 required the reporting of accidents which were not originally included. The figures from 1985-86 are, therefore, calculated on a different basis to earlier years.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the minimum requirement for modern nuclear power station design in terms of ability to withstand earthquake shock; and what size of shock the latest tests show that Hinkley Point could withstand.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

TRANSPORT

Driving Licences

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether colour photographs are acceptable with applications for new driving licences in Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Photographs are not required on driving licences issued in Great Britain—the question of acceptability of colour photographs does not therefore arise.

Port Industry

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish any estimates or projections available to his Department on the trends of the use of British ports in relation to the tonnage of vessels employed, or the types of cargo which are expected to make up the major proportion of future trade.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No such estimates or projections are made by, or known to, my Department.

British Rail (Heritage)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has for each of the last five years as to the total amount provided by British Rail specifically to the purpose of protecting, improving and monitoring the heritage insofar as it relates to property for which it is responsible; and why Her Majesty's Government requires such expenditure to be funded by British Rail from its normal operating resources.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that British Rail provided approximately £1·1 million in 1985-86 towards the first year of the Railway Heritage Trust's activities. Information is not available in the form requested for earlier years. BR's responsibilities towards its heritage property are primarily associated with the operation of the railway, and expenditure on the upkeep of such property is a legitimate charge on the running of its business, as it would be with any other organisation. Where heritage property is associated with grant-aided services, the Government provide a full contribution towards funding through the PSO grant.

Seat Belts (Children)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, following publication of the latest edition of the highway code he has any plans to introduce amending legislation to make seat belts compulsory for children travelling in the rear seats of cars.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Not at present. All new cars registered from 1 April this year must be fitted with rear seat belts and/or child restraints. Our aim is to increase the voluntary use of restraints and voluntary fitting in cars which do not already have them.

The revised edition of the highway code contains detailed advice about the best way to protect children in cars. We will continue to press home to parents the message that the use of restraints saves children's lives. Parents can obtain further advice and a copy of the Department's leaflet "Protect Your Child in the Car" by ringing our road safety hotline on 0800 234888.

Zeebrugge Ferry Disaster

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his statement to the House on 9 March on the Zeebrugge ferry disaster, if he will introduce legislation to require ferry owners to compile and maintain a comprehensive list of all persons embarking on their ships prior to the sailing of the ship; if he will propose a code of conduct with the same effect for ship owners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: Under the third and fourth schedules, respectively, of the Merchant Shipping (Passenger Returns) Regulations 1960, masters of ships whether British or foreign, carrying passengers from or to the United Kingdom, to or from ports in Europe or the Mediterranean sea, are required to compile a return of the numbers of passengers carried in their ships.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he is satisfied that the cyanide-based chemicals being transported by the Herald of Free Enterprise were being carried in compliance with the Merchant Shipping Dangerous Goods Regulations 1981;

(2) whether all the chemicals carried on board the Herald of Free Enterprise at the time of her loss were accurately listed as to quantity, packaging and description on the export entries, freight manifests and bills of lading relating to the shipment of those chemicals; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he is satisfied that all chemicals carried on the Herald of Free Enterprise at the time of her loss complied with the merchant shipping regulations.

Mr. Moore: From the information available I have no reason to doubt that all of the chemicals carried on the Herald of Free Enterprise at the time of her loss were being carried in full compliance with international and national regulations including the requirements of the Merchant Shipping (Dangerous Goods) Regulations 1981, as amended. These regulations require that all dangerous goods shall be properly documented, packaged, marked and stowed; they also prohibit the carriage of many classes of dangerous goods in passenger ships.

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ask Mr. Justice Sheen to include in his investiagion the press handling of the survivors of the Zeebrugge tragedy and their families; and to make recommendations.

Mr. Moore: The object of the public formal investigation into the loss of the Herald of Free Enterprise is principally to determine the cause of the sinking and to recommend ways to ensure that there will be no recurrence. It would not be appropriate for the wreck commissioner and his technical assessors to deal with matters relating to press coverage of the tragedy.

Air and Sea Passengers (Compensation)

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Transport on what dates the maximum levels of compensation for air and for sea ferry passengers were set; at what level; what is the current value in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: For air passengers the Warsaw convention, as amended at the Hague in 1955, sets a limit of 250,000 gold francs (current value £13,633) per passenger for liability of the carrier for death of injury. The Civil Aviation Authority requires British airlines to have a special contract with their passengers providing for such compensation of up to 100,000 SDR (current value £79,429). This figure was set in 1981.

For sea passengers the Athens convention relating to the carriage of passengers and their luggage by sea, completed in 1974, sets a limit of 700,000 gold francs (current value £38,173) per passenger for such compensation.

Safety at Sea Act 1986

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now examine the case for incorporating existing merchant shipping notices which are recommendations for inclusion into the Safety at Sea Act 1986 and make them mandatory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Legislation already exists which allows merchant shipping notices to be made mandatory. Indeed some notices have this status, but it is not appropriate to make all notices mandatory. Whether a recommendation should be made mandatory is carefully considered in each case in consultation with the industry.

Crosville Bus Company

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside, to discuss the sacking of 270 transport workers by the Crosville Bus Company at Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. The resolution of industrial disputes is a matter for the parties concerned, not the Government.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about extending light dues liability to fishing vessels.

Mr. Moore: I propose to extend light dues liability to the larger fishing vessels which comprise about 40 per cent. of the United Kingdom's fishing fleet.

It has been urged for some time by the shipping industry that liability for light dues should be extended to other users of navigational aids who are at present exempted from charge. I have reviewed the exemption which has applied hitherto to fishing vessels following my decision that the United Kingdom Racal-Decca navigator transmitters should be financed from the general lighthouse fund. These new arrangements have led to substantial reductions in the rental charges for Racal-Decca receivers and a free market for the sale of all manufacturers' receivers. In view of the use which the larger fishing vessels make of the navigator, as an aid to fishing as well as an aid to navigation, I think it would be right to extend light dues liability to them.

I propose that liability should be determined by a vessel's length, which has to be recorded in its registration documents. I propose that light dues should be levied on all vessels of 10 m registered length and over at a basic annual charge of £200 plus an annual charge of £20 for each metre in excess of 10 m. This regime would apply to vessels of all nationalities, and I estimate that in a full year it would yield about £1 million additional net revenue to the general lighthouse fund. Under this proposal about 40 per cent. of United Kingdom-registered fishing vessels would become liable for the charge.

I am now consulting representatives of the fishing industry and associated bodies about these proposals.

M25 (Traffic Flows)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in tabular form the most recent available figures of day and night traffic flows in each section of the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 10 March 1987, col. 116]: The information requested is given in the following table. Figures for January 1987 are from automatic counting loops installed in the road surface. For those sections not yet equipped with automatic counters, figures are from a manual count undertaken on 3 June 1986. The night figures are for the hours between 10pm and 6am.

SCOTLAND

Financial Services (Independent Intermediaries)

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the number of independent intermediaries in the financial services sector in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The latest available information on the number of financial intermediaries in Scotland is derived from the census of employment 1981 which identified 452 work units in activities auxiliary to banking, insurance and finance.

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the consequences for employment in Scotland of the Securities and Investment Board's proposals in relation to independent intermediaries.

Mr. Lang: It is not possible at this stage to predict the effect on employment of the Securities and Investments Board's proposals. The position of independent intermediaries will be one of the matters to be taken into account by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in deciding whether to recommend to Parliament the transfer to the board of powers under the Financial Services Act 1986.

Open Space Maintenance Charges

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list information available to him as to which district councils in Scotland have accepted liability as a charge against local rates all open space maintenance charges levied by the Scottish Special Housing Association on owner-occupiers who purchased their homes from the Association under the provisions of the Tenants' rights legislation.

Mr. Ancram: This information is not available centrally.

Homelessness

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he proposes to take to improve the conditions under which families live in bed-and-breakfast hotel accommodation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Bed-and-breakfast accommodation which is occupied by families as their main or only home is generally regarded as falling into the category of houses in multiple occupation (HMOs). While accepting that low standards are a problem in relation to some HMOs, my right hon. and learned Friend believes the Scottish local authorities have wide-ranging and adequate powers for the control of this type of accommodation and that action should remain a matter for them. He welcomes the increasing use being made of these powers by the four city district council and other housing authorities.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a Green Paper with proposals to reduce homelessness in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: The Government see no need at present for such a Green Paper. We are committed to maintaining an effective legislative framework to help the homeless. Recent initiatives designed to tackle the problem of homelessness include the provision of increased resources for capital investment by housing authorities, particularly for special needs groups, and the issue of advice and guidance to authorities on design standards and priority allocation policies. Steps have also been taken to increase the availability of accommodation for rent through support of the housing association movement and voluntary organisations concerned with the homeless.

Housing Waiting Lists

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the number of single people requiring cheap rental accommodation in (a) Strathclyde region and (b) Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is not available.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of people on the waiting lists for rented council houses of all types at the end of 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Ancram: Consistent reliable information is not available.

Council House Sales

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money has been received from the sale of council house units in Inverclyde since 1981; how much has been spent on new housing starts; what has been the housing support grant in each of these years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The information is given in the table:

Year	Receipts from council house sales £ million	Expenditure on new dwellings £ million	Housing Support Grant £ million
1981-82	0·489	0·661	4·443
1982-83	0·958	0·235	3·048
1983-84	1·850	0·065	1·865
1984-85	1·941	0·146	1·163
1985-86	3·144	0·734	0·563
1986-87	[1]2·512	[1]0·825	—

[1] Inverclyde district council estimates.

The gross provisional housing revenue account capital allocation for Inverclyde district council for 1987-88 is £5·5 million. This represents a substantial 73 per cent. increase in resources over the three-year period since 1984-85. It is, of course, for the local authority to determine its own priorities for expenditure between newbuild and improvement and modernisation of its existing stock.

Firms (Redundancies and Closures)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the the Secretary of State for Scotland how many firms have (a) reported redundancies to his Department and (b) reported closures since June 1979; and, in each case, how many jobs have been involved.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 89]: Information is not available in the precise form requested. There are no comprehensive statistics on redundancies. The following information relates to the numbers of redundancies and closures affecting 10 or more workers notified to the Manpower Services Commission as due to occur in Scotland during the period July 1979 to December 1986. Information on the number of firms reporting redundancies during the period is available only at disproportionate cost. The number of confirmed redundancies reported was 301,855, of which 94,567 were due to the closure of 1,710 firms.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Hospital Doctors (Disciplinary Procedures)

Dame Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to improve administrative procedures governing suspensions of hospital doctors by regional health authorities.

Mr. Fowler: These procedures and other similar procedures affecting doctors and dentists need improvement. They take too much time and cost too much money. The simplest case may take over a year and in some cases doctors are suspended for five years and more. We have agreed to set up a joint working party between the profession and the health departments to recommend improvements in the disciplinary procedures. The working party will also involve senior representatives from regional health authorities. The aim is to achieve procedures which command the confidence of the profession, health authorities and the public. I am asking the working party to complete their work by the end of the year.

Mr. Bell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Middlesbrough claimed the maternity grant in the last year for which figures are available; and how many women in Middlesbrough are expected to qualify for a maternity payment from the social fund after April 1987.

Mr. Major: Information on the number of claimants to maternity grant is not available in the precise form requested.

The Middlesbrough constituency is covered by the Department's office at Middlesbrough, although its boundaries are not conterminous with the constituency. The number of claims received for maternity grant in that local office during the calendar year 1986 was 2,472.

It is not possible to predict how many women in Middlesbrough will qualify for maternity payments from the social fund from April 1987.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the precise form requested.

Mr. Lyell: The information requested is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Tooting received maternity allowance in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Hammersmith received maternity allowances in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. But in the 12 months ending April 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, the following number of claims to maternity allowance were made at the Department's offices which cover Hammersmith although the boundaries are not conterminous:

Bootle	1,262
Toxteth	854

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in the Liverpool, Riverside constituency received maternity allowance in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. But in the 12 months ending April 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, the following number of claims to maternity allowance were made at the Department's offices which cover Liverpool, Riverside, although the boundaries are not conterminous:

Public Health Laboratory Service

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is now able to announce his proposals for the peripheral laboratory network of the public health laboratory service.

Mrs. Currie: Proposals for the peripheral laboratory network of the public health laboratory service (PHLS) have been put forward by the PHLS board, seeking our approval to put these out for consultation. We are still considering the proposals.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, following his statement of 23 June 1986 on invalid care allowance, Official Report, column 21, how much additional benefit has already been paid out under the overlapping benefits provision; and how much additional benefit will be paid at the conclusion of the exercise.

Mr. Major: As at 28 February, about £90 million had been paid to married women as arrears of invalid care allowance (net of any reductions required under the overlapping benefits rule), and claims eligible for arrears are continuing to be received. The question inadvertently implies a final date for such payments: although claims received after 31 August 1987 will no longer attract extra statutory arrears in excess of 12 months, the statutory entitlement in appropriate circumstances to up to 12 months arrears will continue indefinitely thereafter.

Special Hospitals

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many prisoners have been transferred to the four special hospitals under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in the last four years for which records are available, broken down by special hospital.

Mrs. Currie: The number of admissions to special hospitals under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 (or under section 72 — the equivalent section of the Mental Health Act 1959) during the four years 1983 to 1986 was as follows:

	1983	1984	1985	1986

Rampton	7	15	15	8
Moss Side	5	3	3	9
Park Lane	6	10	22	14
TOTALS	29	33	56	47

The figures include some patients who were transferred from prison to a National Health Service hospital in the first instance who subsequently were admitted to a special hospital. The figures will also include a small number of patients who have had more than one admission to special hospital from prison.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the ethnic origin of those prisoners transferred to special hospitals under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in the last four years for which figures are available, broken down by special hospital.

Mrs. Currie: Details of the ethnic origin of prisoners transferred to special hospitals under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 (or section 72—the equivalent section of the Mental Health Act 1959) are available as follows:

Caucasian	3	10	3	10
Negro	2	4	—	—

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much of their sentences those prisoners transferred under section 47 of the Mental Health Act 1983 in the last four years for which figures are available had to serve when they were transferred.

Mrs. Currie: The information is not readily available from either Department of Health and Social Security or Home Office records.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if any ethnic monitoring is carried out in special hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No ethnic monitoring is carried out in the special hospitals, although information on ethnic origin has been recorded for patients admitted to special hospitals since 1972 in compiling a psychiatric case register for research purposes.

Trent RHA

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time throughout the Trent regional health authority area for (a) general surgery and (b) orthopaedic surgery.

Mr. Newton: The table shows the latest available information for cases admitted from the waiting list. About 36·5 per cent. of all general surgery and traumatic and orthopaedic surgery cases were admitted from the waiting list in Trent.

Estimated median interval in weeks between the date a patient was placed on the waiting list and the date of admission to NHS hospitals in Trent regional health authority area, 1984

Specialty	Weeks
General surgery	5
Traumatic and orthopaedic surgery	15

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the total number of hospital beds closed down in the Trent regional health authority since 1979;

(2) how many hospital beds have been closed down in obstetrics wards in the Trent regional health authority area since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: The available information is given in the table. In Trent between 1979 and 1985 the number of in-patient cases treated increased by 24 per cent. from 464,917 to 578,370 in all specialties and by 7 per cent., from 75,149 to 80,628 in the maternity sector.

Maternity (total)	1,797	1,617	−180

National Insurance

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate (i) the revenue effect to the National Insurance Fund of abolition of the upper earnings limit and (ii) the loss to the fund of counting personal allowances for income tax purposes against the employee's liability to contributions.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Vaccine Damage Payments Act

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to amend the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979 to permit payments to claimants whose claims are out of time.

Mr. Lyell: We have no plans to do so.

Mental Health Act

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide, for each of the north Manchester, central Manchester, south Manchester and Trafford health authorities, for the most recent year for which figures are available, the number of (a) applications made for formal detention under the Mental Health Act, (b) applications for formal detention which were successful, (c) applications made for each of the sections of the Act, (d) people in total sectioned, (e) informal admissions, (f) first admissions, (g) informal patients sectioned whilst inpatients, (h) formal patients who had compulsory orders renewed, (i) patients who died, subject to notification of the coroner, (j) patients who made application to a mental health review tribunal and (k) patients discharged before the period of the formal order had expired.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member all the information that he seeks as some of it is not collected centrally. The table provides the available information for 1985, the most recent year for which figures are available.

Prescriptive Drugs (Cost)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce amending legislation to enable prescriptive drugs which cost less than £2·40 to be purchased for the precise cost.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

Sero-positive Women

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women attending genito urinary medicines clinics are known to be sero-positive.

Mr. Newton: I regret this information is not held centrally. Reports sent to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre by testing laboratories do not identify the type of health care facility where the specimen was taken.

Tay-Sach's Disease (Research)

Mrs Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report, the centres where research into Tay-Sach's disease is carried out; what resources he has allocated to each; and what will be provided in the next financial year to each.

Mrs. Currie: The Department is not currently supporting research into Tay-Sach's disease, which is an inherited disorder, but research into safe methods of antenatal diagnosis is being carried out at Guy's hospital and King's college, London. The Medical Research Council, which is the main Government body for bio-medical research in the United Kingdom and receives grant-in-aid from the science budget of the Department of Education and Science, supports a considerable amount of research into inherited disorders.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether those Commonwealth citizens required to register citizenship under the Nationality Act 1981 by 31 December who are in receipt of supplementary benefit can be given a single payment to cover the £60 registration fee.

Mr. Major: There is no provision in the supplementary benefit regulations for single payments to be made for Home Office citizenship fees. Supplementary benefit is intended to cover necessary living expenses, not the cost of acquiring the rights of citizenship.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on changes to regulations in the position of young people leaving school at Easter who claim supplementary benefit;

(2) when he will publish new regulations governing the position of young people leaving school this Easter who wish to claim supplementary benefit.

Mr. Major: I have considered the report of the Social Security Advisory Committee on the Government's proposals for regulations to restore our policy that young people who are entered for examinations when they leave school should be treated as remaining in relevant education until they have completed those examinations. I expect to lay regulations before the House very shortly.

Mr. Thomas Cameron (Correspondence)

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he can expect to receive a reply to the letter he wrote on 18 December 1986, about which a reminder was sent on 18 February, concerning Thomas Cameron of Clive road, Birkenhead.

Mr. Lyell: I wrote to the hon. Member on 9 March.

Pensioners (Income)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate on what basis he calculates that the average weekly net income of pensioners rose by 18 per cent. in real terms during 1979 to 1985.

Mr. Major: Figures obtained from the family expenditure survey and adjusted to 1985 prices show that pensioners' average weekly net income from all sources was £70·60 in 1979 and £83·10 in 1985, giving a real terms increase of 18 per cent. over the period.

Note: Figures are for pensioner tax units, that is either single pensioners or married couples where the husband is over 65.

Medical Statistics Barnsley

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many beds have been closed in Barnsley district general hospital in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987 to date.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member all the information he seeks. The available information is given in the table. Between 1979 and 1985 the number of in-patient cases treated at the hospital increased by 27 per cent. from 21,027 to 26,628.

For more recent information the hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Barnsley district health authority.

[1] Figures for 1982 were affected by industrial action in the Health Service.

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average time of stay in Barnsley district general hospital for all patients; and what steps he proposes to take to ensure that some patients are not being discharged too early.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks in precisely the form requested. A single overall length of stay for all specialties is not meaningful. Figures for non-psychiatric specialties are given in the table. The timing of discharge for an individual patient is a matter for the consultant concerned.

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many medical and other services have been privatised at Barnsley district general hospital since 1979; and what effect this has had on the wages of existing ancillary workers at the hospital.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what is the extent of private practice and treatment in Barnsley district general hospital; and how many beds are available for consultants' private practice.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is in the table, which gives the latest available statistics.

Private Patients in NHS Hospitals—1985

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the average waiting list times for patients to see each consultant at Barnsley district general hospital; and how long after seeing the consultant is the average waiting time for operations.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. Information on numbers awaiting out-patient appointments is not held centrally. For waiting time of patients admitted from the waiting list, the numbers in the central data sample are too small for reliable estimates to be made below regional level. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Barnsley district health authority for the information required.

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when and why the neonatal services were removed from Barnsley district general hospital.

Mrs. Currie: Neonatal services continue to be provided at Barnsley district general hospital. There has been no change in provision. The hon. Member may like to contact the district chairman, Councillor Wake, on any detailed points about the service provided.

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many wards in Barnsley district general hospital remain unopened; if he will give a firm date for their opening; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: There are no unopened wards in Barnsley district general hospital. The hon. Member may like to contact the district chairman, Councillor Wake, about any recent changes in services.

Health Authorities (Allocations)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate how the £626 million increase in overall allocations to health authorities in England for 1987-88 will be distributed.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is given in the table.

Increase in allocations to Health Authorities 1986-87 to 1987-88 (England)

	[4]631·0

Notes:
[1] Total may not tally with sum of individual RHAs' figures due to rounding.
[2] Includes the London post-graduate SHAs, the NHS training authority and the central blood laboratories authority.
[3] For example to specific health authorities for particular projects, for example, breast cancer screening and regional secure units.
[4] The original sum of £626 million has been increased on account of the breast cancer screening proposals announced on 25 February 1987 at columns 271-273
The sums shown for individual RHAs include main allocations, allocations from the bridging fund and waiting list fund and other additions, for example, service increment for teaching.

Operations (Cost)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the average cost of hip replacement, coronary artery bypass, cataract, bone marrow transplant and a range of similar regular standard operations.

Mrs. Currie: We do not routinely make estimates of the costs of individual operations. However, information is available for three of the procedures listed. The average cost of coronary artery bypass grafting is estimated to be about £5,000 at 1986-87 prices. This is based on a study in three hospitals carried out in 1980. The average cost of cataract and total hip replacement operations are based on separate estimates of the treatment and hotel costs for the relevant surgical specialities. They are £950 and £3,300 respetively)1986-87 prices). All these figures include an element of costs for capital expenditure.

Population Statistics

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate for the years 1987, 2007 and 2027 (a) the number of people in the working population, (b) the number of people in the retired population, (c) the average gross income from employment per member of the working population and (d) the average gross income from pensions per member of the retired population, subdivided between state pensions, occupational pensions and lump sums from occupational pension schemes, with money expressed at 1987 prices and the figures for 2007 and 2027 assuming rates of growth of (i) 1 per cent. per year and (ii) 3 per cent. per year and the impact of personal pensions ignored.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

AIDS

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons he estimates have been infected with the AIDS virus through use of factor VIII imported from the United States of America; and how many of these are: (a) children, (b) haemophiliac men and (c) wives of haemophiliac men.

Mr. Newton: The most recent figures available show that 930 haemophiliacs have been reported HIV antibody positive.

A further breakdown of these figures by age and the source of the factor VIII used in treatment is not available. No figures are held centrally for the number of wives of haemophiliac men who have been infected.

Food Additives

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set up an urgent inquiry into the effect on the health and well-being of children arising from additives contained in food manufactured for children; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 11 March 1987, c. 234-35]: No. The safety of additives is already assessed by independent expert advisory committees.

Food additives are often accused of being responsible for a wide range of health problems in children. However, scientific evidence in support of this is lacking. Intolerance reactions to food additives are rare (an EC working party estimated that only 0·03 to 0·15 per cent. of the population react to food additives), and the types of reaction are largely confined to skin rashes, asthma, runny noses and gastro-intestinal disturbances. It is worth noting that intolerance reactions to everyday foods such as milk, eggs or shellfish are much more common (estimated at 1 to 3 per cent. of the population).

Foods prepared specifically for babies do not contain certain additives, such as colours, as their use in these products is considered unnecessary.

Prescriptions

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average and maximum cost per prescription dispensed for the most recent date available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 71]: The average total cost per prescription for prescriptions dispensed during the month of July 1986 was £5·15. No maximum cost is imposed on prescriptions and an individual prescription item may cost several thousand pounds; the most expensive item dispensed in July 1986 cost £6,416·10.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Diseases (Research)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on research sponsored by his Department into transmission of diseases such as salmonellosis from wildlife to farm animals.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In-house research into the transmission of leptospirosis, salmonellosis and tuberculosis from wildlife to farm animals has already been undertaken and is continuing. My Department is not sponsoring any outside research of this sort at present.

Land Use

Mr. Lord asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further steps he is taking to encourage diversification in the use of land.

Mr. Jopling: I announced on 9 February a package of measures, worth £25 million a year when fully operational, to encourage the alternative use of agricultural land and to assist diversification. These are described in the set of documents published by the Government on 10 March and entitled "Farming and Rural Enterprise". Copies are available from the Vote Office.

Rural Diversification

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in how many cases proposals for rural diversification on agricultural land, over which his Department has been consulted, have been refused.

Mr. Jopling: I regret that this information is not available. But it is of course, Government policy to foster diversification in rural areas.

Dairy Cows

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, West of 17 February, Official Report, column 604, he will list those countries in Europe which pay compensatory allowances on dairy cows in designated less favoured areas, giving details of restrictions as to numbers and areas and variations in the levels of payments.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Livestock Quality Controls

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has reached a decision on the future of livestock quality controls over dairy and beef herds whose semen is approved for use in artificial inseminations.

Mr. Jopling: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland and I have reviewed the livestock quality controls in question, after consulting the organisations involved. We have reached the conclusion that the time has now come to disband most of the controls in the LQC system for dairy and beef bulls to be used in AI.

We shall, however, retain the existing controls over advertising and add to them a further provision which will have the effect of requiring an advertiser of semen from such bulls to state whether statistical statements in his advertisement are drawn from assessments based on progeny testing or those based on sibling testing.

My right hon. Friends and I propose to lay the necessary orders before the House shortly, to have effect from 30 June 1987.

These changes will also apply to imports of bovine semen. However, these imports will continue to be subject to any controls necessary to safeguard animal health.

The House will be aware that we are introducing charges for approvals of dairy bulls on 1 April next as part of the policy of charging for certain ADAS services. The LQC element of these approvals will not be subject to charges between 1 April and 30 June when it ceases to have effect.

We regard this step as a contribution to the Government's policy of removing statutory controls, particularly those affecting small businesses, unless such controls have a clearly useful purpose.

Caesium (Cumbria)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, whether his Department was testing for caesium contamination in the potential human food chain in Cumbria prior to the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1987, c. 227]: Yes. As part of its routine programme of monitoring the agricultural and aquatic environment in the vicinity of major nuclear sites, my Department was testing for a range of radionuclides, including caesium, in a range of foods and other environmental materials in Cumbria prior to Chernobyl.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Ethnic Monitoring

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the numbers of entrants to his Department from the ethnic minorities in the years 1985-86 and 1986-87; if he will also list the monitoring procedures used to ascertain the percentage of the work force represented by ethnic minorities and their patterns of promotion; and what are his methods of recruitment of minorities into the Department.

Mrs. Rumbold: The ethnic origins of new entrants have been surveyed since October 1985. The latest available information for the period up to December 1986 is as follows:

Total new entrants to D.E.S. in period 1 October 1985 to 31 December 1986

	Number
Ethnic origins
white	134
black/asian	8
not stated[1]	74

[1] Includes non respondents and those in areas not yet covered by staff-in-post surveys.

A phased programme of departmental surveys of the ethnic origin of non-industrial civil servants by means of voluntary self-classification is being conducted. By the end of 1986 all non-industrial staff in London, and in the Department's provincial offices serving Her Majesty's inspectorate, had been surveyed. The remaining staff in the Department's Darlington office will be surveyed by the end of 1987. Consideration is being given to ways of using the data on the ethnic origin of staff-in-post to monitor promotion.

All Departmental recruitment is conducted on the basis of fair and open competition and selection is on merit. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend, the Minister of State, Privy Council Office on 20 February 1987 at col. 880-881 reporting the arrangements being made to encourage people from the ethnic minorities to apply to the Civil Service.

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will, in relation to specific learning difficulties, take steps to (a) provide a national standard, (b) encourage teachers to provide a national professional standard, (c) eliminate the different standards between different local education authority areas, (d) encourage local education authorities to consult with voluntary bodies providing support for children with such difficulties, (e) encourage local education authorities to make use of voluntary facilities in their areas, (f) provide proper training in teacher training colleges and (g) provide counselling and professional assessment for those over the age of 16 years in colleges of further education and by careers officers.

Mr. Dunn: Local education authorities have a duty under the 1981 Education Act to provide for school pupils with special educational needs according to their individual needs as assessed and, where appropriate, recorded in statements. The Department encourages co-operation with voluntary bodies and among LEAs through the standing regional conferences. The Government's policy on teacher training for special needs is set out in paragraphs 146 and 147 of "Better Schools" (Cmnd 9468). Under the new teacher training arrangements operative from 1987-88, all training in special educational needs will be provided through in-service training courses.

The Department is at present reviewing the standards of staffing for special educational needs and it is proposed to issue new advice in due course. It is for local education authorities to consider, in individual cases, what support should be made available in colleges of further education for students who have special educational needs.

Bogus Degrees

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will indicate the proposals which Her Majesty's Government have initiated in the last month to curb the sale of bogus degrees and similar pseudo qualifications in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend is considering the possibility of legislating to curb this abuse.

Dyslexic Children

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many appeals he has received from parents of dyslexic children in Surrey under sections 5(6) and 8(6) of the Education Act 1981 during each of the years since the Act came into force.

Mr. Dunn: The provisions of the Education Act 1981 came into force on 1 April 1983. In 1983-84 and 1984-85 there were no appeals from parents of dyslexic children in Surrey under sections 5(6) and 8(6). In 1985-86 there was one appeal under section 5(6) and none under section 8(6). In 1986-87 there were two appeals under section 5(6) and none under section 8(6).

Fitness

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will undertake a national survey of fitness levels of pupils attending secondary schools in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Rumbold: Research into fitness levels of pupils is being carried out in Institutes of Higher Education and universities. Funds for this work have been provided by medical foundations, area health authorities, the Health Education Council and the Sports Council. My right hon. Friend will give careful consideration to the results of this research.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about levels of physical fitness of secondary school pupils in the United Kingdom compared with their peers in other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mrs. Rumbold: None.

Education (No. 2) Act 1986

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to issue the second circular of guidance on the Education (No. 2) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The draft of the second circular of guidance on the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 has been issued for consultation today. It includes model instruments and articles of government. The draft of new school government regulations has been issued simultaneously. Those consulted include the local authority associations, the Churches and other voluntary bodies, the teacher unions and other interested bodies. It is hoped that the circular will be issued in its final form soon after Easter.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Zircon Satellite

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he will not call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the progress of inquiries into the alleged disclosure of classified information about the Zircon satellite.

Mr. Hurd: Because the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis will, when his inquiries are complete, report to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Immigration

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest figure for the number of persons arriving from India, Pakistan and Bangladesh who have been refused entry to the United Kingdom since the visa requirement was introduced; and if he will indicate where possible the reason for refusal, and how many were in possession of a valid visa.

Mr. Waddington: The available information given in the table for the period 15 October 1986 to 7 March 1987, relates to passengers who arrived and were refused entry at Heathrow and Gatwick airports in that period.

Citizens of	Total refused entry	Passengers holding visas refused entry and included in total
India	502	10
Pakistan	255	17
Bangladesh	295	19

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total cost to public funds on removal of persons from the United Kingdom after they have been refused entry and for other reasons to date in the current financial year; and what was the figure for 1985-86.

Mr. Waddington: The direct cost to public funds of removing illegal entrants, deportees and persons refused leave to enter in the current financial year (ie to the end of February) was £1,001,959. The figure for the financial year 1985-86 was £873,812.

Asylum

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons arriving in the United Kingdom have claimed asylum since 15 October 1986, compared with the equivalent period for the previous two years.

Mr. Waddington: Statistics are not available in the precise form requested. However in the three months from December 1986, to February 1987, a total of over 800 people claimed asylum on arriving at a port in the United Kingdom. In the equivalent period in 1985-86 fewer than 100 people, and in 1984-85 fewer than 200 people claimed asylum at the ports.

NORTHERN IRELAND

O'Neill Road, Newtownabbey (Accidents)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of each accident which has occurred on the O'Neill road, Newtownabbey, County Antrim, in each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. Needham: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However during the period 1 January 1986 — 31 December 1986, 13 injuries-fatal accidents were reported to the police as having occurred at O'Neill road, Newtownabbey. From 1 January 1987 to date, two accidents have been reported, one of which proved fatal.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the most recent fatal accident on the O'Neill road, Newtownabbey, and when it occurred; and if he will take steps to ensure that there is a safe crossing for pedestrians provided between the O'Neill road roundabout and Cloughton corner, Newtownabbey.

Mr. Needham: The most recent fatal accident on the O'Neill road, Newtownabbey, occurred on 27 February 1987. I have arranged for the Department of the Environment's road service to assess whether a pedestrian crossing can be justified. I shall let my hon. Friend know the outcome as soon as possible.

Western Health and Social Services Board

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make a statement on the distribution of revenue resources to the Western health and social services board since the formulation of the proposal for the allocation of revenue resources system; and if he will outline what figures are available to indicate the pattern of distribution in relation to the proposal for the allocation of revenue resources system;

(2) if he will make a statement on the funding and performance of the Western health and social services board from 1981 to 1987 taking particular account of the proposal for the allocation of revenue resources system, efficiency savings, cost improvement programmes, shortfall pay awards and new money;

(3) what plans he has to bring the funding of the Western health and social services board into line with the provisions of the proposal for the allocation of revenue resources system; and if the board will receive the proposal for the allocation of revenue resource system shortfall of the past few years;

(4) if he will make a statement indicating whether there are any proposals to review or amend the proposal for the allocation of revenue resources system on a basis similar to the proposals on the resources allocation working party system;

(5) if the Government will seek to take account in future funding plans of those demands placed on health and social services by social and economic deprivation which are not reflected in the present proposal for the allocation of revenue resources system formula; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The revenue allocation to the Western health and social services board increased by 5·5 per cent. in real terms from 1981-82 to 1986-87. Because of deficiencies in the PARR formula, which was devised in 1978, allocations to boards are determined largely on the basis of an analysis of their annual operational plans. However, a review of resource allocation policy will shortly be initiated which will draw on work done for similar reviews in England and Scotland, including the relationship between social deprivation and needs for health care.

Incursions

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many incursions have been made by forces of the Republic of Ireland into the United Kingdom during the past three months; if he will make a statement on the incursion at Middletown, County Armagh on 7 March; if any apologies have been made by the Dublin Government; if any complaint has been lodged by Her Majesty's Government; and what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards responding to such incursions;

(2) how many incursions into the Republic of Ireland have been made by United Kingdom forces in the past three months; how many of these resulted in (a) a formal apology by the United Kingdom ambassador in Dublin or (b) a statement of apology by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards such incursions.

Mr. Tom King: During the last three months, two incidents have been reported in which members of the security forces of the Republic of Ireland have allegedly crossed the border into Northern Ireland. Both reports concerned overflights by Irish Army Air Corps helicopters and both have been denied by the Irish authorities. In the same period, the Irish Government has brought to our attention a total of 19 incidents in which members of our security forces have allegedly crossed the border into the Republic. We have confirmed that 12 incursions did take place; all but one were accidental and occurred as a result of navigation or map-reading errors. Five have been denied, and two more are still under investigation. None resulted in a formal apology by Her Majesty's Ambassador in Dublin or a statement of apology by myself. However, I have expressed to the Irish Government my strong disapproval of one incident involving a deliberate entry into the Republic's territory by a small group of soldiers.

We could not, of course, accept any deliberate incursions into Northern Ireland by the Republic's security forces, and we do not expect the Irish Government to accept deliberate incursions by ours. However, we understand how easy it is for members of the security forces of either country operating near the border to make mistakes; hence it is not our practice to lodge a formal complaint when such mistakes occur.

TRANSPORT

Road Accidents

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of road traffic accidents in England and Wales take place during the hours of darkness.

Mr. Moore: Thirty per cent., in 1985.

Safety at Sea Act 1986

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to implement the clauses in the Safety at Sea Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Spicer: Sections 10, 11, 14 and 15 of the Act were brought into force in October 1986. Sections 1, 2, 3 and 7 are still undergoing detailed consultation with the fishing industry and manufacturers to ensure that the regulations will be technically and practically sound in operation. I am not, therefore, able at present to give a firm date when all the new requirements will be introduced. I hope to be in a position to do so after the meeting of the fishing industry safety group next month.

Channel Ferries (Safety)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the frequency with which checks on all safety equipment are carried out on cross Channel ferries; who is responsible for these checks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Safety equipment on United Kingdom registered cross channel ferries is surveyed annually by marine surveyors from my Department. If they have reason to go on board between these times in the course of their duties, for example, to survey part of the vessel's machinery, they may also conduct a general inspection of the ship. The survey of safety equipment of foreign flag cross channel ferries is a matter for the flag state.

M25 (Service Areas)

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects the first two service areas on the M25 motorway to be fully operational; and what slippage this represents from their planned date of opening.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: South Mimms service area is already open for the sale of fuel. I expect that it will be fully open in May, though some additional facilities will be provided later for heavy goods vehicles. We are aiming for opening of the Thurrock area in late 1988 or early 1989. Progress depends on the degree of difficulty with geotechnical problems. Compared with 1985 targets, South Mimms will be six months and Thurrock over a year late.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Newspapers

Mr. Frank Field asked the Lord Privy Seal what criteria are used in determining the number of each quality newspaper purchased by the Serjeant at Arms Department for distribution in the Members' Tea Room and at each of the buildings where Members have offices.

Mr. Biffen: The quantities of all the national daily newspapers purchased for distribution in the Members' Tea Room and at each outbuilding has been established from experience of Members' requirements. In the case of the more recently launched, or relaunched, newspapers an initial assessment is made of Members' requirements and the necessary order is placed. This is amended in the light of Members' reactions.

The Serjeant at Arms is always prepared to consider requests to adjust the quantities ordered.

WALES

Dog Licence Fees

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to increase dog licence fees during the coming year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I refer to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 23 July 1986, at column 266.

Nursing Staff

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each district health authority and for each year since 1982, the total number of nursing staff employed in private hospitals, nursing homes and clinics giving the numbers of (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) total number of employees and (d) whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The required information, which relates to 31 December each year, is given in the following table. Health authority areas with nil returns have been excluded.

National Health Service (Staff)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give, for each district health authority and for each year since 1982, the numbers of staff in the following groups: (a) medical and dental, (b) nursing and midwifery, (c) administrative and clerical, (d) ancillary, (e) other employees and (f) total employees in terms of (i) the actual number of employees and (ii) whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The required information, which relates to 30 September for each year, is given in the following table:

Disabled People

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the local authorities in Wales concerning the Disabled Persons (Consultation, Representation and Services) Act 1986; and what extra moneys he plans to give local authorities to enable them to effect the implementation of the Act.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Discussions on expenditure projections for 1987-88 were held during 1986 within the expenditure sub-group of the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance. There will be further consultations this year on resource implications for 1988-89.

EC (Butter and Meat)

Mr. Williams asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to procure information on the distribution arrangements for European Economic Community butter and meat in (a) Wales, (b) West Glamorgan and (c) Swansea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Distribution of these products is being undertaken by recognised charitable organisations which are responsible for making the necessary local arrangements.

ENERGY

Public Companies and Undertakings (Statistics)

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will list all the partially or wholly owned subsidiaries of British Nuclear Fuels plc, the Central Electricity Generating Board, the Electricity Council, FASTEC, the National Nuclear Corporation, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, URENCO Ltd (UK), the South of Scotland Electricity Board and the North of Scotland Hydro-Electricity Board; whether he will list those consortia in which the above companies have shares together with the percentage of that shareholding; whether he will list those companies in which the subsidiaries and consortia of the above companies hold shares; whether he will state the scope of his responsibility for the commercial activities of the above companies in respect of shares which they may wish to acquire in other businesses; and whether any other Government departments are involved.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is shown in the following table, the notes to which set out ministerial responsibilities in respect of shareholdings by the bodies concerned.

[1] There are no statutory powers which require or enable the Secretary of State for Energy to approve the acquisition or disposal of shares by BNFL. However, the Secretary of State owns all but one of the shares in the Company and so has the normal powers of such a shareholder.

[2] URENCO is a United Kingdom/Netherlands/German consortium in which BNFL holds a one-third share, and is not, therefore, shown in column A.

[3] The Secretaries of State for Energy and for Scotland have no formal responsibility for the acquisition or disposal of shares by the Electricity Supply Industry in England and Wales and the Scottish Electricity Boards, respectively, beyond satisfying themselves that it accords with the industry's statutory functions.

[4] FASTEC owns no shares and the Secretary of State for Energy has no statutory powers in relation to the Company.

[5] The National Nuclear Corporation is a private limited company. Details of its subsidiairies are given in the Company's Annual Report and Accounts, which are available for public scrutiny at the Companies' Registry.

[6] Under a direction made under Section 3 of the Atomic Energy Act 1954, the UKAEA shall not, without the prior written consent of the Secretary of State for Energy, acquire or dispose of any share or interest in any company or partnership. There is no requirement to involve any other Department.

[7] The Articles of Association of UK NIREX Ltd. provide for the Secretary of State for Energy to be able to appoint two independent Members to the Board and to be entitled to attend meetings of the Board, but not to vote. The Articles also provide that the consent of the Secretary of State is required before the Company can dispose of any site.

CEGB (Radiation)

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list the average annual radiation dose for all Central Electricity Generating Board classified workers in the years 1977 to 1986;

(2) if he will list the average annual radiation dose for all Central Electricity Generating Board classified workers in the years 1977 to 1986 for the following nuclear power stations: (a) Dungeness A, (b) Sizewell A, (c) Trawsfynydd, (d) Hinckley Point A, (e) Oldbury, (f) Berkeley, (g) Bradwell and (h) Wylfa.

Mr. Goodlad: I have asked the chairman of the CEGB to write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many of the 10 fatal accidents in the civil nuclear power industry in the United Kingdom in the last 10 years were caused by an escape of radiation.

Mr. Goodlad: None.

Energy Research

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will update the answer to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy of 14 July 1986, Official Report, column 386, relating to energy reseach; if he will provide a breakdown of the sub-total of non-nuclear, non-renewable research and development for each of the years mentioned; and if he will also update the figures to 1985-856.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

Official Entertaining (Cost)

Mr. Skinner asked the Prime Minister what has been the cost of official entertaining at (a) Chequers and (b) Downing street during each year from 1979 to 1986.

The Prime Minister: The costs are not available in the form requested. The total annual costs of official entertaining by my office were given in my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 23 February, at columns 53-4.

Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to initiate direct negotiations on outstanding verification problems for a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty during her visit to the Soviet Union later this month.

The Prime Minister: The Government have repeatedly urged the establishment of an ad hoc committee at the conference on disarmament in Geneva which would discuss verification and other outstanding issues connected with a comprehensive test ban treaty. Negotiations would be premature until progress has been made on resolving these issues.

Mr. Graham Mitchell

Mr. Benyon asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on recent allegations concerning Mr. Graham Mitchell in relation to the security of the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: The possibility that Mr. Graham Mitchell, Deputy Director General of the security service from 1957 to 1963, might have been a Russian agent was thoroughly and objectively investigated over a number of years and, as in the case of Sir Roger Hollis, the conclusion reached at the end of that investigation was that he had not been an agent of the Russian intelligence services. Mr. Mitchell was informed of this conclusion. I am advised that there is no reason to alter or modify that conclusion in either case.

The publication of allegations of this kind about public servants who cannot defend themselves is to be deplored, as is the damage done by such accusations to the effectiveness and reputation of the security service, on whose skill, efficiency and loyalty we rely, and can rely with confidence, for the defence of our freedom.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Free Ports

Mr. Alton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will consider allocating a place on the free port steering committee to a representative of the United Kingdom free zone operators.

Mr. Brooke: I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers given by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 3 February 1986 at column 68. It would be inappropriate for a representative of the freeport operators to participate in the deliberations of the committee of officials which oversees the five-year research study of the six experimental freeports being conducted by Roger Tym and Partners.

Imports (VAT)

Mr. Alton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much import value added tax revenue the Treasury has received on goods being removed from free zones into the home market.

Mr. Brooke: I regret that the information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Exchange Equalisation Fund

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the arrangements for financing the exchange equalisation fund; and what rate of interest is paid on the funds put at its disposal.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Under section 2 of the Exchange Equalisation Account Act 1979, the EEA is issued with funds by the national loans fund. The EEA's holding of sterling forms part of the balances held by the Paymaster General at the Bank of England. These balances are lent back to the NLF each night and help to reduce Government borrowing. No interest is paid either on advances to the EEA or on balances held by the PMG.

Industrial and Commercial Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for table 14.3 of the "Annual Abstract of Statistics 1987" the division between oil companies, financial companies and so on, and industrial and commercial companies.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Oil Companies

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for table 14.3 of the "Annual Abstract of Statistics 1987" the amount provided each year for (a) depreciation, (b) the gross trading profits of oil companies and (c) the component parts of United Kingdom taxes on income.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for table 5.4 of the United Kingdom "National Accounts 1986" the allocation of income in detail for the North sea oil companies.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is not available.

Statutory Minimum Wage

Mr. Cyril Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the additional cost to the Exchequer and to local government, in wages and salaries per annum, of a statutory minimum wage of £116 per week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 2 March 1987, c. 520]: The additional cost for central and local government pay bills of introducing a statutory minimum wage of £116 per week for full-time adults would be about £1 billion in the current financial year. It is not possible to supply separate estimates for central and local government. This estimate has been calculated assuming that higher paid workers would not try to restore previous differentials and that there would be no job losses. If differentials were restored, either partially or fully, the potential cost would be much greater. The introduction of such a minimum wage would inevitably lead to substantial job losses and for that reason, amongst others, the Government remain opposed to it.

MV Silver Sea

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action will be taken by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to investigate reports that the Guernsey-registered vessel Silver Sea was loaded with extra cargo after customs clearance before its departure on 15 February 1986 from Southampton.

Mr. A. J. Beith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was declared to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise officials in the ship's manifest by the owners of the vessel Silver Sea in respect of recent voyages to Central America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action his Department will take to investigate reports that the Guernsey-registered vessel Silver Sea was loaded with certain items not listed on the ship's manifest when it left Southampton on 15 February 1986.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his replies, 12 March 1987, c. 27I]: Customs records show that the MV Silver Sea was granted outward clearance on 12 February 1986 to depart in ballast for Gibraltar. Customs and Excise have made inquiries into possible irregularities concerning the export of goods, but these inquiries have not reached a stage where any conclusions can be drawn.

Entertainers and Sportsmen (Taxation)

Mr. Squire asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has anything to add to the answer given to the hon. Member for Hornchurch on 5 March, Official Report, column 644, regarding the introduction of regulations setting out the rules for withholding tax at source on certain payments made to visiting entertainers and sportsmen.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Our intention is that the regulations will be made on 26 March and will come into force on 1 May. The regulations, which were published in draft last December, were the subject of widespread consultation and we have been carefully considering the many comments which were received. The short delay in the introduction of the new scheme reflects our concern to ensure that those responsible for making payments have a little more time to assimilate the new procedures.

In the light of the representations, we have decided to exclude payments which arise from the sale of records from the scope of the regulations. This reflects the fact that they are currently treated as exempt from tax under many of our double tax treaties.

Also, in the light of representations, the regulations will provide that tax need not be deducted where the payment does not exceed £1,000 (as compared with the figure of £500 in the draft regulations), and a number of more detailed administrative changes will be made.

A guide to the new rules aimed specifically at those responsible for making payments to visiting entertainers and sportsmen will be available when the regulations are made and laid before the House.

DEFENCE

Fraud

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence which department of the Ministry of Defence police is used when there is suspected fraud by a defence contractor; and what liaison takes place in such circumstances with the National Audit Office.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Criminal Investigation Department; the National Audit Office have access to all completed cases.

Royal Ordnance plc

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be in a position to make a statement about the final decision on the purchase of Royal Ordnance plc.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is too soon to forecast how long it will take to analyse the bids we expect to receive and to negotiate the terms of a contract.

Short-Range Missiles

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to which Soviet short-range missiles are within range of the United Kingdom and as to how many of such missiles are currently stationed in Eastern Europe.

Mr. Stanley: The Soviet Union has a variety of air and sea launched missiles with nuclear and conventional warheads which could be launched within range of the United Kingdom. The only Soviet shorter-range land-based ballistic missile with a nuclear or conventional warhead capable of reaching the United Kingdom from its existing deployment position in East Germany and Czechoslovakia is the more accurate version of the Scaleboard missile (SS22). As to numbers of Scaleboard I cannot at present add to what was said in paragraph 23 of annex A of the statement on the Defence Estimates 1986 vol. I (Cmnd. 9763).

Fuel Economy

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Defence what fuel economy measures are currently being imposed upon ships of the Royal Navy.

Mr. Freeman: There is to be a reduction in fuel consumption in the next financial year which will be achieved both by more economical use of fuel and easing fleet activity.

Small Arms

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Defence what restrictions on practice small arms and artillery ammunition are currently being imposed upon units of the Army.

Mr. Freeman: In common with other types of training ammunition, the various small arms and artillery natures are subject to limits on annual consumption. These are expressed as a number of rounds per gun rather than on a unit basis. Additional temporary or local restrictions may also be set from time to time, for example for safety or environmental reasons.

Horses

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Defence under what circumstances service personnel are permitted to use military vehicles for the transport of their privately-owned horses to the hunting field, polo matches or other equestrian events.

Mr. Freeman: Within certain limits equestian sports, like other sports, are recognised activities for public financial support for the travel of participants, officials and essential equipments (including horses). Sports travel must be undertaken by the cheapest means. I am not aware of any instances where approval has been given for the movement of privately owned horses by military transport.

Police

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out his precise responsibilities for the Ministry of Defence police; to what extent he expects to be kept informed about the progress of their inquiries into alleged serious crimes, where such inquiries are initiated by his Department; if he will list the specific matters in relation to the functions and actions of his Department's police upon which he is not prepared to answer parliamentary questions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Secretary of State's precise responsibilities are set out in the Ministry of Defence Police Act 1987. He would expect to be informed at the time of major milestones in an investigation: such as referral to the Law Officers' Department. He would not be given any details of the case or have any comment to make. He would therefore be unable to answer any questions on the nature or intended action by the police.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis allegations of serious crime within defence contractors are dealt with by the MOD police rather than by the chief constable and police force of the area concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The MDP investigates cases of alleged fraud concerning MOD contracts. Dependent on the circumstances, they may be undertaken in consultation with other police forces.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he expects to receive a report from the Ministry of Defence police on the outcome of their current investigations into allegations of serious crime at Marconi in Portsmouth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. The matter would be reported in the first instance to the prosecuting authorities, if appropriate. Ministers would be informed of any subsequent decisions on the case.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many inquiries have been carried out by the Ministry of Defence police into allegations of crime in defence contractors in each of the past five years; whether the results in each case were reported to Ministers; and what action was taken in each case where the inquiry showed that crime had been committed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I shall answer shortly.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the obligations of the Ministry of Defence police with regard to reporting to him the nature, purpose and results of their inquiries into allegations of serious crime by defence contractors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence police have no obligation to report to Ministers or officials on criminal investigations, but would inform them when major milestones had occurred in investigations, such as referral to prosecuting authorities.

Contractors

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what are the responsibilities of his accounting officer to Parliament in respect of any criminal activity with a defence contract which affects public money paid or to be paid to that contractor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The accounting officer is responsible to Ministers for the propriety and regularity of all disbursements made by the Department including those to defence contractors and for drawing to the attention of Parliament any cases involving losses or special payments by means of the appropriation account.

Marconi

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the previous investigations by the Ministry of Defence police into allegations of crime at Marconi Ltd. in Portsmouth prior to that currently in progress; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Such inquiries are a matter for the MDP rather than Ministers but I am not aware of any save the one mentioned in my reply to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) on 18 February 1987, at column 687.

Accidents (Military Vehicles)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 24 February, Official Report, columns 210-11, how many accidents involving military vehicles in the United Kingdom in 1986 required the hire of civilian equipment to recover the vehicles involved; what was the total cost; how many of those accidents involved dangerous cargoes; if civilian employees involved in military recovery operations are informed of all the possible hazards in undertaking such work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 10 March 1987, c. 174]: In the year 1985-86 civilian equipment was hired on 1,534 occasions to recover military vehicles involved in accidents or breakdowns. Available records do not distinguish between accidents or breakdowns or detail the nature of the cargo. The total cost was £137,318. Civilian crews of hired recovery vehicles are advised of any hazards involved.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Consultants (Disciplinary Inquiries)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to reform procedures for National Health Service disciplinary inquiries for consultants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Edgbaston (Dame J. Knight) on 12 March at columns 288-89.

Rent and Rate Rebates

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the total cost of (a) rent rebates, (b) rent allowances and (c) rate rebates in Great Britain for each year from 1979 up to the present date.

Mr. Lyell: The information is given in the following table:

Housing benefit expenditure
Great Britain

£ million

	Rent rebates	Rent allowances	Rate rebates
1979-80	230	40	210
1980-81	300	50	290
1981-82	500	70	410
1982-83	930	70	120
1983-84	1,980	540	1,220
1984-85	2,150	690	1,370
1985-86	2,300	830	1,520
1986-87[1]	2,430	1,020	1,640

[1] Estimated.

Notes:

1. All figures have been rounded to the nearest £10 million.
2. The figures fo 1982-83 and, subsequently, reflect the fact that housing benefit was partially introduced from November 1982, and fully from April 1983. The apparent large increase in expenditure in these years therefore arose primarily from the reclassification of what was formerly supplementary benefit expenditure.

Trent RHA

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have been added to the out-patients appointments list of hospitals in the Trent regional health authority over the last six months for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. No information is held centrally on numbers awaiting out-patient appointments. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Trent regional health authority for the information requested.

Contact Lenses

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider amending the National Health Service voucher scheme for spectacles to include part payment for contact lenses.

Mr. Newton: Contact lenses are available through the hospital eye service when prescribed for clinical reasons at a charge of £25 per lens and patients in eligible groups are entitled to a voucher up to a maximum of £25 for each contact lens prescribed.

Contact lenses have never been available under the general ophthalmic service and professional opinion was divided about the merit in permitting GOS vouchers to be used towards them. One consideration was that contact lens wearers would normally have to have a pair of spectacles as a standby and the GOS voucher can be put towards these. We will however be consulting the profession again about these arrangements during the course of the year.

AIDS

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Government have issued instructions to dentists concerning the transmission of the AIDS virus and the appearance of hairy leukoplakia.

Mr. Newton: The Department issued guidance to all dentists in April 1986 which stressed the importance of following high standards of cross-infection control when treating all patients. In addition, the guidance recommended particular precautions to be followed where the patient is a known carrier of the AIDs virus.

Hairy leukoplakia is an oral condition suffered by patients who have actually contracted AIDS. They will therefore normally be given dental treatment in hospital by dentists who would be aware of this and other clinical conditions associated with AIDS. We would expect a general dental practitioner to refer any patient with hairy leukoplakia to hospital for treatment.

Mr. Cormack asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, in view of the attitude towards the behaviour which puts people most at risk from AIDS contained within the accepted teaching of all main religions, he will hold discussions with the leaders of all the principal religious communities within the United Kingdom to consider a co-ordinated national campaign of information and counselling designed particularly to assist young people between the ages of 16 and 30 years.

Mr. Newton: In our discussions with religious leaders there has been general agreement that their work with young people and the Government's public education campaign complement each other. We shall continue to keep in touch with religious leaders on this issue, since we all share the objective of doing everything possible to prevent the spread of AIDS.

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance his Department has issued in connection with the anti-AIDS campaign about the multiple use of needles for blood testing in schools.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 23 February 1987, c. 118]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) the Under-Secretary of State for Education, gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 25 February at column 253.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's estimate of the total sums spent (a) by Government and (b) by all sources on AIDS research in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) the United States of America and (iii) France.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 16 February 1987, c. 512-13]: Research on AIDS in the United Kingdom is co-ordinated by the Medical Research Council which receives grant in aid from the science Vote of the Department of Education and Science. In December 1986 my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Education and Science, announced the addition of £1 million per annum to the Council's grant for the purpose of AIDS research. I understand that in addition to work being carried out at its own research establishments MRC has to date awarded 21 special project grants costing about £2·4 million for research on AIDS and immunodeficiency viruses. Included in that total is an annual special allocation of up to £300,000 by the health departments for epidemiological studies and support of the United Kingdom centre for co-ordinating epidemiological research on AIDS. We have accepted in full the MRC's proposal for a new directed research programme aimed at both developing a vaccine to prevent infection and new antiviral drugs to treat those already infected. The MRC's grant in aid will be increased by £14·5 million over the next three years to fund the programme.

In addition the Department is supporting directly AIDS-related research projcts costing £50,000 in 1986-87 and, so far, £80,000 in 1987-88. I understand that the Scottish Home and Health Department has funded seven projects at a total cost of approximately £250,000.

The following Government funded agencies are also involved in AIDS research:

(a) The National Institute for Biological Standards and Control: £60,000 on research in 1986-87.

(b) The Public Health Laboratory Service Board: expenditure on service elements including some research was £740,000 in 1986-87 plus a further £50,000 mainly for screening.

(c) The National Blood Transfusion Service (with the Middlesex Hospital School): £82,000 in total on two research studies.

Information on the amount spent on AIDS research by non-governmental organisations, in the United States or France is not available.

Hospital Building (Norwich)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the overall cost of building the new 800-bed hospital proposed to be built at Norwich, on the same site as the existing Hallesdon hospital, together with the proposed new psychiatric unit at Hallesdon and consequent modifications at St. Andrews West Norwich, Cromer, Kelling, North Walsham and Aylsham hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: The proposal submitted by Norwich health authority to build a new district general hospital (including a 120-bed acute mental illness unit) on the site of Hellesdon hospital is estimated to cost £36.9 million for building and engineering works. About £0.5 million is to be spent in maintenance and up-grading work at St. Andrews hospital. Consequent modifications at the other hospitals are unlikely to be required before 1995 and it is not possible at present to estimate the cost of works needed after this date.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what effect the construction of the proposed new 800-bed hospital for the Norwich health authority will have on the other hospitals in Norfolk, with particular reference to plans for the future of Cromer, North Walsham, Kelling and Aylsham hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Norwich health authority's proposals for a new district general hospital would not entail changes at any of the hospitals mentioned until phase II of the new hospital were completed in 1995. Subject to formal consultations, these hospitals would then become GP/community hospitals as part of the authority's strategy for health services in the district.

Passive Smoking

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the report of the independent scientific committee on smoking and health on the effects of passive smoking.

Mr. Fowler: The report of this committee, which is examining the risk to non-smokers of breathing other people's smoke is not expected until towards the end of this year. It has however produced an interim note in the terms reproduced below.

The Government look forward to receiving the full report in due course, and will give careful consideration to its findings. Meanwhile, the Health Education Council earlier this week launched a campaign aimed at discouraging smoking in the presence of non-smokers, and the Government will be asking the new health education authority to take account of the committee's work when considering how best to build on the Council's educational work concerning the dangers of smoking.

The following is the interim note:

"In its third report to the Secretaries of State (in January 1983) the Independent Scientific Committee on Smoking and Health noted reports of the irritant effects of tobacco smoke on eyes, nose and throat, the exacerbation of symptoms in some adults already suffering from coronary and other arterial diseases and chronic non-specific respiratory disease, and the increase in the incidence of respiratory diseases in children exposed to tobacco smoke in the home. The four main studies investigating passive smoking in relation to lung cancer were reviewed, and the Committee considered that a casual association had not been unequivocally demonstrated.

Since then additional studies have confirmed the association between passive smoking and exacerbation of respiratory and cardiovascular symptoms while other studies have examined the possible association between passive smoking and lung cancer, some reporting 'positive' and some 'negative' results. While none of the studies of passive smoking and lung cancer can on its own be accepted as unequivocal, the findings overall are consistent with there being a small increase in risk of lung cancer from exposure to environmental tobacco smoke, possibly between 10 per cent. and 30 per cent. This opinion regarding an increased risk is supported by other types of evidence. Thus the nature and experimental properties of certain sidestream tobacco smoke constituents are consistent with this smoke presenting a cancer hazard to man, though the small amounts absorbed passively would suggest a cancer hazard lower than that experienced by smokers. To express the equivalence of passively absorbed sidestream tobacco smoke in terms of actively smoked cigarettes would undoubtedly be convenient but it would be unwise since it would require assumptions for which adequate data are lacking.

While the home environment may constitute an important source of tobacco smoke exposure, more particularly for the very young, the work and indoor leisure environments with their greater time occupancy may be more important for adults. There is evidence to suggest that the non-smoker is best protected by segregation since ventilation is not always a practicable alternative. Our previous recommendation that the tobacco industry should pursue research into reducing the amount, irritancy and other deleterious properties of sidestream smoke still stands.

Much research into the effects of passive smoking is continuing and the Committee is periodically reviewing the evidence."

Whooping Cough

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what evidence is available to his Department regarding the connection between whooping cough and permanent severe brain damage in children;

(2) what progress is being made with the development of a new whooping cough vaccine;

(3) when the decision was taken to postpone the trials of new whooping cough vaccines; on which vaccines there were to have been trials; for what reasons the trials were postponed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the right hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 591, what would be the estimated cost of extracting information which would relate the number of awards in which the claimant stated that the vaccine was for whooping cough or in part for whooping cough to the year of vaccination.

Mr. Lyell: About £500.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 593, how many of the 17 children with an immediate history of whooping cough, who were admitted to hospital for acute neurological disease, were left with severe brain damage.

Mrs. Currie: One of the children died, one had major neurological sequelae, and one had mild speech delay twelve months after the illness. The remaining 14 were all reported normal at that stage.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each five-year period since 1957 the number of children who have died from whooping cough.

Mrs. Currie: The information is given in the table. The statistics do not include any deaths from the late effects of whooping cough, where the interval between the onset of the disease and death exceeds one year.

Number of deaths at age under 15 years with underlying cause of death as whooping cough[1] in each quinquennium since 1957 England and Wales

Period	Number of deaths
1957-61	200
1962-66	146
1967-71	88
1972-76	32
1977-81	37

7th, 8th revisions 033 (1968-86).
[2] Includes a provisional figure of 5 deaths for 1986.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each five-year period since 1957 the number of children given the whooping cough vaccine or one which had a whooping cough element.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table:

Completed primary courses of whooping cough vaccination (including multiple vaccines containing a whooping cough element) England and Wales

Years	Thousands
1958-62	2,893
1963-67	3,402
1968-72	2,982
1973-77	1,742
1978-82	1,494
1983	425
1984	410
1985	434

The percentage of children vaccinated against whooping cough rose from 31 per cent. in 1978 to 65 per cent. in 1985.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of whooping cough there have been in the last four-year period for which figures are available; how many deaths there were; how many children were admitted to hospital at what estimated cost; and during this period how many children under one year of age received the whooping cough vaccine or one with a whooping cough element.

Mrs. Currie: The information is as follows:

England

	1982	1983	1984	1985
Cases of whooping cough
0-14 years	60,000	17,500	5,000	19,500

	1982	1983	1984	1985
All ages	62,500	18,300	5,200	20,300
Deaths due to whooping cough
0-14	13	5	1	4
All ages	13	5	1	4
Children under one year of age completing a primary course of whooping cough vaccination (including multiple vaccines containing a whooping cough element)	30,000	29,200	30,500	37,400

Estimated number of discharges and deaths, and mean duration of stay of in-patients, aged 0-14 years, with main diagnosis of whooping cough, from non-psychiatric hospitals

Year	Estimated number	Mean duration of stay (days)
1984	1,080	6·0
1983	2,630	6·3
1982	5,900	6·2

The cost of one in-patient in an ACUTE hospital is £132·23 per day.

The 1982 figures reflect a low rate of vaccination and a correspondingly high rate of infection during an epidemic. When the next epidemic began in 1985, the improved uptake of vaccination helped to reduce the rate of infection. There is every reason to hope that with further improvement in the uptake the disease will become relatively rare in this country, as in others with successful vaccination programmes.

Vaccine Damage Payments

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether a computer is used to store any information that is given on the application form for a vaccine damage payment; and which information is regularly collated.

Mr. Lyell: Information given on vaccine damage payment claim forms is not stored on computer but information about the country and year of vaccination and the age of people awarded vaccine damage payments is regularly collected and collated by clerical means.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give for each five-year period since 1957 the number of vaccine damage payments made; (2) if he will give for each five-year period since 1957 the number of children who the claimant stated were vaccinated during the period and subsequently received a vaccine damage payment.

Mr. Lyell: The information requested is set out in the table:

Period	Number of Vaccinations resulting in payment	Number of payment made[1]
1957-61	132	Nil
1962-66	208	Nil
1967-71	218	Nil
1972-76	128	Nil
1977-81	52	678
1982-86	12	155
	750	[2]833

Notes:

[1] The Vaccine Damage Payments scheme was first introduced in 1978 and allowed claims in respect of vaccinations carried out on or after 5 July 1948.

[2] Includes 83 payments in respect of vaccinations before 1957.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications for severe weather payments have so far been (a) received and (b) paid by his Department's Woolwich office.

Mr. Major: The number of applications for exceptionally cold weather payments is not recorded by individual local offices. However, up to 3 March 1987 the Department's Woolwich office had made about 4,200 £5 payments.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his forecast for the amount payable by employers and the self-employed in national insurance contributions in the current financial year; if he will estimate how much would be collected if the upper earnings limit were to be removed in the case of employees; what would be the cost of reducing the employers' contribution in the case of manufacturing by five percentage points; and if he will provide the figures in a way which shows in each case the numbers which have been contracted out and the amount of insurance paid, payable or remittable in their case.

Mr. Major: The information is as follows:

Estimates of National Insurance contributions payable in 1986-87 (Great Britain)

	Primary Class 1 contributions	Secondary Class 1 contributions	Total Class 1 contributions	Self-employed contributions (Classes 2 and 4)
	£ million	£ million	£ million	£ million
Total amount due	11,700	13,100	24,800	720
Amount due in respect of contracted out employees	6,400	6,800	13,200
	million	million	million
Estimated number of contracted out employees	9·6	9·6	9·6

It is estimated that if the upper earnings limit for employees' class 1 national insurance contributions were removed, but retained for the contracted out rebate, then an extra £780 million would be payable by employees in 1986-87, of which £530 million would be payable by the estimated 1·2 million contracted-out employees who earn more than the upper earnings limit.

Routine information about the yield of national insurance contributions is not available by industry for recent years.

All figures are based on the assumptions used in the report by the Government Actuary on the drafts of the Social Security Benefits Up-rating (No. 2) Order 1986 and the Social Security (Contributions, Re-rating) (No. 2) Order 1986 (Cmnd. 24).

Nursing Staff

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each district health authority in England and for each year since 1982, the total number of nursing staff employed in private hospitals, nursing homes and clinics giving the numbers of (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) total number of employees and (d) whole-time equivalents.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

National Health Service (Staff)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each regional health authority, SHA and district health authority in England and for each year since 1982, the numbers of staff in the following groups: (a) medical and dental, (b) nursing and midwifery, (c) administrative and clerical, (d) ancillary, (e) other employees and (f) total employees in terms of (i) the actual number of employees and (ii) whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Kidney Dialysis

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many district authorities have contractual arrangements with private health care companies for kidney dialysis; how many patients are treated this way; and how much each health authority is paying for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

Addenbrooke's Hospital (Private Unit)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has been consulted during the negotiations between Cambridge district health authority and American Medical International about a private unit to be built on Crown property at Addenbrooke's hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I am aware that health authority officials had informal, exploratory discussions last year on this matter.

Disabled People

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make available sufficient funding to local authorities to enable them to carry out assessment of needs which will then allow the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986;

(2) what steps he has taken to resolve the delay in the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986, particularly sections 5 and 6.

Mr. Major: I met the local authority associations on 24 February to discuss implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986. The associations have drawn attention to resource implications of certain provisions of the Act covering the assessment of the needs of a disabled person, namely sections 3, 5, 6 and 7. We discussed at the meeting how best to proceed towards implementation of the Act and agreed to review progress at a further meeting in May.

Abortions

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those clinics which have (a) been refused approval for the performing of abortions or (b) had former approval suspended during the last five years; and if he will state in each case the date of and reasons for the decision.

Mr. Newton: Applications made to the Secretary of State for approval under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act are treated in confidence.

During the last five years two clinics have been refused approval for the performing of abortions and one clinic has had its approval suspended.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about staffing levels in his Department.

Mr. Fowler: A reassessment of the staffing requirements for my Department for the year 1987-88 has now been made. As a result, the manpower ceiling for my Department as a whole will be increased by 4,050 posts to 102,900 for 1 April 1988. The major element within this reassessment has been a full review of the complement of social security local offices. It also takes account of savings that I expect to achieve during the year from a combination of work reductions and efficiency measures. This increase of 4,050 posts is additional to the increase of over 5,000 which I announced on 7 March 1986 at column 322, and to the figures in the 1987 public expenditure White Paper.

Discussions with the trade union side are under way on the results of complement review and on measures which will reduce workload or improve efficiency as they arise from implementation. Recruitment of the extra staff will also start now and proceed quickly.

I should like to pay tribute to the efforts made by the staff and management of our offices, particularly those in inner cities, to maintain services to the public.

Maternity Payments

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Croydon, Central constituency received maternity allowance in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. In the 12 months ending April 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, 3,853 claims to maternity allowance were made at the Department's office in Hastings (Croydon out-station) which covers Croydon, Central constituency, but this total includes claims proper to other offices.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients are on hospital waiting lists in each of the regions of Great Britain.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what instructions have been issued to regional health authorities concerning waiting lists and times for treatment in the National Health Service; if he is satisfied that an early fall in waiting lists and times can be achieved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1987, c. 234]: Copies of the latest information available centrally for health authorities in England, which relates to 30 September 1986, have been placed in the Library. While the number of people on hospital in-patient waiting lists at this date, at 681,901, remains substantially lower than the peak figure of 752,422 in March 1979, it is about 1 per cent. higher than at the previous count on 31 March 1986.

It is however encouraging that the figures also show a continuing reduction in the proportion of urgent cases waiting over one month, from 65 per cent. at 30 September 1985 to 63 per cent. at 31 March 1986 and to 61 per cent. at 30 September 1986.

The figures confirm the importance of the new initiative on waiting lists and times launched by my right hon. Friend last year, and re-inforced by the allocation last month of additional funds for 1987-88 to support 350 projects by health authorities to treat an additional 100,000 cases from waiting lists, in addition to the further steps they are taking by improved management and other action within their increased overall resources for the coming year.

The progress made on each specific project financed from the special fund, and the other action taken or planned in each District to reduce waiting lists and times, will be closely monitored by the regions and the Department.

Benefits

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants received payments for additional requirements at local offices in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde region and (c) Greenock and Port Glasgow in each of the past five years.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1987, c. 396]: In 1983, 264,000 supplementary benefit claimants in Scotland were receiving an additional requirement.
Source: 1983 Annual Statistical Enquiry.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total amount paid to social security claimants in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde region and (c) Greenock and Port Glasgow for additional requirements in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1987, c. 396-97]: In 1983 supplementary benefit claimants in Scotland received additional requirements amounting to about £45 million.
Source: 1983 Annual Statistical Enquiry.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the annual change in the net disposable income of (a) all pensioners and (b) pensioners in receipt of supplementary pension (i) before taking account of housing costs and (ii) after taking housing costs into account over the period 1970 to 1986.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 3 March 1987, c. 586]: Information is not as yet, readily available for the period requested prior to 1973 and no separate information is available for pensioners in receipt of supplementary pensions. For all pensioners average net total income increased between 1973 and 1974 by 6·2 per cent.; for the period from 1974-79 it increased at an annual rate of 0·6 per cent.; and from 1979-85, the latest period for which figures are available, it increased at an annual rate of 2·7 per cent. The above figures include increases in the incomes of non-householders.

After taking housing costs into account the net incomes of those pensioners who are householders increased by 4·1 per cent. between 1973 and 1974; 0·4 per cent. a year over the period 1974-79; and 2·4 per cent. a year over the period 1979-85.

SCOTLAND

Dogs (Excrement)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he now proposes to take to prevent dog excrement fouling public places; how much his proposals will cost; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Under section 48 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, it is an offence for any person in charge of a dog, other than a blind person in charge of a guide dog, to allow it to deposit its excrement in specified public places. The effectiveness of that provision is currently under review.

Torness (Radioactive Waste)

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to carry out public consultations on the terms and conditions that he proposes to apply to any authorisations for the discharge of radioactive waste from Torness nuclear power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Letters with copies of the draft certificates of authorisation and explanatory information have today been sent to the following public bodies for their consideration:

Lothian Regional Council
Borders Regional Council
East Lothian District Council
Berwickshire District Council
Lothian Health Board
Borders Health Board
Forth River Purification Board
Tweed River Purification Board
Forth District Salmon Fisheries Board
River Tweed Commissioners

A news release issued by Scottish Information Office today, advises members of the public that copies of the papers may be obtained from the Scottish Development Department and that any views which they wish to express will be considered.

M80 (Route Options)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland where maps concerning the route options for the proposed M80 between Stepps and Haggs may be inspected.

Mr. Ancram: It is not our practice to publish details of alternative routes. Once the preferred route for the proposed motorway has been established, draft orders will be published. These will be available for inspection, along with the associated plans, at local council offices, at New St Andrew's House in Edinburgh and at a local exhibition which will be set up immediately after publication of the orders.

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedures are open to the public to make representations to the Scottish Development Department on the line of route proposed for the M80 motorway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Once the preferred route has been identified, draft statutory orders will be published showing the line of the proposed motorway, the junctions and the connecting side roads. At that stage affected parties and the general public will be given the opportunity to comment on, or object to, the proposals. An exhibition will also be held to explain the proposals in detail. If formal objections are received and not withdrawn, the Scottish Development Department will consider these carefully and decide whether to publish modified proposals. Ultimately, if unresolved objections remain, a public local inquiry may be required.

Nursing Staff

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each health board and for each year since 1982, the total number of nursing staff employed in private hospitals, nursing homes and clinics, giving the numbers of (a) full-time employees, (b) part-time employees, (c) total number of employees and (d) whole-time equivalents.

Mr. John MacKay: Information for full-time and part-time nursing staff is available only for 1985, when a new data system was introduced. Figures for whole-time equivalents are not available centrally.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cereal Growers

Mr. Madden asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money he expects will be raised from cereal growers in payment for agricultural development advisory service.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Earnings for ADAS advisory services R and D, from all sectors of the industry, are expected to amount to slightly less than £9 million in 1987-88.

Rhizomania

Mr. Hirst asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 525, what consultations he has had with interested bodies on measures to control rhizomania.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth).

Butter and Meat

Mr. Williams asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations he has received regarding the adequacy of Government advertisements and publicity intended to inform the public about the categories of people who qualify for European Economic Community butter and meat; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will clarify the criterion relating to disadvantage in other ways which applies to the categories of people who qualify for European Economic Community butter and meat.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Food Prices

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will show the average price to the consumer of (a) a pint of milk, (b) a 2 lb loaf of bread and (c) a pint of beer in 1960, 1970, 1980 and 1986; and if he will also show the percentage increase between 1980 and 1986 in each case.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Agricultural Support

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state on a similar basis to his reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North on 21 May 1984, Official Report, column 349, what was (a) the gross cost and (b) the net cost to the Exchequer of all agricultural support for each year since 1960 to 1965 including the forecast for 1986-87; and if he will also show the net cost as a percentage of gross domestic product in each case.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

Radioactive Discharges

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline and make available in the Library the current gaseous and liquid radioactive discharge authorisations at the following nuclear installations: Hinckley Point A, Hinckley Point B, Berkeley, Amersham International plc, Trawsfynydd, Oldbury, Bradwell, Hartlepool, Heysham A and B, Winfrith, Dungeness A and B, Calder hall, Wylfa and Chapelcross.

Mr. Waldegrave: The current liquid and gaseous discharge authorisation issued jointly by my Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, for Hinckley Point A and B, Berkeley, Oldbury, Bradwell, Hartlepool, Heysham I, Dungeness A and B, Winfrith and Amersham International (Amersham) will be placed in the Library of the House. The authorisation for Heysham II is still under discussion with the CEGB.

Discharges form BNFL's Calder hall works are covered by the Sellafield authorisations which are published in the BNFL annual report, "Radioactive Discharges and Monitoring of the Environment", copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

The authorisations for Amersham International (Cardiff), Trawsfynydd and Wylfa are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and the authorisation for Chapelcross for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Park Vista, Greenwich

Mr. John Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will call in the application by the London borough of Greenwich to build on the little orchard site at Park Vista, Greenwich.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have considered this case very carefully, and discussed it with my departmental colleagues. Our decision is that we should not call the application in.

Ealing Borough Council

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the recently announced rate increase by Ealing borough council, he will examine the case for rate-capping that council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Ealing, on the basis of the previous administration's budget for 1986-87, did not come within the criteria for rate limitation in 1987-88. It was not selected and my right hon. Friend is therefore unable to set a maximum rate for Ealing in the coming financial year.

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effects of the recently announced rate increase by Ealing borough council on (a) domestic ratepayers and (b) businesses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The effects of the recently announced rate increase by Ealing would be severe. The increase in the rates by 64·8 per cent. for domestic ratepayers would result in the average domestic rate bill rising from £384 to £632. The 57·3 per cent. increase for businesses would adversely affect their competitiveness. Householders and businesses would have to make compensating savings to meet their sharply increased bills.

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the recently announced rate increase by Ealing borough council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: All the representations received by the Department from residents in the London borough of Ealing have been against the very significant rate increases due to be imposed by their council.

Rushgrove House

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department disposed of Rushgrove house, Woolwich, and to whom.

Mr. Chope: I shall answer this question shortly.

Rates Reform

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what representations he has received (a) supporting the Government's proposals for rates reform as set out in "Paying for Local Government" and (b) supporting the present system of local rates, as it is, or with some amendments and (c) advocating some other substantial change in the financing of local government;

(2) what representations he has received from local government organisations concerning the Government's proposed abolition of domestic rates.

Mr. Chope: A summary of responses to the Green Paper was placed in the Library on 15 December.

Capital Receipts (Leicester)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what capital receipts the Leicester city council has been able to make use of in 1986-87 compared with 1979-80; and what percentage of its receipts from the sale of council houses it has been permitted to use for other housing purposes.

Mr. Chope: I shall answer this question shortly.

EMPLOYMENT

Women (Tooting)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Paymaster General (1) how many women in Tooting are in employment; and how many began new jobs on or after 1 June 1985;

(2) how many women in Tooting are employed for less than 20 hours a week;

(3) how many women in Tooting are employed in firms with fewer than 10 employees.

Mr. Lee: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Employment statistics for local areas are available only for those dates when censuses of employment are taken and the most recent are for September 1981. The September 1984 census estimates are not yet available for areas smaller than the standard economic regions. These censuses provide statistics of full-time and part-time employees (those working not more than 30 hours a week) analysed by industry and area. Specific information about size of firm or actual numbers of hours worked is not collected. My Department has no information about the numbers taking up new jobs.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General how many members of staff from the Health and Safety Executive have been assigned for enforcement of the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazard (CIMAH) Regulations 1984; from what duties within the Health and Safety Executive they were diverted; and what additional training they were given.

Mr. Trippier: During 1986-87, 4·4 per cent. of the staff resources of the factory inspectorate, out of a total number of 538 inspectors in the field (1 March 1987 figure), were allocated to the inspection of premises subject to the Control of Major Accident Hazard Regulations 1984 and the Notification of Installations Handling Hazardous Substances Regulations 1982. The work was assimilated within the overall priorities of the factory inspectorate. Since 1985, 160 inspectors have attended training conferences dealing with these regulations.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General what is the current staffing level of the Health and Safety Executive; and what plans exist for expansion of the staffing complement.

Mr. Trippier: The number of permanent staff in post in the Health and Safety Executive on 1 March 1987 was 3,594. HSE's manpower ceiling from 1 April 1987, when the industrial air pollution inspectorate (80 posts) will transfer to the Department of the Environment, is 3,564.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General how many members of staff from the Health and Safety Executive have been assigned for enforcement of the road tanker regulations; from what duties within the Health and Safety Executive they were diverted; and what additional training they were given.

Mr. Trippier: Enforcement of the Dangerous Substances (Conveyance by Road in Road Tankers and Tank Containers) Regulations 1981 is currently the responsibility of the Health and Safety Executive, the police authorities and the local authorities.

Health and Safety Executive inspectors are not assigned exclusively to this work, which is included in the inspection of premises from which the vehicles operate, and takes its place within the overall priorities of the factory inspectorate.

Thirty three inspectors attended a training conference in 1986 dealing with these regulations.

YTS (Essex)

Sir Bernard Braine asked the Paymaster General what is the most recent information about the destination of leavers from YTS schemes in Essex.

Mr. Trippier: The Manpower Services Commission conducts a regular follow-up survey of all YTS leavers. The table below sets out the latest available results (April 1986 to July 1986) for leavers in Essex in answer to the question, "What are you doing now?"

	Per cent.
In full-time employment	80
In part-time employment	3
On a full-time course	1
Another YTS scheme	2
Unemployed	12
Doing something else/not answered	2

Voluntary Projects Programme

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to increase the level of funding for the voluntary projects programme in 1987-88, and the number and quality of projects planned within it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I have no plans to increase the budget for the voluntary projects programme in 1987-88. The Manpower Services Commission is likely to continue to support around 350 projects in the next financial year which will continue to help unemployed people find work, training or other job-related opportunities.

Training Grant Payment

Mr. Freud asked the Paymaster General what percentage of training costs he expects to repay employers via the training grant payment mechanism in the next year.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1987, c. 214]: The information is not available in the form requested. The Road Transport Industry Training Board allocates the majority of its grants on a "points" system with the cash value of the grant to an individual employer being related to the overall take-up by employees of grants from the available funds.

Collective Bargaining

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Paymaster General what assessment he has made of the effect of levels of unemployment upon the pattern of collective bargaining over the past seven years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 12 March 1987, c. 255]: Information from the new earnings survey and workplace industrial relations surveys undertaken by my Department suggests that during recent years, collective bargaining patterns have been little influenced by levels of unemployment.

Training Schemes (Leicester)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General what plans the Manpower Services Commission has for the two adult preparation training schemes in Leicester; how many adults are currently in training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 12 March 1987, c. 256]: At present there are three adult preparation training schemes in Leicester. The numbers of adults currently in training at each of these schemes are as follows:

	Trainees
Charles Keene College	120
Leicester Adult Education Centre	40
Leicester Industrial Language Training Unit	23

All three schemes will continue in 1987-88. In the light of the expansion of the new job training scheme, we plan to reduce the number of trainees taking up places on the Charles Keene college course from 147 to 61, in order to reduce duplication of training. I am pleased to report that there are already 159 people in Leicester participating in new JTS, and I expect this number to increase substantially. I also expect the Charles Keene college to be fully involved in delivering the new scheme.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Contingency Payments

Mr. John Morris asked the Attorney-General whether he will introduce legislation to prohibit contracts between potential litigants and claims assessors or any other litigation adviser involving contingency payments as being against the public interest.

The Attorney-General: No. The Criminal Law Act 1967 abolished criminal and civil liability for maintenance and champerty, but expressly preserved in section 14(2) the rules of law in England and Wales as to the cases in which a contract is to be treated as contrary to public policy or otherwise illegal. The rules of professional conduct of both barristers' and solicitors' professions forbid agreements for contingency fees in the case of potential plaintiffs, and to impose fresh sanctions on the practices in question by legislation would in present circumstances in my view be over-reactive.

Zeebrugge Disaster

Mr. John Morris asked the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to ensure that potential claimants for damages from the Zeebrugge disaster are given legal advice under the legal aid scheme.

The Attorney-General: Legal advice and assistance and legal aid will be available subject to the usual criteria. I understand that the legal aid administration of the Law Society will be making arrangements for handling legal aid matters arising out of the disaster in one area office.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 16 March 1987

PRIME MINISTER

Government Data Network

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister whether it is proposed that the Government data network will be connected to (a) the Post Office and (b) the driver and vehicle licensing centre.

The Prime Minister: No. There are at present no proposals for use of the Government data network other than by the Departments taking part in the initial examination of the concept.

Meningitis

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Prime Minister if she will establish a joint initiative by the Departments of Health and Social Security and of Education and Science, the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office on research into meningitis; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I am not persuaded that a new joint initiative is necessary. Research into meningitis is, in fact, under way and arrangements already exist for liaison between the health Departments and the Medical Research Council.

The Department of Health and Social Security has funded a study to measure the prevalence of carriers, and immunity to particular strains of meningococcus, in Stonehouse, Stroud. The results are expected within two months. Linked with that study, a team at Edinburgh university is investigating aspects of vulnerability to meningococci. An application for funding the continuation of that research is being made to the MRC. The Centre for Applied Microbiological Research at Porton Down is also researching the practicability of producing a vaccine against a particular strain of meningococcus—group B—which has proved particularly troublesome and for which as yet no vaccine exists.

As part of their annual review of research activities, the health Departments will be discussing jointly with the MRC very shortly the possibility of further research into meningitis.

State Security

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government's consent was sought for the publication of material about the security and intelligence services in the book by Nigel West entitled "Molehunt".

The Prime Minister: Mr. West sent in his manuscript to the secretary of the D Notice Committee and to the Treasury Solicitor and agreed, following discussion, to remove material which the Government considered could have damaged national security or was clearly derived from breaches of confidence by present or former public servants. The Government made absolutely clear to Mr. West that it neither authorised publication of the book nor gave any kind of approval.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Family Planning

42. Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the development divisions in Africa have any staff with experience in the areas of population and family planning; and what contact is maintained by these divisions with national family planning associations.

Mr. Chris Patten: The ODA's team of six full-time health and population advisers all have relevant experience. They are based at headquarters in London but travel widely. They maintain contacts with national family planning associations both directly and through the International Planned Parenthood Federation.

Mozambique

43. Mr. Temple-Morris asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been Her Majesty's Government's response to the recent appeal by voluntary agencies for assistance with famine in Mozambique.

Mr. Chris Patten: So far in 1987 we have made available over £2·4 million to British voluntary agencies for relief programmes in Mozambique. We have also provided £660,000 for UNICEF'S operations in that country.

In addition, we contribute £3·5 million annually to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees' general programmes, which include relief work in Mozambique.

Tanzania

44. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to provide further assistance to Tanzania in support of that country's economic reform programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: I announced a further £25 million of British aid when I visited Tanzania last week. Of this, £12 million will be for capital projects; about £6 million for the railways sector; and the remainder for programme aid on condition that Tanzania remains in agreement with the International Monetary fund on the economic reform programme.

Food Shortages

45. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of those countries where he estimates there will be food shortages this year.

Mr. Chris Patten: The latest reports by the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations list 11 countries facing abnormal food shortages: Angola, Botswana, Ethiopia, Lesotho, Swaziland, Mozambique, Sudan, Bangladesh, Kampuchea, Lebanon and Vietnam.

Kenya

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the size and content of Britain's aid programme to Kenya.

Mr. Chris Patten: British bilateral aid to Kenya has averaged some £35 million a year over the last five years. This includes investments made by the Commonwealth Development Corporation. During my recent visit I offered the Kenyan Government a new capital aid grant of £50 million to be spent over the next few years on agreed development projects. The main economic sectors we are assisting are agriculture, energy and transport, while our technical co-operation programme concentrates on education. public administration and training in the United Kingdom.

Immunisation

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress on the UNICEF programme for global immunisation; and what is the United Kingdom's contribution to it.

Mr. Chris Patten: UNICEF is seeking US$222 million for immunisation programmes in 56 countries. So far US$91 million has been pledged. We have contributed US$7·44 million—£4·93 million—this financial year for programmes in China, Zambia, Zimbabwe, Lesotho and Botswana. Our total contribution to UNICEF over the last year is £13·07 million.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency Year

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what was the amount of electricity saved during Energy Efficiency Year, expressed as a proportion of the total amount used;

(2) what was the value of electricity saved during Energy Efficiency Year.

Mr. Peter Walker: In spite of the considerable success of Energy Efficiency Year, electricity consumption went up in 1986 due to the increase in economic activity following the upturn in the economy. There is no doubt that substantial savings were made and will be made in the future as a result of Energy Efficiency Year. There are now over 10,000 energy managers compared with half that number but a few years ago. At the beginning of the last quarter of Energy Efficiency Year, applicants for surveys of commercial and industrial premises were 82 per cent. above the same period in the previous year. Energy survey grants have resulted in savings of over £250 million per year being identified. The energy efficiency demonstration scheme achieved its target, and savings of over £100 million will result. There has been a substantial increase in monitoring and targeting systems. At the end of the Year, such systems were in place in 200 major energy consuming sites.

On the consumer side, the industries providing the materials for improved energy efficiency all report substantial increases in sales.

During the Year there was an increase of 70 per cent. in homes insulated under the community programme. More than 100,000 homes were so insulated during the Year.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land Registry

32. Sir Peter Blaker asked the Attorney-General if he has any plans to increase the speed with which the Land Registry is able to deal with applications for registration of land.

The Solicitor-General: A number of steps have been taken by the Lord Chancellor to shorten the time taken up in dealing with applications for registration. These include overtime, recruitment, opening new offices and improvements in practice and procedure. Additionally, during 1987 computerisation and further improvement in productivity are expected to lead to a reduction in stocks of 100,000 applications. This will result in improved levels of service.

Rape (Sentencing Policy)

34. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Attorney-General what recent representations he has received about the provisions of clause 29 of the Criminal Justice Bill in so far as they extend his responsibilities in relation to sentences passed in rape cases; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have not received any specific representations at any time about the provisions of clause 29 of the Criminal Justice Bill in relation to rape cases.

Crown Prosecution Service

35. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Attorney-General how many (a) barristers and (b) solicitors are currently employed by the Crown Prosecution Service; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: On 1 February 1987, 315 barristers and 922 solicitors were employed by the Crown Prosecution Service.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General when, pursuant to his answer of 23 January, Official Report, column 406, inquiries into the alleged unauthorised disclosure of personal data from the police national computer in Essex will be completed.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service has recently received a report from the Essex police which is now under consideration.

Lonrho plc

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Attorney-General if he will arrange for further consideration to be given to the three opinions of counsel given to the Director of Public Prosecutions following the Department of Trade inquiry into Lonrho plc.

The Attorney-General: The Solicitor-General and the Director of Public Prosecutions have concluded that there is no justification to reverse the decision taken in 1978 not to proceed with a prosecution.

Miss Lorrien Finley

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Attorney-General if he will ask the Director of Public Prosecutions to prosecute Miss Lorrien Finley of Reproductive Freedom International under the Surrogacy Arrangements Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The police have been carrying out extensive inquiries into the activities of Miss Finley since May 1986. The Director of Public Prosecutions has considered the results of those inquiries and is satisfied that to date there is insufficient evidence to justify the institution of proceedings for any offence contrary to the provisions of the Surrogacy Arrangements Act 1985. The police inquiries are continuing, however, and any further evidence that is brought to the attention of the police will be forwarded to the director for his consideration.

Legal Aid

Mr. Lawrence asked the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of the comparative cost of briefing solicitors and barristers for legal aid work in the criminal courts (a) in London and (b) elsewhere in England and Wales.

The Attorney-General: No assessment of the comparative cost of briefing solicitors and barristers for legal aid work in the criminal courts has been made. However, the Efficiency Commission, established in September 1986 by the Lord Chancellor to identify ways of improving the effiency of the legal profession in the Crown court, is considering how to compare actual and notional costs of advocacy in guilty pleas.

EMPLOYMENT

Enterprise Measures (Women)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General, pursuant to his reply of 17 February to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies), Official Report, columns 535-36, in regard to the employment, training and enterprise measures run by his Department and the Manpower Services Commission since May 1979, if he will indicate how many women have benefited from each measure in each year since that date, expressing each in actual (absolute) and percentage terms.

Mr. Lee: The figures which are available for the number of women participating in the employment, training and enterprise measures run by my Department and the Manpower Services Commission since 1979 are as follows:

	YOP/ YTS	CI	STEP/ CP	JRS[4]	EAS

[1] Figures are not available.
[2] Figures are available at disproportionate cost only.
[3] Figures are for February 1987.
[4] Previous figures were for entrants to the scheme. These figures are for the numbers of people being paid the Job Release Allowance. Figures for the number of women participating in the Scheme is only available in this form.

Figures are not available for the young workers scheme, the new workers scheme and the job splitting scheme. Survey evidence shows that in 1985 48 per cent. of jobs supported by the young workers scheme were filled by women. The new workers scheme replaced the young workers scheme in March 1986 and survey evidence is not yet available. It is estimated that since the scheme began 89 per cent. of participants in the job splitting scheme have been women. Figures are not available for all of the adult training programmes included in the previous reply.

Community Programme

Mr. Merlyn Rees asked the Paymaster General what was the number of authorised and filled places on the community programme on 31 December 1986 and 31 January 1987, respectively; what is the planned number of authorised and filled places in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: On 12 December 1986 and 31 January 1987 the number of filled places on the community programme was 247,607 and 247,531 respectively. The December figures were collected early due to the Christmas holiday period. For 1987-88 it is expected that the programme will operate at an average level over the year of about 245,000 filled places which will provide opportunities for around 300,000 entrants, about the same number as in the current year.

In order to ensure there are sufficient places available to replace the normal turnover in projects, the number of authorised places in any region may normally exceed the target for filled places by up to 15 per cent. The number of authorised places on 12 December 1986 and 31 January 1987 was 285,613 and 287,168 respectively.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Paymaster General what evidence he has on the relation between the regional cost per job on the community programme and the incidence of part-time and full-time positions, respectively, on the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Regional variations in the cost per job on the community programme are not great. All costs fall within nationally applied limits on average wage levels and operating costs.

Regional differences in the incidence of full and part-time workers on the community programme are also relatively small and at 30 January 1987 the position was as follows:

Region	Percentage of filled places which are: Full-time (35 hours or more)	Part-time (Less than 35 hours)
London	18·5	81·5
South-East	25·4	74·6
South-West	23·7	76·3
West Midlands	28·6	71·4
East Midlands	27·0	73·0
Wales	25·5	74·5
North-West	26·8	73·2
Scotland	23·1	76·9
North-East	22·4	77·6
Yorkshire and Humberside	24·7	75·3
Great Britain	24·7	75·3

Variations in the incidence of part-time work stem from a number of factors including the locally prevailing hourly wage rates, the ratio of managers and supervisors to participant workers, the type of projects and the extent of which managing agents supplement wage payments available out of programme funds.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Paymaster General what information he has concerning the average cost per job on the community programme in (a) suburban, (b) inner city and (c) rural areas; if he has any plans to change the present method of funding for operating costs expenditure per participant place to take account of any disparities on cost per job variations across the regions of the country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The average gross cost per filled place year on the community programme is £4,450, excluding administration and marketing costs. No breakdown is available between suburban, inner city, and rural areas, although the Manpower Services Commission is planning to study the operation of the community programme in a sample of rural areas.

There are no plans to change the present method of funding operating costs expenditure.

Mrs. Peacock asked the Paymaster General if he will list the total number of people on the community programme in Batley and Spen for each year since its inception.

Mr. Lee: It is not possible to give the information in the form requested. However, the number of people on the community programme in the Bradford area, which includes the areas of Batley and Spen, are given in the table.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cohen asked the Paymaster General if, pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 277, he will provide similar figures of unemployment in Enfield, North on the basis of the most recent ward boundaries.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not available. The wards used as a basis of the unemployment figures are those used in the 1981 census of population. This enables us to calculate totals for travel-to-work areas, which are defined in terms of 1981 census wards because they reflect commuting patterns revealed by the census. It would be both confusing and expensive to calculate unemployment figures on both the 1981 wards and the most recent ward boundaries.

YTS

Mrs. Peacock asked the Paymaster General if he will list the total number of young people on the YTS in Batley and Spen in each year since its inception.

Mr. Trippier: The information is not available in the form requested. In the local authority district of Kirklees, which includes Dewsbury, Huddersfield, Batley and Spen Valley, the total number of young people who have joined YTS in each year since its inception is shown in the table.

Year	Entrants
April 1983—March 1984	2,835
April 1984—March 1985	3,151
April 1985—March 1986	3,344

Wool Textile Industry

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General how many men and women are currently being trained in the wool textile industry; and how many have been in training in each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General if he will give figures for the percentage improvement in productivity in the wool textile industry for those years for which information is available.

Mr. Lee: The information necessary to make reliable estimates is not available.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will give the number of (a) full-time and (b) part-time workers in the wool textile industry for each of the last 20 years;

(2) how many (a) men and (b) women were employed in the wool textile industry in each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Lee: Estimates of the number of full-time and part-time male employees are available only from the censuses of employment which were held in June each year from 1971 to 1978, September 1981 and September 1984. Estimates of the number of full-time and part-time female employees are available only from censuses of employment up to June 1978, but are available quarterly for periods after that date.

The table gives, for the dates specified, the available information on employees in employment in the woollen and worsted textile industry in Great Britain. The Department's employment statistics are analysed according to the Standard Industrial Classification and the series is broken by the introduction of the 1980 SIC, which reclassified certain activities. The figures for June 1966 to June 1981 are for Minimum List Heading (MLH) 414 of the 1968 SIC, while those for June 1982 to June 1986 are for Activity Heading (AH) 4310 of the 1980 SIC.

The census of employment figures for September 1981 are given on both bases.

The estimates given in the table are subject to considerable potential estimation error due to the relatively small number of employees in the industry.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Victim Support Schemes

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the £2 million extra support for victim support schemes in 1987-88 is to be devoted to staff recruitment costs.

Mr. Mellor: Awards enabling schemes to employ salaried co-ordinators may include an element to cover contingent costs; but the amounts to be spent in this way on recruitment costs cannot yet be estimated.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the £2 million extra support to victim support schemes is to be spent on recruiting regional support workers and additional staff in urban schemes.

Mr. Mellor: The new funding is to help individual local victims support schemes, primarily by enabling them to employ salaried co-ordinators. It will not be available to finance posts at a regional level, nor to pay for staff additional to main co-ordinators.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list each victim support scheme and the amount they are due to receive as a result of the £2 million extra grant in 1987-88.

Mr. Mellor: All victims support schemes affiliated to the National Association of Victims Support Schemes have been given an opportunity to apply for awards from the new funding, but no awards have yet been made.

Police (Complaints)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer of 5 March, Official Report, columns 696-8, regarding cases involving police officers settled out of court, he will give details of the nature of the complaint, the name of the complainant and the numbers and rank of the officers involved in each of the 52 cases; and in each case what subsequent action was taken against those officers involved.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The nature of the complaint in each of these 52 cases was given in my reply on 5 March, at columns 696-8. Settlements of civil actions out of court are reached in confidence and I am unable for that reason to disclose the names of the complainants. I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the other information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Prison Disturbances (Report)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the report of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons on the prison disturbances in 1986 will be published.

Mr. Mellor: We intend to publish the results of Her Majesty's chief inspector's review as soon as we have received and studied his report, which is expected shortly.

Remanded Persons

Mrs. Golding asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the conditions in which women on remand are being held in the cells of magistrates courts in the Metropolitan police area.

Mr. Mellor: We are conscious that court cells are not designed to hold prisoners for more than a few hours and that the facilities there leave much to be desired. The police, however, are doing all they can under difficult circumstances to provide the best possible conditions.

Metropolitan Police (Residential Properties)

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many residential properties are owned by the Metropolitan police in (a) the Greater London area and (b) the constituency of Fulham; and how many of these are currently vacant.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am informed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that, as at 2 March 1987, the Metropolitan police owned 3,203 residential quarters in the Metropolitan police district, of which 573 are vacant; 22 of these quarters, five of which are vacant, are in the constituency of Fulham.

Prison Department (Residential Properties)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list the number of one, two, three and four-bedroom flats or houses owned by the prison department in Hammersmith; and how many in each category are currently occupied.

Mr. Mellor: The information is as follows:

Flats/houses	Number owned	Occupied
One bedroom	10	10
Two bedroom	—	—
Three bedroom	37	24
Four bedroom	3	3

Twelve vacant flats are affected by a major structural defect which has made them unfit for occupation pending demolition as part of the redevelopment scheme for Wormwood Scrubs.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will list, for the last year for which figures are available, the monthly occupancy rates of one, two, three and four-bedroom flats and houses owned by the prison department in Hammersmith.

Mr. Mellor: The information for the year ended 31 December 1986 is as follows:

	One bedroom	Two bedroom	Three bedroom	Four bedroom
January to May	—	—	24	3
June	—	—	24	2
July to November	—	—	24	3
December	10	—	24	3

Traffic Offences

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 20 February, Official Report, columns 870-1, what information his Department collects relating to the specific nature of offences as opposed to offenders, under the Road Traffic Acts in the metropolis.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The details collected centrally on court proceedings are the same for all police force areas. Table 5 of "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales, 1985, Supplementary Tables", shows the types of offence for which separate information was collected up to 31 December 1986 and for which the statistics are thought to be reliable. Details of the circumstances of offences are not collected centrally. More detailed information may be available locally, but the extent of local record keeping varies widely. As the result of a review in 1986 of the amount of detail on less serious motoring offences required to meet the needs of government, the costs of police forces and the details readily available to them, the number of types of motoring offences on which separate information is collected was reduced from 146 shown in table 5 to 64 from the beginning of 1987.

Drugs Misuse

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 248, he has now received the report of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs on the adequacy of current controls.

Mr. Mellor: Yes. We are looking very carefully at the conclusions reached by the advisory council on the adequacy of existing controls on opium poppies.

Leeds Prison

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what, on the most recent figures, is the daily average of prisoners offered employment in Leeds prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of jobs currently available for convicted prisoners at Leeds is 421. On 6 March, the latest date for which figures are available, the actual number employed was 401. In addition, 10 to 12 remand prisoners are regularly employed on cleaning duties.

Prisoners (Transfer)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce his response to the proposals for the Standing Advisory Commitee on Human Rights relating to transfer of prisoners to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland wrote to the chairman of the Standing Advisory Committee on 20 January, informing him that the Government accepted, with slight modifications the committee's recent recommendation on this subject. A copy of the letter has been placed in the Library.

Asylum

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what would be the approximate cost in money and manpower, based upon experience to date, of the thorough investigation of every asylum-seeker's case by his Department.

Mr. Waddington: Under current procedures all applications for asylum are thoroughly considered and investigated. It is not possible to say what the average cost of investigating an asylum application is. However, in 1985-86 the staffing costs of the central unit responsible for the consideration of the cases made by asylum-seekers and the representations received on those cases was estimated at over £780,000. This is only one element in the overall cost of our asylum procedures as part of immigration control.

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the countries from which there are currently refugees seeking asylum in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: The numbers of applications for refugee status by nationality which were undecided at the end of 1985 were published in table 1 of Home Office Statistical Bulleting "Refugee Statistics, United Kingdom, 1985", issue 12-86. It is hoped to publish corresponding figures for 1986 around the end of April.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to details of any 24-hour or part-day armed patrols deployed by the Metropolitan police in the last year, indicating the areas covered and the number and ranks of the officers involved.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It would not be right to add to the information given in my reply of 2 March, as to do so could prejudice the arrangements made for the security of the diplomatic community.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis stating the number of persons who have been contacted by the Metropolitan police, in the last year, to confirm that photographs taken by the police had been destroyed in accordance with force procedures.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Paragraph 4.1 of the code of practice for the identification of persons by police officers requires the police to notify an arrested person whose photograph is taken that it will be destroyed if he is prosecuted for the offence and cleared, or is not prosecuted, unless he admits the offence and is cautioned for it, and that he may witness its destruction. There is, however, no requirement on the police under the code to notify persons that their photographs have been destroyed.

Civil Defence

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish, for each shire and metropolitan county, and for the area covered by the former Greater London council, his Department's assessment of civil defence preparedness under each of the headings cited in schedule 2 of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983, relating to plans, emergency centres and communications.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. These assessments were provisional and intended only for use in the bilateral discussions with individual local authorities. A general report on progress in the implementation of the 1983 regulations is in the Library.

New Patriotic Movement

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the activities in the United Kingdom of the New Patriotic Movement cult; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No representations have been received in the Home Office about the New Patriotic Movement.

Television Violence

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what investigations his Department has carried out through specific projects on violence on television and its effect on young persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Home Office Research and Planning Unit has recently published a paper, "Television violence: a note on recent research"—Research Bulletin 22/1986—a copy of which is in the Library, which reviews the studies undertaken in recent years on the relationship of television violence to aggression. Original research is also sponsored by the broadcasting authorities which are responsible for keeping in touch with developments in this field.

Unification Church

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Government's policy concerning the admission into the United Kingdom of members of the Unification church, the Moonies, who are not British subjects; and if he will make a statment.

Mr. Waddington: Overseas nationals are not admitted to work in the United Kingdom as ministers of religion or missionaries of the Unification church. There is no general prohibition on the admission of members of the church if they meet the requirements for admission under other provisions in the Immigration Rules, HC 169 as amended.

Crime Statistics (Thurrock)

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in the Official Report the number of burglaries for each year since 1979 to the latest available date in Thurrock, indicating in each year the clear-up rate for burglaries in Thurrock.

Mr. Mellor: The information collected centrally relates to police force areas. Numbers of burglaries recorded in each police force area are published each year in the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales"—table 2.5 of the issue for 1986, Cmnd. 10—and most recently in table 6 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin issue number 4/87. Clear-up rates for offences of burglary recorded by the Essex police are given in the following table:

Immigration

Mr. Raison asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a breakdown of the immigration status on arrival in the United Kingdom of all those (a) granted refugee status or asylum and (b) refused it over the latest available 12 month period.

Mr. Waddington: [pursuant to his reply, 6 March 1987, c. 709]: The available information is for the period October 1985-September 1986 and is given in the table. The figures relate to the date of decision and do not indicate the number of arrivals in the period indicated.

Terrorism

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons have been detained on Merseyside under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) legislation since 1974 to the latest available date; how many have been charged and how many found guilty under the Act; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many exclusion orders have been made against persons from Merseyside under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) legislation since 1974 to the latest available date.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 23 February 1987, c. 31]: The number of persons detained since 1974 under prevention of terrorism legislation, by police force area, is published annually in Home Office statistical bulletin, copies of which are in the Library—table 4 of issue 2/87 gives figures up to the end of 1986. Figures are also presented for Great Britain on charges and their outcomes for those detained—tables 6 and 7 of the same bulletins. For individual police force areas, the available information on charges and their outcomes relates only to the period since 1 January 1979 and is given for the 467 persons so detained on Merseyside in the following table. Information on exclusion orders is not recorded in the form requested. The information which can be provided without disproportionate cost relates to the period 1 January 1979 to 31 December 1986, during which period 23 exclusion orders were made against persons detained by the Merseyside police.

National Security

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how frequently national security has been invoked in immigration cases as a reason for removing or deporting individuals in each year since 1973.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 22 January 1987, c. 667]: The information is not available in the precise form requested, nor for the whole period mentioned. In 1977 two individuals were deported on grounds of national security and between 1976 and 1983 there were no other deportations on those grounds. In 1984, 1985 and 1986 the figures for deportations on grounds of national security were six, 14 and 29 respectively.

Separate statistics of persons removed from the United Kingdom on grounds of national security are not available, but figures of persons refused leave to enter under rule 85 of the immigration rules on the Home Secretary's personal directions are as follows:

	Number
1976	7
1977	20
1978	29
1979	12
1980	8
1981	7
1982	6
1983	4
1984	7
1985	6
[1]1986	13
Total	119

[1] January-October.

Most, although not all, of the above refusals were on grounds of national security. The figures for the years 1976-84 may include a small number of cases in which removal from the country did not follow the initial refusal of entry.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Optica Aircraft

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy on the export of Optica aircraft to South Africa.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is the Government's policy that civil trade with South Africa should, within the limits of our international obligations and undertakings, be determined by the commercial judgment of those engaged in it.

Communications Satellites

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all communications satellites (a) currently in orbit and (b) proposed.

Mr. Pattie: Attempting to list all the communication satellites either currently in orbit or in prospect would be a very major task. Confining the question to national satellites, there are currently no normally operational United Kingdom communication satellites, although some remain live in a technical sense. Looking to the future, the possibilities become too speculative unless the test is applied of a launch having been reserved already for a satellite which will be for the United Kingdom to register internationally. On this basis there are launch plans for up to three Skynet-4 defence communication satellites. Plans for two satellites for direct television broadcasting are also being prepared on a commercial basis.

Switchgear

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect on the United Kingdom engineering switchgear industry of the Central Electricity Generating Board's policy towards replacement of obsolete switchgear equipment; what support his Department gives towards research and development in this field; what information he has on the level of capital investment in the switchgear industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Guinness plc

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many staff of his Department are currently involved in the investigation in relation to Guinness plc; at what average daily cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The investigation into Guinness plc is being carried out by inspectors in private practice who provide their own staff, and recover the costs from my Department. As part of their duties, staff in my Department are engaged on work associated with this and other investigations. It is not possible to identify such staff costs in relation to any particular investigation.

IC Gas (Share Dealings)

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if in the light of the shareholder and board level connections between GBL and Givert he will appoint inspectors under section 442 and section 446 of the Companies Act 1983 to investigate the ownership and dealings in shares in IC Gas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: At present, I know of no reason for doing so, but I shall consider any information the hon. Member may have about this matter.

Export Licences

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the number of export licences granted by his Department for military walkie-talkie radios in 1985 and 1986 giving the quantity in each case.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to make public information of this kind.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many export licences were granted by his Department for Blowpipe missiles in 1985 and 1986 giving the quantity in each case.

Mr. Alan Clark: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to make public information of this kind.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many export licences have been granted by his Department for military uniforms in 1985 and 1986 giving the quantity in each case.

Mr. Alan Clark: Military uniforms are not subject to export licensing under the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1985.

Contra Forces (Arms)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if Her Majesty's Government have considered any application for a licence to supply British arms to the Contra forces in central America in the last two years.

Mr. Alan Clark: No export licence application with an end user identified as the Contra forces has been received.

Textiles

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will give the volume of imported wool textile products into the United Kingdom for each of the last 20 years expressed as a percentage of the total trade in such products;

(2) what percentage of United Kingdom exports was contributed by the wool textile industry in each of the last 10 years;

(3) what, in constant value prices, has been the level of (a) wool textile production of the United Kingdom and (b) imports of wool textile products in each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Animal Skins

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information his Department has on the exports of trapped and farmed animal skins, by species, from the United Kingdom for the last year.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is as follows:

United Kingdom exports of skins 1986

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information his Department has on the importation of skins from trapped and farmed animals, by species, into the United Kingdom and the European Economic Community for the last year.

Mr. Allan Clark: The available information is in the following table:

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Bedfordshire Local Education Authority

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department monitored the loss of pay suffered by teachers employed by the Bedfordshire local education authority who withdrew their labour during the recent dispute; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. It is for local education authorities to determine what deductions should be made when teachers break their contracts of employment.

Teachers (Appraisal)

Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how he intends to operate the system of teacher appraisal as demanded by the Education Act 1986 and the new conditions of employment for teachers following the decision of the National Union of Teachers and the National Association of Schoolmasters and the National Union of Women Teachers to boycott teacher appraisal pilot schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I expect preparatory work and training for appraisal to go ahead in the summer term in the six pilot local education authorities with the assistance of consultants commissioned by the Department. It remains our objective to arrive at a national framework for teacher appraisal agreed by the teachers' associations and the local education authority employers. I hope that the trade unions concerned will have reconsidered their recent withdrawal by the time work has progressed to a point where actual appraisals of teachers would be conducted. I believe it is very much in the interests of teachers, from the standpoints of career development, job satisfaction and public recognition of their professionalism, that appraisal should be successfully brought into operation, as well as in the interests of education authorities and of pupils.

Ealing Green High School

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he proposes to take to satisfy himself as to whether the proposed sale by Ealing council of the Ealing Green high school playing fields at Clayton road, Ealing, for housing development, complies with the provisions of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981; what assessment he has made of the implications of this proposal for the provision of adequate facilities for competitive sports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Ealing education authority has a statutory duty to provide the minimum playing field area appropriate to the size of the school as laid down in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981. Provided these requirements are met, the authority is free to dispose of surplus land if it wishes. The authority is not required to inform my Department of its intention to dispose of land considered surplus, and my Department has received no formal complaints on the matter to suggest that the Secretary of State would be justified in intervening.

Academic Freedom

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has yet decided what action he will take following discussions about academic freedom with Ruskin college; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: In recent months, I have had a series of discussions and exchanges with Ruskin college on the question of academic freedom. In particular, I have discussed with representatives of the college a statement on academic freedom made by the college's executive committee. That statement is based on, and in general terms endorses, a paper prepared by the college's academic advisers. Copies of both have been placed in the library.

The Government welcome the college's affirmation of its commitment to the principle of academic freedom. But the academic advisers' paper gives insufficient basis for confidence that this principle will in fact predominate over other considerations. In particular, the suggestion in the paper that the feelings or convictions of some members of staff or students may in effect circumscribe the freedom of expression of other members of the staff, is unacceptable.

The Government are determined to sustain the free circulation of ideas and freedom of speech within the law in all publicly funded institutions of further and higher education. Like some other educational institutions, Ruskin college has its own traditions which the Government do not wish to call into question. But such traditions must be expressed within a clear framework of academic and intellectual freedom.

The Government therefore intend to seek an independent assessment. The Vice-Chancellor of the University of Essex, Dr. Albert Sloman, has agreed to lead a team of three members to carry our an inspection with the following terms of reference:

(1) to inspect the college under the terms of Regulation 24(2) of the Education (Grant) Regulations 1983 to ascertain what principles at present apply with regard to academic freedom and what means are adopted for ensuring that those principles are put into practice;

(2) to make recommendations to the Secretary of State as to the principles that should in future apply and the means that should be adopted for ensuring that they are put into practice.

I hope that this report will be completed in the coming months.

Copies of my exchange of letters with the principal of the college about this inspection have also been placed in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Westminster Hall Cafeteria

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal for what category of hon. Members' functions it is proposed to use the Westminster Hall Cafeteria; whether it is proposed that a charge will be made; what representations he received in advance of the resolution of the Services Committee favouring such a course of action; if he will seek to increase the time available for consultation before implementation of the proposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Irving: I have been asked to reply.

The Refreshment Department proposes to use the Westminster Hall Cafeteria as a banqueting room available to Members and Officers of the House on the same terms and conditions as for Banqueting accommodation elsewhere.

Full consultation took place with representatives of the regular users of the Westminster Hall Cafeteria before the Services Committee resolution of 17 February; and the General Purposes Sub-Committee of the House of Commons Whitley Committee have been invited to comment before the end of March. Subject to these and any other representations that may be received by that date, the Services Committee has agreed that the proposal may be implemented after the Easter Adjournment.

On all changes in the Refreshment Department, it is the policy of the Catering sub-Committee to have wide ranging consultations, and in this particular case consultations were commenced in December 1986.

Select Committees (Travel Costs)

Mr. Greenway asked the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, how much has been spent on travel (a) in the United Kingdom, (b) in Europe and (c) in the rest of the world, excluding Europe, by each Select Committee during the current Session; which countries were involved; how long each trip lasted; how many hon. Members attended part of each visit; how many did not take part in any visit; how many hon. Members attended for the totality of each visit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: The information in respect of those Select Committees which have travelled is set out in the tables. The Commission relies on the Liaison Committee to examine applications for overseas travel from individual Select Committees and to advise on general principles concerning Select Committee travel.

WALES

Schools (Vandalism)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has of the annual costs since 1979 of vandalism and arson in schools in Wales county by county; what measures he has taken to combat vandalism in schools in Wales; what liaison he has with the police in Wales on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Department does not collect information on the cost of vandalism and arson in schools.

Last year my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales opened the all-Wales crime prevention seminar which was chaired by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State and was attended by education interests. In addition, the Department has informed county councils that they will be asked shortly for reports on action taken on crime prevention as a consequence of the seminar. My right hon. Friend has recently approved applications for education support grant in 1987-88 and beyond from South and Mid Glamorgan for projects to promote social responsibility in their area.

Advice on relationships between the police and schools has been circulated to LEAs in the document "Liaison Between the Police and Schools," issued jointly by the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Society of Education Officers. Further guidance for LEAs and school governors on such relationships will be given in a circular on the provisions of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 which will be issued by the Department shortly. In addition, senior officials of the Welsh Office are in regular contact with the four chief constables in Wales on matters of common interest.

Rail Electrification

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to meet the Chairman of British Rail concerning the prospects of the electrification of rail routes in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Electrification of railway lines in Wales was one of the items discussed between my right hon. Friend and the chairman of British Rail at their meeting on 25 November last year. I understand that British Rail has no plans for electrification of services at present.

Roads

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the completion date of (a) the Ruabon by pass and (b) the Conwy tunnel scheme.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The contractor has indicated that he expects substantially to complete work on the Ruabon bypass by 22 May 1987, but that date is dependent on reasonable weather conditions in the intervening period.

Subject to no unforeseen difficulties, I expect the scheme for the A55 Conwy crossing to be completed in early 1991.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the transport supplementary grant for Wales in each of the counties of Wales in the years 1980-86.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Transport supplementary grant has been paid as follows:

Notes:
(1) Since 1982-83 TSG has been paid on capital expenditure only. Grant in respect of current expenditure was subsumed in the rate support grant.
(2) Since 1985-86 TSG has been paid only on schemes costing £5 million or more; other capital expenditure on transport and highways is covered by formula capital allocation.

Homelessness

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to tackle homelessness in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: In addition to the significant increases in the allocations made to local authorities and to the Housing Corporation to help meet housing need in Wales, we have helped to secure the introduction of substantial private finance for housing association schemes in Wales. We have significantly increased our financial support for voluntary bodies working to help relieve homelessness in Wales. The Government are also preparing a guide for publication which will contain advice about the statutory rights of those who are homeless, and are financing research into the operation of the homeless persons legislation in England and Wales.

Housing (Waiting Lists)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many Welsh people were on the waiting list for rented council houses at the end of 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986; and what measures he has to lessen these waiting lists.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Information about waiting lists for local authority accommodation is not held centrally.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the details of home improvement grants, numbers and cash value, for each local authority in Wales for the years 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The numbers and values of home improvement grants completed in the years requested are given in the following table:

Education

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had from teachers and parents concerning (a) a national curriculum, (b) student grants and (c) proposals on teachers' pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have received five letters from members of the public regarding a national curriculum and 23 letters in the last six months about various aspects of student financial support. On 30 October my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science announced new proposals for teachers' pay, since when I have received 32 representations on this subject.

Education Association

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amounts of cash given to the Welsh Education Association in Wales for each of the years since 1979; if he will give the information in cash real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It has been assumed that the question refers to the Workers Educational Association. The grant paid to the two WEA districts in Wales since 1979 is as follows:

	Payments at current prices	Payments at constant (1985-86) prices
1979-80	152,177	245,641
1980-81	190,221	258,829

1984-85	268,853	284,992
1985-86	269,821	269,821

Provision for 1986-87 is £264,206.

Welsh Language

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Wales if, pursuant to his reply of 9 February to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye, Official Report, column 5, he will express the per capita sum on Welsh language expenditure, inclusive of the moneys allocated through local education authorities and support for Sanel 4 Cymru; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Just over £100 per person on the basis of the 1981 census figure of Welsh-speaking resident population aged 3 years and over, or £18 per person on the basis of the latest estimate of total resident population.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Visa System

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what would be the estimated extra cost of introducing a visa system for foreign visitors and immigrants to the United Kingdom from all countries other than European Economic Community countries; what is the expenditure on the visa system at present in operation; and what are the estimated savings that could be expected in legal fees if such an overall system were operated.

Mr. Eggar: The information to answer the first part of my hon. Friend's question is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Following the introduction of visa regimes for nationals of India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Ghana and Nigeria, the cost of issuing entry clearances worldwide is estimated to be £35 million in a full financial year. Two thirds of this is expected to be recovered through visa-fee income.

DEFENCE

Stornoway

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to upgrade the present accommodation for Royal Air Force personnel at RAF Stornoway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There is no specific date for the modernisation of the RAF married quarters at Stornoway, although it is hoped to tackle this in the early 1990s as part of the rolling programme for MQ modernisation.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department still plans to have new married quarters built at the Stornoway North Atlantic Treaty Organisation base; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There are no current plans for any additional married quarters at RAF Stornoway, as the existing houses are expected to be able to cope with the planned manning levels.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence if there has been any change in the overall cost of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation development of Stornoway airport, as a result of phases 2 and 3 being telescoped; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I can advise the right hon. Member that the planned scope of the RAF Stornoway project remains unaltered and the estimated cost is still within the £40 million which my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Lee), the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement, quoted on 21 June 1985 at column 243.

Royal Ordnance plc

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any reasons were given to him by Trafalgar House plc for withdrawing its interest in purchasing Royal Ordnance plc; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The group chief executive of Trafalgar House wrote to my right hon. Friend indicating that, after detailed consideration of a comprehensive report, the board of directors had concluded that it should not make an offer for Royal Ordnance. He did not elaborate on its reasons.

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will require any potential purchaser of Royal Ordnance plc to give an assurance that the company will not be broken up.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The future shape of the company must be a matter for sensible commercial judgment. But a prospective purchaser's likely intentions will certainly be one of the factors we shall be taking into account in reaching a final decision.

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from, and what consultations he has had with, trade unions in connection with the planned sale of Royal Ordnance plc.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the process of moving Royal Ordnance plc towards privatisation, Defence Ministers have had a number of exchanges of correspondence and meetings with the trades unions. A further meeting has been arranged between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the trades unions today.

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures he has adopted to advise and consult the total work force of Royal Ordnance plc in connection with the planned sale of the company; and if he will make a statement as to his future policy intentions.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: With the Government's encouragement, the management of Royal Ordnance has gone to considerable lengths to keep the work force informed of developments on privatisation and will continue to do so. My right hon. Friend has also corresponded and held meetings with trade union representatives, as has my noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement.

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current position of Royal Ordnance plc.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [pursuant to his reply, 24 February 1987, c. 132]: Firm proposals have been made by BAe and GKN for the acquisition of all the share capital of Royal Ordnance plc. These proposals, the terms of which must for the time being remain confidential, are currently being considered by the Government and their advisers. Further discussions will be held with the two companies.

Ferranti has decided not to make an offer for the share capital of Royal Ordnance.

Foxhunter

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects Foxhunter radar to be fully operational in Tornado F2/3 squadrons of the Royal Air Force; what delays have occurred in this contract; and what financial penalties will be incurred by the manufacturer.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) on 22 January at column 727.

Defence Projects

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish as much of the information contained in the major projects statement to the Committee of Public Accounts as is not classified.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer to my reply to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 2 February at columns 516-17.

RAF Bentwaters

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if discussions between Her Majesty's Government and the United States Government on the possible use of RAF Bentwaters for the storage of nuclear weapons have been concluded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 14 July 1986 at column 428.

US Air Force

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report all collisions involving United States Air Force F111 jets during the past decade in United Kingdom airspace.

Mr. Freeman: Two F111 aircraft collided over Tain range on 20 April 1979. This was the only collision involving such aircraft in United Kingdom airspace during the past decade.

THE ARTS

Business Sponsorship

Mr. Murphy asked the Minister for the Arts, if he will make a statement on the achievement of the Office of the Arts and Libraries since May 1979 in terms of business sponsorship of the arts.

Mr. Luce: Since 1979, successive Ministers for the Arts have taken initiatives to encourage a higher level of business sponsorship of the arts; these include setting up a Committee of Honour, establishing a programme of regional visits to meet local business men and the introduction in late 1984 of the highly successful business sponsorship incentive scheme which has already produced £11·12 million new money for the arts and 400 first time sponsors. We have also supported the expansion of the Association for Business Sponsorship of the Arts to provide regional administrators and an office in Scotland. All these initiatives have contributed to the increase in sponsorship nationwide from £4·6 million in 1979 to over £25 million in 1986 and the figure is still rising.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Terrorism

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has evidence of the involvement of paramilitary organisations in alleged trafficking of drugs.

Mr. Scott: While persons who may have paramilitary links have been prosecuted for drug offences, there is no evidence of organised involvement in drugs trafficking by paramilitary groups.

Housing Stock

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of housing stock in the south region requires repairs estimated to cost over £2,500.

Mr. Needham: The Northern Ireland house condition survey 1984, published by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, estimated that 26·5 per cent. of the total dwelling stock in the executive's south region requires repairs estimated to cost over £2,500.

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the housing stock in the south region is regarded as unfit for human habitation.

Mr. Needham: The Northern Ireland house condition survey 1984, published by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, estimates that 11·5 per cent. of the total dwelling stock in the executive's south region was recorded as unfit for human habitation as defined by article 46 of the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1981.

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of housing stock in the south region lacks the basic amenities.

Mr. Needham: The Northern Ireland house condition survey 1984, published by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive estimates that 10·8 per cent. of the total dwelling stock in the executive south region lacks at least one basic amenity.

Housing Waiting List

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of those on the housing waiting list in the south region are on the priority list; and how many of these have families.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I understand from the chief executive that, at 28 February 1987, 8·04 per cent. of applicants on the housing waiting list in the south region were on the priority list. Details of how many applicants on the priority list had families are not readily available.

Homeless Persons

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to introduce to Northern Ireland legislation equivalent to the Homeless Persons Act 1977; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: It is the Government's intention to publish a proposal for a draft housing Order-in-Council this year which will contain homelessness provisions broadly corresponding to those contained in part III of the Housing Act 1985.

Housing Executive (Waiting List)

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are on the Housing Executive accommodation waiting list in the south region at present.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I understand from the chief executive that at 28 February 1987 there were 2,557 applicants on the Housing Executive's waiting ist in the south region.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was spent on home improvement grants last year in the south region Northern Ireland Housing Executive; and what plans he has to increase the amount available to first time buyers.

Mr. Needham: In the last year some £8,980,934 was spent on home improvement grants in the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's south region.

The availability of home improvement grant is essentially related to the property and its condition and, whilst there is additional assistance available to low income housholds who qualify on the financial hardship grounds, I have no plans to provide any additional assistance for first-time buyers.

Unfit Dwellings

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many unfit dwellings there are in Newry rural housing district or Armagh rural housing district; and what steps he is taking to make grants available to relieve the situation.

Mr. Needham: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

House Building (Newry and Armagh)

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many houses are to be built in Newry housing district and Armagh district in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Housing Executive in the first instance, but I understand from the chairman that in the 1987-88 financial year the Housing Executive expects to complete six houses in the Newry housing district and 23 houses in the Armagh housing district. In the same period, it is planned to start 96 houses in the Newry and Mourne district council area, 73 of which will be in the Newry housing district and 23 in the Armagh housing district.

Accommodation List (South Region)

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of those on the accommodation list in the south region have over 65 points.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I understand from the chief executive that the information is not available in the precise form requested. However, at 28 February 1987 17·5 per cent. of those on the waiting list had over 60 points.

SCOTLAND

Barrhead (Ayr Road Route)

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what studies his Department has made of the consequences of the Ayr road route for traffic in Barrhead; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The Scottish Development Department and Strathclyde regional council are jointly engaged in a study of traffic movements in the south side of Glasgow and beyond. Preliminary results suggest that, as a consequence of the construction of the Ayr road route and of other road improvements, the flow of traffic on the A736 through Barrhead could reduce by almost 10 per cent.

Community Halls Advisory Service

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to ensure that the Scottish community halls advisory service receives independent funding from the Scottish Education Department.

Mr. Rifkind: This proposal will shortly be considered against competing applications for grant in 1987-88 from other voluntary organisations.

Water Authorities (Fish Stocks)

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to what action is being taken by water authorities in Scotland to rear fish to meet the restocking requirements of their rivers and waterways.

Mr. John MacKay: Water authorities in Scotland are the regional and islands councils. They do not have powers or duties to restock rivers and waterways with fish.

In Scotland district salmon fishery boards have power to stock the waters of their districts with salmon. They are not, however, required statutorily to report their restocking programmes.

The information available for 1983, the latest year for which comprehensive data are available, is that boards released some 12·7 million salmon at various stages of development. In 1985 some 4·3 million were released by 10 boards. This figure should be regarded as a minimum as not all boards made returns.

There are no comparable figures for freshwater fish.

"Crafts in Scotland"

Mr. Buchan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, with reference to the consultative paper "Crafts in Scotland" issued on 15 October by the Scottish Development Agency, the Scottish Arts Council, the Highlands and Islands Development Board and the Scottish Museums Council, he will state (a) how many consultative papers were circulated, (b) how many responses were received, (c) into what categories the responses were divided and (d) what action is now proposed in the light of the responses.

Mr. Lang: The consultation paper was distributed to a total of 3,260 craftsmen, of whom 129 commented. Of the 129 comments, 76 were either totally or broadly in favour of the proposals, 32 were totally against the proposals and 15 were considered not to be relevant. In respect of the conservation aspects of the consultation paper, six comments were received, all in favour of the proposal. A summary of the responses to the consultation paper has been submitted to my Department and is being taken into account, together with other representations received, in the consideration of the proposals which is currently in hand.

Smoke Control Areas

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the local authorities in Scotland which have not designated smoke control areas; and what evidence he has of the level of bronchial respiratory diseases (a) in these areas and (b) in designated areas.

Mr. Ancram: District and islands councils are responsible for deciding whether to designate the whole or any part of their areas as smoke control areas. The authorities in Scotland which have not done so are: City of Aberdeen; Angus; Annandale and Eskdale; Argyll and Bute; Badenoch and Strathspey; Banff and Buchan; Berwickshire; Caithness; Clydesdale; Cumnock and Doon Valley; East Lothian; Eastwood; Gordon; Inverness; Kincardine and Deeside; Lochaber; Midlothian; Moray; Nairn; North East Fife; Orkney; Perth and Kinross; Ross and Cromarty; Shetland; Skye and Lochalsh; Stewartry; Sutherland; Tweeddale; Western Isles; Wigtown.

The boundaries of smoke control areas do not correlate with those of health boards, and it would not be practicable to relate health statistics to such areas.

Breast Cancer

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average waiting time for women in the Argyll and Clyde health board area who have had tests for breast cancer to be informed of the results of the test; how long it takes for the requisite surgery to be carried out in those women in need of such surgery; and how these waiting times compare with waiting times elsewhere in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available centrally.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many operations have been performed on women suffering from breast cancer in (a) the Argyll and Clyde health board area and (b) Scotland as a whole in each of the past five years.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is as follows:

	Argyll and Clyde Health Board	Scotland
1981	473	4,075
1982	398	4,657
1983	360	4,250

1985	376	4,614

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many women have died from cancer of the breast in (a) the Argyll and Clyde health board area and (b) Scotland as a whole in each of the past five years.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is as follows:

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of the £6 million announced by the Secretary of State for Social Services on 25 March for national breast cancer screening purposes will be allocated to Tayside health board in 1987-88.

Mr. John MacKay: As announced on 25 February, £1 million will be made available in 1987-88 to enable a start to be made in Scotland on the implementation of the Forrest report on breast cancer screening. We shall be discussing with health boards how this sum should be allocated.

Cervical Cancer

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average waiting time of women in the Argyll and Clyde health board area who have had tests for cervical cancer to receive details of the test; how this waiting time compares with the average waiting time for such results elsewhere in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available centrally.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many operations have been performed on women suffering from cervical cancer in (a) the Argyll and Clyde health board area and (b) Scotland as a whole in each of the past five years.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is as follows:

Argyll and Clyde Health Board

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received about funding and staff shortages in the Argyll and Clyde health board.

Mr. John MacKay: My noble Friend the Minister of State has received one representation, about the funding of a cardiovascular screening project.

AIDS

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on facilities for screening for AIDS in (a) the Argyll and Clyde Health area board, *(b)*Strathclyde, and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. John MacKay: Anyone who wishes to be tested for the presence of HIV antibodies may arrange, either directly or through his or her general practitioner, to be tested, after appropriate counselling, either at a sexually transmitted disease clinic; or at Ruchill hospital, Glasgow; or the City hospital, Edinburgh. Clinics are located throughout Strathclyde and in the Argyll and Clyde health board area there is a clinic at Inverclyde Royal hospital in Greenock.

Ophthalmic Surgery

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the length of waiting time for ophthalmic surgery in the Argyll and Clyde health board area; and how this compares with waiting time for this type of treatment elsewhere in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The mean waiting times (in days) for ophthalmic surgery in 1985, the latest year for which statistics are available, were as follows:

	Days
Argyll & Clyde	118
Ayrshire & Arran	66
Borders	40
Dumfries & Galloway	94
Fife	67
Fourth Vally	56
Grampian	191
Greater Glasgow	96

Community Programme

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a detailed breakdown of the number of full-time and part-time places, respectively, on the community programme in each of the local government regions in Scotland; if he will state the total expenditure on the community programme in each local government region in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Alwyn House, Fife

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the proposed closure of Alwyn house, Fife; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: Representations have been received from 16 hon. and right hon. Members, North-East Fife district council, representative bodies and members of the public as well as from some of the trainees at Alwyn House. These have urged the case for retaining in Scotland the facilities currently provided at this establishment for the training and assessment of blind and partially sighted people for employment.

Any decision to close would be for the owners of the premises, Edinburgh and South-East of Scotland Society for the Welfare of the Blind, in the light of the resources available to them from statutory and voluntary sources. Interested parties are currently engaged in consultations and I understand that early closure may be in prospect unless a solution can be reached in relation to certain capital and revenue funding requirements. No grant assistance has been provided by my Department and no application for grant is before me.

Forestry Commission (Lock Hourn Estates)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the conditions and circumstances surrounding the sale by the Forestry Commission of its Loch Hourn Estates and Glenely, with particular regard to (a) the historical balance and blend of crofting and forestry activity locally and (b) the extent to which cognisance was taken of the Government's stipulations on disposal of forestry assets vis-a-vis the maintenance of socially fragile communities.

Mr. John MacKay The sale of this plantation to an adjoining landowner was consistent with the Forestry Commission's aim of rationalising its estate. The sale in itself will not affect the historical balance beetween crofting and forestry in the area. The viability of the local community was considered carefully before a decision was taken to sell, but no redundancies will be necessary among the Commission's work force.

EEC Butter and Beef

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much free European Economic Community butter in terms of tonnage has been distributed in Dundee since the current European Economic Community scheme was begun; and what is the corresponding tonnage for beef.

Mr. John MacKay: I understand from the charities involved that 18·5 tonnes of butter and two tonnes of beef have been requisitioned for Dundee, and that distribution is well advanced.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the tonnage of beef and butter distributed to date in Scotland in the current European Economic Community free food scheme; and what percentage of current European Economic Community intervention stocks of beef and butter in Scotland they represent.

Mr. John MacKay: My latest information is that 120 tonnes of beef and 2,000 tonnes of butter have been authorised for release. Quantities in intervention stores vary constantly, which would make any percentage measurement of uptake meaningless.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what resources he has given to the Salvation Army, the Women's Royal Voluntary Service, and the Dundee resources centre for the unemployed to distribute free European Economic Community butter; and if he will increase these resources.

Mr. John MacKay: Community funds, in the form of standard payments, are available to cover the cost of packaging butter and its transport to the charities' main distribution points. Any other distribution costs fall to the charities themselves.

Rates

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, in determining the base rate for calculations under the formula specified in clause 4 the Abolition of Domestic Rates, Etc. (Scotland) Bill for the determination of the non-domestic rate, he intends to disregard any rate increase which may have been levied by local authorities following the imposition of rate support grant penalties.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. Friend has the power, under the provisions of clause 3(5)(a)(ii) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates, Etc. (Scotland) Bill, to prescribe a base rate for a local authority in respect of the financial year 1988-89. In considering whether and in what cases to exercise this power, he will be able to take into account, among other things, the extent to which the rate which any local authority have determined for that year may have been inflated to take account of its liability to pay grant penalties.

Seals

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans for a seal cull in the next year.

Mr. John MacKay: No. It was announced in May 1985 that there would be no culling of grey seals in Scotland until further notice. A further programme of research into the interaction of grey seals and fisheries is in hand, and the need for grey seal management will be reviewed in the light of the results of this research which is likely to take some time to complete.

Consultative Committee on the Curriculum

Mr. Pollock asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the Government's decisions on the policy review of the Consultative Committee on the Curriculum.

Mr. John MacKay: I have today written to Sir James Munn, the chairman of the Consultative Committee on the Curriculum, to tell him of the Government's decisions on the recommendations of the policy review carried out last year and I have arranged for copies of the letter, its appendices and of the policy review itself to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

I have made clear to Sir James the high value I place on the work of the CCC and my appreciation of the commitment of both the voluntary participants in its activities and of the permanent staff of the Scottish Curriculum Development Service. The Government endorse the arguments in favour of continuing the CCC on broadly its present remit. I have, however, decided in principle that the management of the SCDS could be strengthened and the efficiency and effectiveness of both the CCC and the SCDS improved by incorporating both bodies into a single company limited by guarantee. Our aim is that this should be achieved in consultation with the new CCC by 1 August 1988, subject to agreement on a satisfactory basis for incorporation.

I have also decided that the organisation and the educational effectiveness of the SCDS could be substanitally strengthened by bringing it together into one unit with the support staff of the new CCC. Our preference is that the new organisation should continue to be located within the campus of a college of education. I have therefore asked the CCC to negotiate with the Northern college with a view to locating the combined body on its Dundee campus.

The campus has much to offer the new CCC including the fact that it is to become the open learning centre for the college of education sector and I believe that, among the available alternatives, it has the strongest claims. It will be of great value to the Northern college — and to Dundee — to have the opportunity of housing a major educational body such as the CCC.

The interests of staff will be taken into account in planning the reorganisation, which I would expect to be completed by 1 August 1989 at the latest.

Full details of the Government's response to the recommendations of the policy review are set out in the appendices to the letter to Sir James Munn. I believe that our decisions provide a sound basis on which the CCC and the SCDS can continue to make a major and highly relevant contribution to improving the curriculum for young people and to providing support to help teachers implement it.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxation

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table which sets out for a two child family on (a) half average earnings, (b) three-quarters average earnings, (c) average earnings, (d) one and a half average earnings, (e) twice average earnings, (f) five times average earnings and (g) 10 times average earnings, the increase, in net income, to be derived from (i) a 1p cut in the standard rate of income tax, (ii) an increase in personal allowance, over and above indexation, which incurred the same cost as a 1p cut in standard rate income tax, (iii) an increase in child benefit which incurred the same cost as a 1p cut in standard rate income and (iv) an increase in income tax thresholds which incurred the same cost as a 1p cut in the standard rate of income tax, in 1986-87.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information based on full year direct revenue or expenditure cost at forecast 1987-88 levels is in the table. The income tax calculations assume that all the main personal allowances would be increased by the same percentage. Each of the measures would have a cost of about £1,300 million in a full year at 1987-88 income levels. The income tax changes are compared with the 1986-87 tax regime indexed according to the statutory provisions. It has also been assumed that the only income tax allowance or relief available to the married couple is the married man's allowance and that the wife has no earnings.

[1] Average earnings assumed to be £227·30 per week, an increase of 6·5 per cent. on 1986-87 in line with the assumptions used by the Government Actuary for reviewing National Insurance contributions (paragraph 3.02 of the Autumn Statement 1986).
[2] Assuming a corresponding change in supplementary benefit rates.
[3] Assuming no change in supplementary benefit rates.
[4] Including all higher rate thresholds.

Mrs. Roe asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list (a) the number of married women whose investment income was assessed to tax as that of their husbands' during the tax years 1982-83, 1983-84, and 1984-85, (b) the total gross income so assessed in each year and (c) the tax received thereon.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Privatisation

Sir Philip Holland asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in the Official Report the nationalised industries that have been privatised since June 1979; and what percentage of the public sector industrial undertakings in existence in June 1979 that represents.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Privatisation has reduced the proportion of GDP accounted for by the state sector of industry in 1979 by about one third. The nationalised industries which have been privatised since 1979 are:

Associated British Ports
British Aerospace
British Airways
British Gas
British Telecom
National Freight Corporation

Some businesses, which were formerly parts of nationalised industries, have also been privatised. These include Britoil, Enterprise Oil and British Shipbuilders' warship yards. Other state-owned companies which have been privatised include Amersham International, Cable and Wireless, and Jaguar.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, at 1980-81 prices, and using the gross domestic product market price deflator, public expenditure on education and science, housing, law and order and protective services in 1978-79 and in 1985-86, showing the percentage differences in each case.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1987, c. 645]: The figures requested are given in the table:

Function	Real terms[1] £ billion 1978-79	1985-86	Percentage Change
Education and science	13·1	12·9	−2
Housing[2]	7·0	4·2	−39
Law, order and protective services	3·4	4·6	36

[1] Cash figures adjusted to 1980-81 price levels by excluding the effect of general inflation as measured by the GDP deflator at market prices.
[2] Gross of receipts.
Source: Figures consistent with those underlying Chart. 1.11 in the 1987 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 56, Volume I).

Value Added Tax

Mr. Grylls asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is the percentage of the total cost in value added tax collection which is involved in collecting value added tax from businesses with a turnover of less than £50,000;

(2) what is the percentage of the total value added tax collected which comes from businesses with a turnover below £50,000.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his rely, 12 March 1987, c. 271]: In 1985-86 approximately 3 per cent. (about £600 million) of the total net VAT collected came from businesses with an annual turnover below £50,000. It is not possible to make a reliable estimate of the cost of collecting VAT from particular groups of businesses. The total administrative cost to Customs and Excise of collecting all VAT, including the making of repayments, was £200 million in that year.

Oil Companies

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for table 14.3 of the "Annual Abstract of Statistics, 1987" the amount provided each year for (a) depreciation, (b) the gross trading profits of oil companies and (c) the component parts of United Kingdom taxes on income.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 13 March 1987, c. 319]: Estimates of depreciation relevant to income arising in the United Kingdom are given in table 11.5 of "United Kingdom National Accounts 1986." This publication, which is available in the House of Commons Library, also contains the readily available analyses of United Kingdom taxes on income (tables 5.1 and 6.2). Figures for the gross trading profits of oil companies are not available.

TRANSPORT

Civil Aviation Authority

13. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman on 20 February. I meet him regularly. We discuss a range of matters of mutual interest.

Roads (West Sussex)

14. Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the current bypass schemes in west Sussex to start.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Construction of the A27 schemes for the Havant-Chichester improvement and the Fontwell bypass has already begun. The start of works on three other A27 bypasses and two major A23 improvement schemes in west Sussex is subject to the completion of the statutory procedures. Construction of the Brighton bypass could begin next year.

Airports

15. Mr. Brandon Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to encourage local authorities to introduce private capital into their airports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We are using our powers under the Airports Act 1986 to have the country's major local authority airports turned into Companies Act companies by 1 April. The Act empowers local authorities to sell their shares in airport companies. It will be for local authorities to decide whether to use this power, but I take every opportunity to persuade them of the advantages of doing so.

National Bus Company

16. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the current situation relating to the disposal of the National Bus Company's subsidiaries.

Mr. Moore: The National Bus Company is making excellent progress: 28 companies have already been sold and I look forward to approving further disposals shortly. I am particularly pleased that 18 of the subsidiaries have been bought by their own managements and that employees are being given the opportunity to acquire shares in the businesses.

M25 (Traffic Flows)

17. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the results of his Department's latest monitoring exercises observing traffic flows on the M25 motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels) on Thursday 12 March, at column 286.

Air Services

18. Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the prospects for agreement on liberalisation of European air services at next week's meeting of European Community transport Ministers.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I hope that further progress towards liberalisation will be made next week when we will be giving our full support to the Belgian presidency's efforts to achieve this. The major sticking point remains the unwillingness of others to widen the availability of cheap fares. This must be satisfactorily resolved before an agreement can be reached.

Merchant Fleet

19. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received concerning the size of the merchant fleet.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department is in regular contact with shipowners, the seafarers' unions and other representatives of the shipping industry who share my concern about trends in the world shipping market and its effect on our fleet.

Regional Airports

20. Sir Anthony Meyer asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many international destinations are served from regional airports now; and what was the figure for 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Some 60 international destinations are served from regional airports in the United Kingdom, compared with about 40 in 1979. I greatly welcome this major increase in travel opportunities for the public.

Liverpool Street Station

21. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the future development of Liverpool street station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have had several representations from MPs in the last few weeks about the redevelopment of Liverpool street station. The redevelopment is a management matter for British Rail. They assure me that with the new track layout and signalling systems they will be able to cope with the forecast traffic.

Fishing Vessel Mhari L

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what further consideration he has given to the circumstances surrounding the loss of the fishing vessel Mhari L in the light of the recent incident involving a United States submarine and the fishing vessel Summer Morn.

Mr. Michael Spicer: At the time the Mhari L disappeared there was considerable public speculation that a submarine was involved and the subsequent investigation into the loss considered this as one possibility. I am assured that no Royal Navy or United States Navy submarine was in the area at the time. Furthermore, divers found the wreck lying close to an underwater cable with its fishing gear caught on it.

Bradford (Transport Supplementary Grant)

23. Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the transport supplementary grant allocation for the city of Bradford metropolitan council for 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Bradford will receive £4,579,000 of transport supplementary grant for 1987-88. This is an increase of 38 per cent. over 1986-87. This substantial total reflects delivery of our commitment to maintain support for the construction of the city ring road with which the city council is making good progress.

Severn Crossing

24. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to announce a decision on proposals for a second Severn crossing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government decision to provide a second Severn crossing, to be a bridge across the English Stones, was announced in July 1986. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales told the House in the Welsh affairs debate on 2 March 1987, planning of the project is going ahead with the intention of being in a position to provide the second crossing by the mid 1990s.

London Docklands Light Railway

25. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received concerning the London docklands light railway.

Mr. David Mitchell: I visited the Beckton area, which would be served by the proposed eastern extension of the railway, on 14 January to meet representatives of the local residents association and of the London Docklands development corporation. We have also received written representations from time to time about possible extensions to the railway, the most recent being from the London borough of Barking.

A45 (Crash Barriers)

26. Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken recently to re-examine the need for crash barriers on the A45 between Bury St. Edmunds and Ipswich; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The A45 is being reviewed following the initiative I announced in December for providing central safety fencing on the majority of dual carriageway trunk roads. As a first step, fences are to be added to a contract for structural maintenance between Stowmarket and Beacon Hill which is to be let shortly. A programme will be drawn up for additional fencing where justified, and as resources allow. The work will need to be spread over a period of years.

Lorry Traffic (London)

27. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are the current arrangements for administering the traffic order banning vehicles over 40 ft in length from entering central London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Responsibility for this traffic order rests with those London boroughs which contain areas affected by the ban.

Newark A46, Relief Road

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when the work on the Newark A46 relief road will commence;

(2) when the contracts for the construction of the Newark A46 relief road will go out to tender.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Subject to the completion of statutory procedures, it is planned to invite tenders for A46 Newark relief road this May. I hope work will be able to start towards the end of the year. The construction period will be two and a half years.

Roads

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each county in England the estimated highways capital and highways maintenance expenditure for 1986-87.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is in the following tables:

Railways

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report railway lines which have been reduced to single track during each of the last seven years.

Mr. David Mitchell: I do not have this information. Decisions on singling of track are an operational matter for the British Railways Board.

National Bus Company Subsidiaries

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many National Bus Company subsidiaries have been sold and to whom; what price was paid; and if he will make it his policy to pay compensation to the passenger transport authorities for the assets they previously held.

Mr. David Mitchell: Twenty-eight National Bus Company subsidiaries have so far been sold, 18 of them to their own managements and 10 to outside purchasers.

The prices obtained in individual disposal are confidential while sales are in progress; a report will be made to the House in due course on the aggregate proceeds of sale.

I am not aware that any subsidiaries or former subsidiaries own assets previously held by passenger transport authorities or their executives for which due payment has not already been made.

Herald of Free Enterprise

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether the carriage of toluene diisocyanite on the Herald of Free Enterprise at the time of her loss was in contravention of the Merchant Shipping Regulations 1981.

Mr. Moore: From the information available, I have no reason to doubt that the carriage of toluene diisocyanite on the Herald of Free Enterprise at the time of her loss was not in contravention of the Merchant Shipping (Dangerous Goods) Regulations 1981.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he is satisfied with the type of lifejacket used aboard ferries such as the Herald of Free Enterprise which was involved in the Zeebrugge disaster; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many lifejackets were carried aboard the Herald of Free Enterprise ferry; and what was the number of passengers and crew capable of being carried on the ferry;

(3) if, in the light of the Herald of Free Enterprise ferry disaster, he will examine the design of lifejackets available abroad the ferry; what information he has as to whether the existing design was satisfactory for those persons struggling in the flooded hull; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what instructions are issued to passengers on the location and use of lifejackets on board ferries such as the Herald of Free Enterprise which was involved in the Zeebrugge disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The type of lifejacket carried on the Herald of Free Enterprise was of an advanced design originally approved by my Department in 1978. It was recetnly retested and shown to comply fully with the requirements of the 1983 amendments to the international convention for the safety of life at sea, 1974 which entered into force on 1 July 1986. There is no evidence to suggest that the particular design of lifejacket is unsuitable for use on any United Kingdom ship, including ferries such as the Herald of Free Enterprise.

The Herald of Free Enterprise was provided with 1,505 lifejackets, of which 139 were specially designed for use by children. I have no reason to doubt that the ship carried these numbers at the time of the casualty. The ship was certified to carry a total number of 1,400 persons.

Insufficient evidence has been collected to date about the use of lifejackets on this incident to suggest that the design of these lifejackets should be examined. Persons wearing lifejackets in the water within the flooded hull would have been kept afloat. All current designs of lifejacket would have had to be removed to permit the wearer to pass through the small openings in the side of the ship when making an escape.

Under the Merchant Shipping (Musters and Training) Regulations, 1986, the attention of passengers on ferries must be drawn to the emergency instructions required to be posted in passenger cabins and displayed in muster stations and in other passenger spaces. Such instructions, illustrated as appropriate, give information on the location of muster stations, essential actions to be taken in an emergency situation, and the method of donning lifejackets. On this type of ferry, lifejackets for all persons on board are stowed in special lockers in or adjacent to the muster stations with a further five per cent. stowed on deck. The usual method of drawing the attention of passengers to the emergency instructions is by an announcement on the public address system on the ship's departure from port.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will use the powers vested in him by the Safety at Sea Act 1986 to introduce by statutory instrument any necessary interim safety measures arising out of the Herald of Free Enterprise ferry disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend said in the House on 9 March, at column 24, that he would not hesitate to use the powers vested in him and he will take such action as is necessary if any statutory measures are required.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, East on 12 March, Official Report, column 283, what information he has as to the completeness and accuracy of the passenger returns made by the master of the Herald of Free Enterprise under the Merchant Shipping (Passenger Returns) Regulations 1960; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In the circumstances of the loss of this vessel, it is not possible for me to answer the question.

Engineering Schemes

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox), 26 January, Official Report, column 3, he will indicate what savings he expects in casualties and finance from the sum being set aside in his Department's 1987-88 programme for works on low cost/high return safety engineering schemes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is not possible to estimate precisely the accident savings resulting from road schemes. National road schemes overall achieve an economic return of £1·50 for each £1 spent. Within this, accident savings are estimated to account for about £0·20 for each £1 spent.

We expect the low cost/high return safety and improvement schemes within the Department's small schemes programme to achieve a return in excess of the national average and for this return to be predominantly benefits from accident savings.

In 1986-87 we are spending over £35 million on the small scheme programme and we plan to increase the provision to £51 million in 1987-88.

Freightliners Ltd.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will seek to amend section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 to allow assistance to be given to Freightliners Ltd. to purchase new wagons for its fleet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Assistance under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 is already available to Freightliners Ltd., provided that it can meet the environmental and financial criteria which apply to all grant applications.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the additional road ton mileage consequent upon the proposed closure by British Rail of eight Freightliner depots.

Mr. David Mitchell: On the basis of BR's forecasts, the extra road traffic will amount to less than half a per cent. of ton mileage carried by lorries in the United Kingdom, and will be mostly carried on motorways. There will be a reduction in lorry traffic in urban areas around depots.

Accidents (Investigation Programmes)

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Transport, following the advice distributed to local authorities on pre-scheme safety checking in his Department's new manual "Accident Investigation and Prevention", what arrangements he is making with agent authorities for such checks on roads for which his Department has responsibility, particularly with those authorities who have no systematic accident investigation programmes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's new accident investigation manual was published in December 1986. Copies have been sent to all local highway authorities. We pay full regard to the provisions of the manual in drawing up detailed plans with our agent authorities on safety and improvement schemes to be carried out in the Department's small schemes programme.

Cross-Channel Ferries

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Transport if it is his intention to examine the need for emergency escape windows in cross-Channel ferries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Under the Merchant Shipping (Passenger Ship Construction) Regulations 1980 every main compartment designated for the use of passengers and crew must be provided with two means of entry and exit. To date, such arrangements have proved adequate. If, however, the investigations into the loss of the Herald of Free Enterprise show that additional means of exit or emergency escape windows are necessary on cross-Channel ferries, I will ensure that the appropriate measures are taken.

Paddington (Coach Terminal)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the proposal to site a new London coach terminal in Paddington; when he proposes to announce a date for an inquiry into such a development; and if he will advise the number of representations made to date.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 17 November last. I am still considering the most appropriate form of inquiry, and hope to make a further statement shortly. Since June 1985, when LRT was asked to carry out its study into future coach terminal requirements, we have received about 40 letters on the subject.

Motorway Crash Barriers

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to modify the strength of motorway crash barriers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no immediate plans to modify them. As with many aspects of roads and road safety, the Department has a programme of research and development on safety fences and barriers that may lead to changes in the future.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authorities (Search Procedures)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to recommend to local authorities that they computerise their local search procedures.

Mr. John Patten: I am pleased to note that a number of computer firms are developing systems specially designed for local authority land charges and other records. I hope that local authorities will give serious consideration to the installation of such systems which will help them to give an improved service to home buyers.

New Towns

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the effects of Government policy since 1979 on the residents of new towns.

Mr. John Patten: Residents of new towns, like residents elsewhere, have benefited from the Government's economic, social and environmental policies implemented since 1979.

In the field of housing, tenants of new town development corporations have the same "tenants' charter" rights as we introduced for local authority tenants. Since 1979, more than 20,000 corporation tenants have bought their homes under our voluntary sale and right to buy policies. More than 8,000 people who might not otherwise have been able to afford home ownership have become owner-occupiers through new town shared ownership programmes. Some 25,000 homes, catering to a wide range of needs, have been built under licence by private developers for freehold sale.

Fruitful collaboration between new town development corporations and private industry and commerce has created job opportunities and contributed to the quality of life of the town's residents.

The purposes for which the development corporations were established have been substantially achieved in nine towns since 1979, and the corporations have been wound up in accordance with section 41 of the New Towns Act 1981. The remaining six corporations are also well on the way to completing their tasks, and we have proposed target dates for their wind-up.

Water Authorities (Price Increases)

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing information available on the price increases to customers by each water authority for 1987-88.

Mr. John Patten: Water authorities make a return to the Department in March each year setting out details of their charges for the following financial year. I will write to the hon. Member when returns for 1987-88 have been received and analysed.

Inner City Areas

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the effects of Government policy since 1979 on the residents of inner city areas.

Mr. John Patten: Since 1979 the Government have developed a range of programmes and initiatives to make inner cities more competitive and improve the quality of life of their residents. Some £3,350 million has been directed to inner city areas since 1979 through specific targeted programmes which are the responsibility of my Department, in addition to support through main programmes and other initiatives.

Since 1979 resources for the urban programme, the single most important instrument of Government support for the inner cities, have increased by 73 per cent. in real terms, from £93 million to £324 million. The urban programme supports about 12,000 inner city projects which encourage individual enterprise and business development, improve the environment and housing and support self-help by local communities.

Inner city residents have benefited from Government action to:

Encourage business and enterprise; specific initiatives developed since 1979 include urban development grant which is attracting nearly £450 million in private investment to support 232 projects which will provide more than 4,600 homes and nearly 24,000 jobs, urban development corporations in London and Merseyside docklands where public investment of over £400 million since 1981 is attracting private capital of over £1,600 million, providing several thousand new homes and sites for over 200 new firms.

Tackle dereliction; since 1979 over 24,000 acres of land have been reclaimed through derelict land grant, the resources for which have doubled in real terms. Some 25 per cent. of DLG resources are directed to inner city areas. 50,000 acres have been removed from the land registers of underused public land, which were introduced in 1981.

promote development; powers were taken in the Housing and Planning Act 1986 to pay urban regeneration grant to support development packages on larger urban sites.

lift controls; there are 23 enterprise zones in the United Kingdom in which developers and industrialists can benefit from capital allowances and abatement of rates. Simplified planning zones are being introduced in which developers would benefit from streamlined planning procedures.

improve housing; action has been taken to break up monolithic housing estates and restore tenure choice. Over one million public sector dwellings have been sold since 1979, and owner occupation has risen from 55 per cent. to 63 per cent. Since 1979 grants totalling £2,500 million have been given for home improvements, half of which are currently directed to inner city areas. Some 80 per cent. of support through the Housing Corporation for new projects is directed to designated inner city stress areas. Since 1985 special help has been available to local authorities through the Department of the Environment's estate action initiative to improve municipal estates and involve tenants more closely in their management and maintenance.

improve co-ordination of programmes; the Government set up city action teams in 1985 in the inner city partnership areas of London (Hackney, Islington and Lambeth), Newcastle-Gateshead, Manchester-Salford, Liverpool and Birmingham to oversee £700 million annual direct spending by the Department of the Environment, Department of Employment and the Manpower Services Commission and the Department of Trade and Industry. Inter-departmental task forces were set up in 1986 in eight small inner city areas to work with local communities in tackling unemployment and other urban problems.

Rates

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the latest annual percentage increase or decrease in the rates of shire counties in England that has been notified to his Department.

Mr. Chope: Following is the available information:

Housing (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the estate action programme will be allocated to Portsmouth.

Mr. John Patten: In a recent letter from the Department's south-east regional office, Portsmouth city council was reminded of the possibility of obtaining estate action resources in 1987-88, but so far no application has been received from the authority.

York PSA Office

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what decisions he has now reached on the reorganisation of the York PSA office.

Mr. Chope: The proposal to close York area office is still being considered. Although no final decision has been taken, I hope that it will be possible to announce one shortly.

Ozone Layer

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what practical measures he is taking to ensure that the United Kingdom complies with its obligation as a signatory to the Vienna convention for the protection of the ozone layer to control activities likely to have harmful effects on the layer.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Vienna convention has not yet entered into force. However, the United Kingdom and other European Community member states agreed precautionary measures in 1980 to limit emissions of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) which have the potential to deplete the ozone layer. We are currently participating in negotiations of a protocol to the convention to control CFC emissions globally.

Housing (Tower Hamlets)

Mr. Shore asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses and flats were completed in the borough of Tower Hamlets in each year since 1974; and how many of these, in each year, were houses and flats for sale.

Mr. Tracey: Completions of dwellings in Tower Hamlets reported by the borough and by the Greater London council appear in the following issues of "Local Housing Statistics", which are available in the Library:

Year	Issue number	Table numbers
1974	33	5,7
1975	37	5,7
1976	41	5,7
1977	45	5,7
1978	49	5,7
1979	53	5,7
1980-83	73	1,3
1984	77	1,3
1985	78	1,3

The borough has not made any reports for 1985 and 1986.

No completions have been reported of dwellings built by the public sector for sale in Tower Hamlets. Information received on private sector building does not distinguish dwellings for rent from those for sale.

Estate Action Grants

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each authority which has applied for estate action grants; how much has been approved for each authority, which authorities have refused assistance; and how the refusal was communicated in each case to his Department.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Greater London Council

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his final estimate of Greater London council expenditure in 1985-86.

Mr. Chope: The most recent returns to the Department indicate that the estimated total expenditure of the GLC in 1985-86, subject to closure and audit of the final accounts, was £619 million.

Planning Applications

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all outstanding applications for consents from each authority abolished on 31 March 1986.

Mr. Chope: I shall answer this question shortly.

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications for developments in excess of 100,000 have been called in for consideration by him within the past 12 months.

Mr. Tracey: I take it that my hon. Friend is referring to applications for major retail developments. Thirty-three such applications for developments in excess of 100,000 sq ft were called in by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in the last 12 months.

Homelessness

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 4 March, Official Report, column 867, if he will indicate the nature of the totally frivolous national issues he referred to in relation to expenditure identified in the Audit Commission report on London councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Paragraph 36 of the Audit Commission occasional paper refers to the £20 million spent by the eight authorities concerned on women's rights, gay rights, local economic development and support for ethnic minorities.

Local Government Reform (Staff)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff, transferred from abolished authorities, have received detrimental payments from the London residuary body; and how many are still awaiting payment.

Mr. Chope: I understand that the LRB has received some 1,130 eligible claims for compensation for financial detriment from former GLC employees. Of these 616 individuals are receiving interim payments, 126 have been notified that their entitlement for the current annual compensation period is nil, and the amounts payable to the remaining number have not yet been determined.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, pursuant to his reply of 16 February, Official Report, column 420, all staff of authorities abolished by the Local Government Act 1985 with entitlement have received full redundancy payments.

Mr. Chope: I understand that some 200 out of over 6,000 claims for redundancy payments or compensation from former employees of the GLC and MCCs have yet to be settled in full. This includes disputed claims and those awaiting final adjustment.

Housing (Repossessions)

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has to a regional breakdown of repossessions in the last 12 months due to the inability of the borrower to pay the mortgage repayments on an owner-occupied dwelling, giving a breakdown by years of how long the mortgage had been in existence.

Mr. Tracey: The information is not available in the form requested.

Anti-fouling Paints

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those companies known to his Department to be currently producing products in which tributyl tin compounds are involved at some stage in the production process or the finished article;

(2) if he will provide figures relating to the scale of use of tributyl tin compounds in those products affected by his recent proposals for a ban on sales with the total current use of those compounds for all products in Britain;

(3) what information he has on the current uses of tributyl tin compounds in Britain and on those uses which he expects will be affected by his recent proposals on their sale for paint products;

(4) what information he has on scale of use of tributyl tin compounds in Britain, in total and by product type, for the latest year for which figures are available;

(5) if he will now make it his policy to ban the wholesale availability and use of tributyl tin compounds in Britain.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that less than 1,000 tonnes of tributyltin (TBT) compounds are used annually in the United Kingdom. Most of this is formulated into anti-fouling paint, 10 to 20 per cent. is used in timber treatment and less than 5 per cent. is used for other purposes. TBT products used as pesticides must be approved under the provisions of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 and anti-fouling products will have to be so approved from 1 July 1987. Copies of the list of approved products are available in the Library. All registered products give the active ingredient on their labels together with the manufacturer's name. The information available does not justify a ban on all uses of TBT. The bans which I announced on 24 February, at c. 202-3, are specific and are justified by the evidence of damage to the aquatic environment from the use of TBT in anti-fouling paints used on small boats and its use in treating fish farming equipment.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if there is any recent evidence available to his Department on the damage to the ozone layer by the use of chlorofluorocarbons in aerosols and other equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department is making a significant contribution through its research programme to study what is known as the Antarctic ozone hole and is keeping in close touch with the results of other relevant international work.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to restrict the use of chlorofluorocarbons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Any restrictions of the use of chlorofluorocarbons would be a matter for the European Community as a whole. There are no current EC legislative proposals but the Community is taking part in global negotiations for a CFC protocol to the Vienna convention for the protection of the ozone layer.

London and Metropolitan Government Staff Commission

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the future of the London and Metropolitan Government Staff Commission.

Mr. Chope: The commission has submitted a report on its work to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State covering the period from August 1984 to October 1986. This report is being published today and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Almost a year after the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils, the major part of the commission's work has been achieved. Although there is still a role for the commission in relation to the staff of the residuary bodies, its membership has been much reduced to reflect its contracting work load.

Nature Conservation

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to revise his advice to local planning authorities on the subject of nature conservation and planning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 11 March 1987, c. 180]: I expect to issue a revised circular soon following the analysis of the response to consultation with interested bodies.

Rushgrove House

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department disposed of Rushgrove house, Woolwich, and to whom.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his reply, 13 March 1987, c. 341]: The sale of Rushgrove house, Woolwich, was completed on 27 January 1986. The property was purchased by Mr. H. S. and Mr. T. S. Deusi.

Capital Receipts (Leicester)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what capital receipts the Leicester city council has been able to make use of in 1986-87 compared with 1979-80; and what percentage of its receipts from the sale of council houses it has been permitted to use for other housing purposes.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his reply, 13 March 1987, c. 341]: In 1979-80 Leicester city council reported that it had generated £1,283,000 capital receipts. Under the control system operating at that time, which focused on borrowing, all these receipts could be used to repay debt or to finance capital expenditure. The authority may have held unspent capital receipts from earlier years but the Department has no records about that.

Figures are only available for the first nine months of 1986-87. The authority has reported generating £9,630,000 receipts in that period. In addition the authority held accumulated capital receipts of £47,770,000 at the start of the year. The prescribed proportion rules allow Leicester city council to increase its prescribed capital expenditure in 1986-87 by £14,051,000 of the above receipts together with the prescribed proportion of the receipts it generates in the remainder of the year. The authority is free to use all the cash from its receipts to repay debt and to finance capital expenditure which is not prescribed.

The prescribed proportion for most housing receipts is 20 per cent., for housing land 30 per cent. and for receipts arising from low cost home ownership schemes 100 per cent. Receipts may be used for whatever services the authority chooses.

Sports Council

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Yorkshire and Humberside about the Sports Council's grant in aid for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: I shall answer this question shortly.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why the letters of the hon. Member for Caernarfon of 26 September 1986 concerning the availability of natural medicines on the National Health Service was not answered until 27 January 1987; what is the average period for his Department's response to correspondence from hon. Members; whether he has sufficient staff in his Department to undertake his responsibilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: I am sorry for the delay in replying to the hon. Member which was caused by control problems within my office. Ministers in my Department replied to nearly 30,000 letters from hon. Members in 1986 and we aim to respond to most within four weeks. I am satisfied that there is sufficient staff to deal with these letters. Many of the letters we receive do, however, require local inquiries to be made, such as with health authorities and local social security offices, and hon. Members would almost certainly get a quicker response if they wrote to the health authority chairman or local social security office manager first where appropriate.

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why he has not yet replied to the urgent letter from the hon. Member for Ealing, North of 9 March; when he expects to do so; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 12 March.

National Insurance

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will provide an estimate of the loss to the national insurance fund from a reduction of one percentage point in the rate of contribution.

Mr. Major: It is estimated that a reduction of one percentage point in all the class 1 rates of National Insurance contributions in 1986-87 would cost the national insurance fund in a full year £1,470 million in respect of employees' contributions, and £1,630 million in respect of employers contributions.

Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to complete his quinquennial review of the contracted-out rebate on national insurance contributions.

Mr. Fowler: The contracted-out rebate reflects the cost to pension schemes of providing a guaranteed minimum pension for their members. That cost is decreasing with the lower average age of scheme members; and it is therefore generally acknowledged that the rebate should in future be lower than its present 6·25 per cent. I have decided to fix the rebate at 5·8 per cent. for the five-year period from 6 April 1988 including an additional margin of 0·4 per cent. for this period over and above the 5·4 per cent. suggested by the Government Actuary. This will cover the implementation of our pension reforms under the 1986 Act. The rebate will be divided 3·8 per cent. on employers' contributions and 2 per cent. on employees'. The rates at which pension schemes can buy their members back into the state scheme will be based on the 5·4 per cent. suggested by the Government Actuary. I am today laying his report before Parliament, together with the draft order and regulations to give effect to these decisions.

Mr. A. D. Banfield

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is in a position to announce the outcome of the claim for compensation for a mustard gas injury incurred by Mr. A. D. Banfield of Chorlton, Manchester.

Mr. Lyell: Mr. Banfield's claim to compensation was referred to this Department at the end of January 1987 and a claim to war pension is being urgently considered.

Free Milk and Vitamins

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women and children in Sheffield are in receipt of free milk and vitamins in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lyell: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery) on 2 March at column 495.

Hospitals (Value)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the value of (1) the Hellesdon hospital, (2) the site of the Hellesdon hospital if that hospital were demolished, (3) St. Andrew's hospital at Thorpe, (4) St. Andrew's hospital site if the hospital were demolished, (5) the University of East Anglia site considered for a new 800-bed hospital and (6) the site adjacent to and west of Colney lane which is available for development.

Mrs. Currie: The East Anglian regional health authority estimates the existing use value of Hellesdon hospital on a depreciated replacement cost basis to be between £5 million and £6 million. No comparable estimate has been made for St. Andrew's. The authority estimates that the open market values of the two sites are about £25,000 per acre and £15,000 per acre, respectively, although the actual value would depend on the planning permissions that could be obtained and market forces. It would not be appropriate for estimates of the value of the other sites to be disclosed, as this could disadvantage the authority as a possible purchaser.

Maternity Payments

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Hammersmith claimed the maternity grant in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the precise form requested. But in the 1986 calendar year the following numbers of claims to maternity grant were made at the Department's local offices which cover Hammersmith although the boundaries are not conterminous:

	Number
Acton	1,451
Chelsea	1
Notting Hill	742
Kensington	1

[1] Claims for these offices are dealt with at Aldershot out-station. A total of 3,085 maternity grant claims were received at that office but this number includes claims proper to other local offices.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Brentford and Isleworth constituency claimed the maternity grant in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the precise form requested. But in the 1986 calendar year, 1,451 claims for maternity grant were made at Acton and 3,096 at Hounslow, the Department's local offices which cover the Brentford and Isleworth constituency, although the boundaries are not conterminous.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Crawley claimed the maternity grant in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the precise form requested. But in the 12 months ending 31 December 1986, 2,081 claims for maternity grant were received at the Department's local office which covers Crawley, although the boundaries are not conterminous.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in Croydon, Central constituency claimed the maternity grant in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the precise form requested.

The Croydon, Central constituency is covered by the Department's local office at Croydon, although their boundaries are not conterminous. Maternity grant claims proper to the Croydon local office are processed exclusively at Hastings out-station. The number of claims for maternity grant received there during the 1986 calendar year was 3,619.

Miss Bernadette Kenny

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received the report from the Greenwich health authority about the case of Miss Bernadette Kenny; and whether he has any plans to increase the current level of provisions for adolescent psychiatry in the Greenwich health district.

Mrs. Currie: We have not received a report and there is no reason for us to do so, although I have seen a copy of the letter which was sent by the district general manager of the Greenwich health authority to the hon. Member for Woolwich last November. This letter reported the outcome of the health authority's investigation into the care of Miss Bernadette Kenny.

The level of provision for adolescent psychiatric services in Greenwich is a matter for the district health authority to determine. I understand that, although the Greenwich health authority does not consider it viable to run its own inpatient adolescent psychiatric unit, it is actively trying to improve its links with other health authorities which provide this service.

NHS (Health Provision)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report those constituencies in England which have no National Health Service (a) hospitals and (b) community nursing premises within their boundaries.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not held centrally about the location of National Health Service facilities according to parliamentary constituency boundaries and the cost of compiling such information would be disproportionate.

AIDS

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give financial support to buddies schemes in the context of assistance given in caring for the victims of AIDS; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have not been asked to give support specifically for a buddy scheme, but the Department does give a grant to the Terrence Higgins Trust, which organises such a scheme as one of its activities.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what it is intended to do with the supplies of blood plasma held at the Elstree Laboratories which date from before the National Blood Transfusion Service started to take action to reduce the chances of AIDS being spread in blood supplies.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Short) on 9 March at column 72.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps have been taken in (a) the Trent region and (b) Barnsley district general hospital to treat patients suffering from AIDS; what facilities have been established; how many have died of AIDS to date in (a) the Trent region and (b) Barnsley; how many are suffering with the disease; what is his estimate of AIDS carriers in these areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: At the end of February, the number of reported AIDS cases for the Trent region was 12, of whom seven had died. The other information requested is not available centrally. The right hon. Member may wish to make inquiries directly of the Trent regional health authority, bearing in mind that, in the interests of patient confidentiality, it may not be possible to provide all the information requested.

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether tests are carried out to ensure that AIDS is not passed on to any child conceived as a result of in vitro fertilisation.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 2 March 1987, c. 501]: The in vitro fertilisation technique may sometimes involve using donated semen. The Department of Health and Social Security/Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists guidelines issued to doctors and artificial insemination clinics last year will then apply. These recommend that all semen donors should be tested for the HIV antibody. Where the couple's own egg and semen are used in in vitro fertilisation, there is no particular reason to recommend testing unless other factors require it.

Board and Lodging Claimants

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer on Monday 9 March, if he will give the number of children belonging to the 6,000 claimants who received supplementary board and lodging payments, and who were said to have dependent children.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 495, he will publish information submitted to him by local authorities of the costs they will need to incur in connection with the new housing benefit scheme.

Mr. Lyell: This information is not yet available. Local authorities' estimates of their costs in preparing for the reforms are still being received and collated.

Single Payments

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase assistance in the form of single payments to assist mentally handicapped people to set up home in their communities.

Mr. Major: The Government have already announced their intention to replace the existing single payments regulations in April 1988. Grants to promote community care will be made from the new discretionary social fund, in particular, to help people to re-establish themselves in the community following a stay in institutional or residential care. We plan to target help on vulnerable groups including mentally handicapped people and hope to be able to respond to their needs in a more flexible way then the present system allows.

Local Offices (Claims)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the backlog of claims at the local offices of his Department in Greenock and Port Glasgow in January 1986, July 1986 and January 1987.

Mr. Lyell: The tables sets out the information requested about outstanding claims to social security benefits.

Regional Cash Limits

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the regional cash limits for both revenue and capital at the levels finally set after all adjustments made for each financial year from 1979-80 to 1986-87.

Mr. Newton: The information requested for 1979-80 to 1985-86 is shown in the table. Information for 1986-87 is not yet available.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the regional cash limits for both revenue and capital as originally announced for each financial year from 1979-80 to 1987-88.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Benefits (Claimants)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many supplementary benefit claims were referred to the office of the Chief Adjudication Officer for investigation of a claimant's entry status in the 12 months to the end of October 1986; and if he will provide a breakdown of the nationalities of those claimants;

(2) how many of the total number of supplementary benefit claimants referred to the office of the Chief Adjudication Officer for investigation of entry status were referred from local offices of his Department in the London north and London south regions, respectively; and if he will provide a breakdown of the nationalities of those claimants.

Mr. Lyell: Information is not available in precisely the form requested. Between 21 October 1985 and 21 October 1986, 1,470 supplementary benefit claims by people from outside the European Community were referred to the office of the Chief Adjudication Officer; a breakdown of these by nationality is not available. During the same period 1,587 claims by European Community nationals were notified, the breakdown of these by nationality being:

	Number
Belgium	36
Denmark	62
France	403
Italy	804
West Germany	197
Luxembourg	1
Netherlands	46
Portugal	12
Spain	15
Greece	11

Separate figures for different regions are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications for mobility allowance on behalf of children who are physically or mentally handicapped have been refused in each year since 1983; what proportion such applications represented of the total numbers of applications approved in each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. The available information about decisions given on initial claims during the years in question is as follows:

	Number of claims on behalf of children under age 15 which were disallowed (1)	Column (1) as a percentage of all claims decided all ages (2)
1983	714	0·7
1984	770	0·7
1985	1,447	1·1
1986	1,443	1·0

Meningitis

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what factors he takes into account when deciding whether to provide funding for meningitis research; what plans he has to increase the number of different studies of meningitis for which he provides funds; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what initiatives he has taken to raise the level of public awareness of the symptoms of meningitis;

(3) what steps he takes to ensure that all cases of meningitis are reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Handicapped People (Day Care)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has plans to increase the current level of provision of day care facilities for those suffering from lack of hearing and other handicaps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The provision of day care facilities is the responsibility of local authorities which are best placed to consider the local needs and priorities for such services.

Social Fund

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will consult and invite comments from those voluntary organisations which provide residential and other services for supplementary benefit recipients when he publishes his consultation document on the social fund; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will consult the voluntary organisations representing single parents, the homeless, the elderly, the disabled and the poor and invite their comments when he publishes his consultation document on the social fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: It is our intention to send the draft guidelines on which social fund officers will operate the social fund for comment or information to a limited number of organisations, which would cover all the interest groups identified, shortly.

Prescription Charges

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to ensure that patients prescribed combined preparations of conjugated oestrogens and norgestrel as a hormone replacement therapy are charged on the basis of a single prescription.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

Benefits

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the total income allowed for a 15-year-old child after 6 April 1987 to a family dependent on supplementary benefit.

Mr. Major: Nomally £15·60.

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the total supplementary benefit paid to a 16-year-old child after 6 April 1987.

Mr. Major: The requirements of a supplementary benefit claimant depend on his or her individual circumstances; the amount of benefit payable is the amount by which those requirements exceed the claimant's income, subject to certain disregards. The majority of 16-year-old claimants will get benefit as follows:

Circumstances and normal weekly requirements

(a) A member of someone else's household. £18·75.

(b) As (a) but with a dependent child. £24·35 plus £10·40 for the child.

(c) A householder. £30·40 plus appropriate housing costs.

(d) A boarder. For limited periods which are subject to certain exceptions, an amount for the board and lodging charge plus any meals not included in the charge (subject to certain limits) and £10 for personal expenses. Claimants remaining in the same board and lodging accommodation after the limited period has run out would be paid as in (a).

In certain circumstances, additional benefit can be paid to meet extra needs such as a special diet.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average weekly payment of supplementary benefit paid to claimants aged under 25 years in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde region and (c) Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1987, c. 396]: The average weekly payment of supplementary benefit paid to claimants aged under 25 years in Scotland in December 1984—the latest available information—was £26·81.

Source: Supplementary Benefit Annual Statistical Inquiry 1984.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on changes to regulations in the position of young people leaving school at Easter who claim supplementary benefit;

(2) when he will publish new regulations governing the position of young people leaving school this Easter who wish to claim supplementary benefit.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 12 March 1987, c. 297]: We have today laid before the House the report of the Social Security Advisory Committee, and our response, together with regulations giving effect to our proposals. The main purpose of the regulations is to treat local authority custodianship allowances equally favourably with adoption allowances for supplementary benefit purposes; to restore the Government's policy that supplementary benefit should not be paid to school leavers entered for examinations; to ensure that supplementary benefit is not paid to children who have left school before they may legally do so; and to add to the group of young people who may receive supplementary benefit while they remain at school. The regulations also make a number of other changes which the SSAC either made no comment on or agreed need not be referred to them. We welcome the SSAC's endorsement of all the proposals we put to them. The changes we are making are designed to be consistent with the Government's policies for young people. We have always believed that they should be encouraged to finish their studies and take their examinations and should remain dependent on their parents while they do so. Benefit arrangements should not be such as to induce them to leave school early and become unemployed. Where they are disadvantaged, we see it as the Government's duty to help them complete their schooling. And we want to facilitate as much as possible the absorption into normal family life of children who do not have parents caring for them.

Surrogacy

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now seek to amend the Surrogacy Arrangements Act 1985 so as to ban all commercial surrogacy arrangements, following the ruling in a case at Salford Crown court that surrogate twins should remain with their natural mother; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The consultation document "Legislation on Human Infertility Services and Embryo Research" invites views by the end of June on a number of surrogacy issues. These will be taken into account in the legislation we intend to introduce in the next Parliament.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will call for reports from the chairmen of each regional health authority as to the number of surrogate births which has taken place in National Health Service hospitals; if he will list each such birth according to when and where it is recorded as having taken place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: No. Unless the expectant mother drew the attention of the hospital to the precise circumstances of her pregnancy, a health authority would not be able to identify surrogate mothers.

Mass Screening (Stonehouse)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the results of the mass screening programme undertaken at Stonehouse, Gloucestershire.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 18 February 1987, c. 723]: Preliminary results announced in December indicated that the proportion of carriers of meningitis found in the population of Stonehouse was 11 per cent.

—similar to findings in the population at large. One per cent. were found to carry the B.15 strain of meningococcal meningitis, and were treated with antibiotics.

I am pleased to say that the researchers have now almost completed their analysis of the samples taken and hope to send the Department results within the next two months.

Medical Statistics (Barnsley)

Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many medical and other services have been privatised at Barnsley district general hospital since 1979; and what effect this has had on the wages of existing ancillary workers at the hospital.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 12 March 1987, c. 298]: The tenders for domestic, catering and laundry services which have been subject to the competitive tendering process in Barnsley health authority have been let in-house and generated an estimated annual saving of £326,000 for development in health care in the district. Full details are not available centrally. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairman of the Barnsley health authority for the information he seeks and also for details of any contractual arrangements affecting individual patients.

Whooping Cough Vaccine

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what progress is being made with the development of a new whooping cough vaccine;

(2) when the decision was taken to postpone the trials of new whooping cough vaccines; on which vaccines there were to have been trials; for what reasons the trials were postponed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 13 March 1987, c. 327]: A sub-committee of the Medical Research Council's committee on development of vaccines and immunological products is supervising the development of a new whooping cough vaccine and is co-ordinating arrangements for clinical trials of that and similar vaccines.

Requirements under section 31 of the Medicines Act 1968 on the safe conduct of clinical trials must be satisfied before such trials can be carried out in the United Kingdom. Information about particular applications cannot be given for reasons of commercial confidentiality.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much milk has been produced by each European Economic Community country; what proportion of each European Community country's liquid milk has been converted into milk products; and what proportion of each European Community country's milk products has gone into intervention, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Gummer: Details of the quantities of milk produced in each member state of the European Community are contained in the "Agricultural Situation of the Community", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Information on the proportion of each member state's liquid milk production used for the production of milk products is not readily available. But table I shows the percentage of total milk utilisation (including imported milk) used for milk products (including fresh milk products and cream) by member state for the years 1979-85. Table II shows the percentage of each member state's production of butter and skimmed milk powder sold into intervention in each of the years 1979-86.

Dairy Inspections

Mr. Best asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will set out in detail the different categories of costs which he has included in his assessment when fixing the charge for dairy inspection;

(2) what is the number of visits to each dairy farm in a year by inspectors he has assumed for the purposes of fixing the charge per visit.

Mr. Gummer: As my right hon. Friend explained in the debate which took place on 2 March, we have assessed the cost of the whole system. This includes the 45·7 man years which dairy husbandry advisory officers in the regions and in Wales spend on statutory work (including the management of statutory work), their travel and subsistence costs, the 1·5 man years which senior ADAS staff devote to this work, and the 28·4 man years which the Ministry's administrative staff in the regions and at headquarters devote to it. In addition, local and central overheads (accommodation costs and so on) have been calculated. The total (£1·8 million) was divided by the expected number of routine visits (approximately 20,000) resulting in a figure of £90. The figure of 20,000 includes routine visits to wholesale producers, on average once every two years, and visits to untreated licence holders which take place twice every 18 months.

Food from Britain

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he had made of the likely contribution from the farming industry to Food from Britain.

Mr. Gummer: Food from Britain has drawn up a marketing budget of £4·3 million for 1987-88. The Government will contribute £2·1 million and the food and agriculture industries the remainder. I anticipate that contributions from the various agricultural sectors will total about £1·7 million.

Intervention Food Stores

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of quantities and types of food held within European Economic Community intervention food stores in Northern Ireland; and if he will list their locations.

Mr. Gummer: At 31 December 1986 intervention stocks in Northern Ireland were as follows:

Mr. Clay asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to his reply of Monday 2 March, Official Report, column 526, if he will give details of the precise location of European Economic Community intervention food stores in (a) Sunderland, (b) Gateshead, (c) Newcastle-upon-Tyne, (d) North Tyneside and (e) South Tyneside.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 6 March 1987, c. 732]: It is not the policy of this Ministry to publish commercially confidential information.

Cattle (Republic of Ireland)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why payments of monetary compensatory amounts due to Northern Ireland farmers for purchases of cattle in the Republic of Ireland during the months of August, September, October and November 1986 still remain unpaid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Under Community regulations the monetary compensatory amounts to which the hon. Member refers are paid by the Irish authorities on receipt of proof that the cattle have arrived at their intended destination in Northern Ireland. Provision of this proof in documentary form is provided by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. As the claims in question await payment by the Irish authorities I am not able to provide the information the hon. Member requires.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make available, from the additional funds to be provided for environmentally sensitive areas in 1988, moneys to establish second-tier payments in the West Penwith and Pennine dales environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The possibility of a two-tier system for West Penwith and the Pennine dales was carefully considered with local farming and environmental interests. In both cases it was decided that a single tier would be more effective. The provision of additional funds does not affect this conclusion.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the operation and effectiveness of the statutory orders designating environmentally sensitive areas after one year; and if, after consulting the Countryside Commission, the Nature Conservancy Council and other appropriate interests, he will consider laying amended orders.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We shall keep the operation and effectiveness of these orders under regular review and I hope that it will be possible to publish a first report during 1988. We cannot prejudge the likely findings or consequences of that report.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he will take to ensure that farmers in environmentally sensitive areas, who have entered into management agreements, comply with the requirements of the statutory orders designating such areas; and how many staff he will make available in each environmentally sensitive area to supervise the agreements.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The monitoring arrangements now being established in all ESAs will include checks on compliance with the terms of management agreements through a combination of ground inspections and aerial photography. It is not possible to separate the staff time devoted to this aspect of ESAs from other related duties. Nevertheless, I can assure the hon. Member that we will be making available sufficient manpower to ensure the effective operation of the scheme.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy that, in the event of a breach of a management agreement in an environmentally sensitive area, which results in damage to wildlife habitats, he will require the land to be restored to its former condition.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will indicate, in relation to the steering groups to be established in each environmentally sensitive area (a) what role these groups will play, (b) which statutory and voluntary bodies will be represented on the groups, (c) how often the groups will meet, (d) what access the groups will have to information on the management agreements drawn up in the environmentally sensitive areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The role of the Ministry management groups will be to co-ordinate discussion of the operation and effects of environmentally sensitive areas. It will be the responsibility of the Ministry officials in each area to operate their group in the way that is most responsive to local needs rather than follow a centrally imposed agenda or terms of reference.

Co-responsibility Levies

Sir Richard Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total amount of co-responsibility levies so far paid by milk producers in each of the countries in the EEC.

Mr. Gummer: The total amount of co-responsibility levy collected in each member state since 1977 (when the levy was introduced) up to 31 December 1985 is as follows:

	Million ECU
Belgium	116·177
Denmark	181·271
France	782·339
Germany	855·472
Greece	n/a
Ireland	177·688

Food Aid

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the EEC food surplus items now being given away in the United Kingdom and the amounts.

Mr. Gummer: The surplus foodstuffs now being given away in the United Kingdom are:

Butter
Beef (in the form of prepared meals)
Whole milk
Semi-skimmed milk
Cheese
Concentrated butter

The most recent figures of releases from intervention stores represent 44,526,800 million packs of butter and 7,426,000 million portions of beef. Charitable organisations are purchasing milk, cheese and concentrated butter from commercial sources, and claims for 53,216 pints of whole milk, 20,704 pints of semi-skimmed milk, 839 tonnes of cheese and 12,000 kg of concentrated butter have so far been received by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce.

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the distribution of free EEC butter to the needy in Waltham Forest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Freezer Trawlers

Mr. Wallace asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce the allocation of the three further freezer trawler licences.

Mr. Gummer: When the Fisheries Ministers have had the opportunity for careful consideration of the applications received.

Mr. Wallace asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what criteria he will apply in considering applications for the three further freezer trawler licences.

Mr. Gummer: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans) on 17 February.

Mr. Wallace asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total number of applications for freezer trawler licences by 1 March.

Mr. Gummer: Thirty two applications have been received from 27 applicants.

Cereals

Mr. Wilson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the price and availability of cereals for the United Kingdom livestock sector.

Mr. Gummer: Extensive information on the price of home-grown feed grains is published weekly by the Home Grown Cereals Authority. Supplies are sufficient to meet normal demand over the rest of the season, including usual commercial carry-over stocks.

Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the likely effect upon (a) the price of cereals and (b) the costs of other sectors of the industry of the recent export under licence of over one million tonnes of cereals; what representations he has received about this export and the effects of this trade in general on other sectors; and what response he has made.

Mr. Gummer: Ex-farm prices of bread and milling wheats are lower than a year ago; those for feed wheat and barley are at about last year's level and remain below the intervention price. I have received some representations about the level of cereals exports but it is no part of our policy to sit on grain surplus to the season's requirements in an attempt to prevent the normal seasonal rise in prices on our market. I congratulate the industry on its record achievement which will enable us to end the season with lower intervention stocks.

Alternative Land Use

Mr. Lawrence asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make available to right hon. and hon. Members at no cost copies of "Farming UK, Rural Enterprise and Development, Action for Rural Enterprise and Farm Woodland Scheme" so that right hon. and hon. Members may be able to distribute them to farmers in their constituencies.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Anti-fouling Compounds

Mr. Rus Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he expects his Department's Advisory Committee on Pesticides to report on the problem of trubutyl tin compounds; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what are the latest available estimates of the scale of use of tributyl tin compounds in agriculture.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Sheep

Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure a greater degree of access to the French non-pedigree and pure breed markets for United Kingdom sheep producers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 6 March 1987, c. 733]: In April 1986 the Government introduced a new form of animal health certification to cover the export of breeding sheep from the United Kingdom to France. This certification, which enables United Kingdom producers to gain access to this market, was agreed with the French authorities after lengthy and detailed discussions.

Salmon Advisory Committee

Mr. Townend asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to receive the report from the Salmon Advisory Committee on the influence of predators, including seals, on salmon stocks.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 89]: As I explained in my reply to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 21 November 1986, we asked the Salmon Advisory Committee, in its early stages, to examine, first, the availability of information on the status of salmon stocks in Great Britain and, secondly, influences on the level of those stocks, including predators. The committee met for the first time on 26 February, when it held a preliminary examination of the first of these issues. It will meet again on 7 April to continue this examination. The committee will report on the various stages of its work as they are completed. As the committee's work has only just started and the issues are complex it would not be reasonable to forecast completion dates at this stage.

Milk and Dairies Regulations

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many visits per day he expects to be carried out on average by his Department's inspectors as statutory inspections carried out under the Milk and Dairies and Milk (Special Designation) (Charges) Regulations (S.I., 1987, No. 212); and how long he estimates an inspector's visit made under the milk and dairies regulations last on average.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 10 March 1987, c. 146]: Dairy husbandry advisory officers achieve between three and four visits per day but this is an average. In practice, DHAOs aim to devote complete days to farm visiting (during which they normally cover five farms) after which between one third and one half of a day is required for writing up the results and preparing for the next block of visits. Five visits per day is equivalent to approximately one and half hours per visit, which includes travelling time.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will give details of (a) the proposed salary structure and anticipated average salary and (b) the total number of inspectors employed to carry out visits under the Milk and Dairies and Milk (Special Designation) (Charges) Regulations (S.I. 1987, No. 212) whole-time equivalent;

(2) how many further inspectors are to be employed by his Department to carry out visits under the Milk and Dairies and Milk (Special Designation) (Charges) Regulations (S.I., 1987, No. 212).

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 10 March 1987, c. 146]: The salary scales for the various grades of dairy husbandry advisory officers are as follows:

Grade I	15,410-20,741
Grade II	12,595-15,893
Grade III	8,463-13,412
Grade IV	6,711-9,225

The complement for these grades is currently 104 and they are expected to devote 45·7 man hours (mostly at Grade III level) to statutory work in 1987-88.

I have no plans to increase these numbers.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the number of farms which fall into the smaller farms category as defined by the Milk and Dairy and Milk (Special Designation) (Charges) Regulations (S.I., 1987, No. 212).

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 10 March 1987, c. 146]: According to 1986 census data, approximately 6,500 holdings and between one and 19 dairy cows and will therefore qualify for the lower rate of charge.

Dairy Cows

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, West of 17 February, Official Report, column 604, he will list those countries in Europe which pay compensatory allowances on dairy cows in designated less favoured areas, giving details of restrictions as to numbers and areas and variations in the levels of payments.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 12 March 1987, c. 302]: The information requested of the payment of compensatory allowances on dairy cows in other member states has been provided by the European Commission and is as follows:

Butter and Meat

Mr. Williams asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what representations he has received regarding the adequacy of Government advertisements and publicity intended to inform the public about the categories of people who qualify for European Economic Community butter and meat; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will clarify the criterion relating to disadvantage in other ways which applies to the categories of people who qualify for European Economic Community butter and meat.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 13 March 1987, c. 339]: I have received some correspondence relating to the detailed information given about the categories of people eligible to receive free food. My Department has issued several press releases and information notes briefing the public and to direct them to the charitable organisations which are arranging the distribution. The charitable organisations have received guidance on the question of eligibility. In addition to certain specific categories, the term "disadvantaged in other ways" has been used in the guidance to allow a degree of flexibility. The charities have been asked to use their common sense and discretion in interpreting it.

Agricultural Support

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will publish, on the same basis as the reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North on 14 May 1984, Official Report, columns 55-56, the net cost to the Exchequer of agricultural support as a percentage of gross domestic product in each year since 1960-61 and projections for 1987-88 and 1988-89;

(2) if he will state on a similar basis to his reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North on 21 May 1984, Official Report, column 349, what was (a) the gross cost and (b) the net cost to the Exchequer of all agricultural support for each year since 1960 to 1985 including that forecast for 1986-87; and if he will also show the net cost as a percentage of gross domestic product in each case.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 13 March 1987, c. 339]: The gross and net cost to the Exchequer of all agricultural support for each year since 1960-61 is given in the following table.

The net cost includes reimbursements from the Community under the CAP. It does not take account of the United Kingdom's contributions to the Community budget.

The table also includes the net expenditure in agricultural support in the United Kingdom expressed as a percentage of gross domestic product for each year since 1960-61, together with projections for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the continuing responsibilities within JACNE.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 17 March 1987

TRANSPORT

Traffic Management

Mr. Silkin asked the Secretary of State for Transport, how many environmental traffic management schemes which include or included a street closure have been submitted to his Department since April 1986; when his Department took power over designated and trunk roads from the Greater London council; and how many such schemes have been (a) accepted and (b) rejected, showing to which of the London boroughs the acceptance or rejection refers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We do not keep central records of local authorities' environmental traffic management schemes or street closures.

Since April 1986 I have approved 199 and objected to 13 of London boroughs' proposals notified to me under the designated road provisions in schedule 5 to the Local Government Act 1985. Designated road notifications involving street closures could be separately selected only at disproportionate cost.

Transport Services (South Africa)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what contracts are in course of negotiation between London Regional Transport and United Transport International; what is his policy towards the participation in contracted-out transport services of firms operating similar services in South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Contracts involving London Regional Transport are matters for the parties concerned. The international affiliations of those seeking contracts from LRT is not a material consideration in the award of such contracts.

I understand that United Transport International operates bus companies widely in several countries in Africa, including South Africa and Zimbabwe.

Roll-on/Roll-off Ferries

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether, as an interim safety measure for all roll-on/roll-off ferries, he will take steps to ensure that not only a warning light is fitted but also an audio signal in relation to loading doors.

Mr. Moore: As an interim measure my Department is recommending to all owners of roll-on/roll-off ferries that warning lights should be fitted on the bridge to show whether or not car loading doors are properly closed. This safety measure will be reviewed in the light of what emerges from the formal investigation.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications of the Channel tunnel for the transport infrastructure in the north of England and Scotland.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail is presently examining the scope for developing long distance services through the tunnel to all parts of the country. The Government will be ready to approve any commercially justified proposals by British Rail for infrastructure investment to facilitate such services when the time comes.

Zeebrugge Ferry Disaster

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leicester, East on 12 March, Official Report, column 283, what steps he takes to satisfy himself as to the completeness and accuracy of returns of the numbers of passengers carried in ships; if he has any plans to seek to amend the Merchant Shipping (Passenger Returns) Regulations 1960 so as to require such returns to include details of passengers' names, addresses and nationalities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The returns are required primarily for Customs purposes (which are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer) although they are later sent to my Department for the preparation of shipping statistics. A requirement to compile details of the names, addresses and nationalities of all ferry passengers would impose a considerable burden on the shipping companies, and an inconvenience to the travelling public without making any direct contribution to safety. Nevertheless I will consider the possibility further in the light of the disaster at Zeebrugge.

Shared Taxi Schemes

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the impact of shared taxi schemes since deregulation of buses.

Mr. David Mitchell: Deregulation is proving a success story across the country as a whole; services have been broadly maintained while many local authorities have achieved substantial savings in subsidy levels.

Innovation in forms of public transport is also being introduced. Over 150 towns and cities now have minibus services, and taxi operators are running some 55 local regular services. The Department will be introducing a shared taxi scheme in London later this year. I have no doubt that the taxi trade and the local authorities will then make increasing use of the new opportunities provided by the Transport Act 1985 for both regular local services and shared taxi schemes as a means of improving services for the public.

Shrewsbury Bypass

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has made to have the notice of application to the High Court to quash in whole or part the orders made to authorise construction of the A5 Shrewsbury bypass heard at an early date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Acting on my behalf the Treasury Solicitor has, after seeking and obtaining the agreement of the applicants to a joint approach to the court applied for an expedited hearing. This application to expedite will be determined on 18 March. I hope that the court will be able to hear this case at an early stage so as to bring to an end the continuing uncertainty.

Motorways (Lighting)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, East of 11 March, he will provide comparable figures for accident rates at night on lit sections of the motorways referred to; and if he will provide comparable figures in relation to (a) lit and (b) unlit sections in those years prior to 1985 for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following information is readily available.

	Night time accidents per kilometre
	Lit sites	Unlit sites
M1
1983	0·98	0·62
1984	1·28	0·64
1985	1·40	0·60
M6
1983	0·68	0·49
1984	1·07	0·50
1985	0·67	0·47
M5
1983	0·35	0·22
1984	0·52	0·43
1985	0·98	0·56

Night-time accidents are defined as those occurring between half an hour after sunset and half an hour before sunrise.

Car Horns

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to seek to amend the legislation on the use of car horns between the hours of 11 pm and 7 am; if he has received any representations on this exclusion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We cannot trace recent representations on this subject. We have no plans to amend the regulations.

Careline Service

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions his Department has had with representatives of disabled groups concerning the careline service between Heathrow airport and the London rail terminals.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: An informal discussion was held on 4 February with the Disabled Persons' Transport Advisory Committee when proposals for London Regional Transport's careline service were being developed. The committee has since welcomed the new arrangements. We have also been in correspondence with a wide range of disability groups on this matter.

Transport Act 1974

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to review the current level of enforcement of section 7 of the Transport Act 1974; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are awaiting views from all those we have consulted about our recent discussion paper "Pavement Parking—Curbing an Abuse".

Roads (Condition Survey)

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish the results of the national road maintenance condition survey for 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am today publishing the report of the survey. A copy has been placed in the Library. The survey is one in an annual series sponsored jointly by the Department and local authority associations. It involves a sample survey of defects in all classes of road other than motorways.

The results of the survey indicate that, while conditions remain worse than when the survey started in 1977, recent deterioration has been concentrated on minor roads. In the case of trunk roads, for which the Department is responsible and which have been carrying a substantially increased volume of heavy goods vehicles, the previous trend of deterioration appears to have been halted. In the case of rural principal and classified roads, conditions are substantially what they were in 1977 when surveys started. There has been a significant deterioration since that year in the condition of urban principal roads. The condition of urban classified roads appears to be stable.

The Government have already committed themselves to a programme of works to catch up on the backlog of maintenance on national roads. Priority has been given to motorways (not covered by the survey) where the annual rate of renewal has doubled since 1979. In the current financial year we have also stepped up renewal of other trunk roads. It is too early for this to be fully reflected in survey results. We aim to eliminate the backlog of repairs on the trunk roads system as a whole by 1992.

In the case of local roads, we have increased provision for expenditure on maintenance by 13 per cent. for 1987-88, continuing a run of increases well above the rate of inflation. It is for local authorities to determine the priorities for spending the funds made available. We hope that they will give a proper priority to road maintenance.

With the funds available at national and local levels and the measures we are taking to secure efficient use of resources at both levels there is a good prospect in the next four to five years of eliminating the effects of past neglect and securing high standards of maintenance on the network as a whole.

London (Traffic Management)

Mr. John Hunt asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to issue his traffic management guidance for London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We hope to issue this shortly. Our aim will be to foster measures to handle London's existing traffic more efficiently, reliably and safely on the roads best suited for this purpose. This will be to the benefit of all road users, whether by public or private transport, in vehicles or on foot. It will also offer new opportunities to divert traffic from unsuitable residential roads, and to create a better and safer environment for all.

ENVIRONMENT

Docklands

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of his reply to a letter dated 23 February from the docklands consultative committee to his Department about urban development corporations and the docklands in London.

Mr. John Patten: Yes.

Derelict Land

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his answer of 27 February to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire, Official Report, column 437, regarding the number of schemes for which derelict land grants have been paid in Staffordshire for the last five years, if he will publish in the Official Report full details of the schemes which have attracted a grant in the Mid-Staffordshire parliamentary constituency.

Mr. John Patten: Statistics of derelict land grant totals for whole local authority areas are readily available. To produce similar totals for parliamentary constituencies which cover only parts of several local authorities would require disproportionate expenditure and would also divert staff from the priority task of processing current applications. I hope that the proposed computerisation of derelict land grant records will enable us to provide a better statistical service in the future.

Local Authority Rents

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list in the Official Report the total rent roll for local authority dwellings in 1985-86 in each of the London boroughs, and the total rent roll for local authority dwellings in England as a whole;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the arrears owed to each of the London boroughs in 1985-86 by (a) current tenants and (b) former tenants; and if he will list the arrears owed in local authority dwellings in England as a whole by (a) current tenants and (b) former tenants.

Mr. Tracey: The figures requested are available in the Library. I refer the hon. Member to the reply by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle), on 10 December 1986, at columns 188-89.

HIP Allocations

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide figures for the housing investment programme allocation for the London borough of Southwark for each year from 1978-79 to 1987-88 (a) at current prices and (b) at constant prices.

Mr. Tracey: Housing investment programme allocations and capital expenditure on housing for the London borough of Southwark for these years have been as follows:

£ million

	Cash terms		Real terms (1985-86 prices)
	HIP allocation	expenditure	HIP allocation	expenditure
1978-79	47·685	47·301	89·951	89·227

[1] Estimated by the authority.

The figures for total expenditure reflect the use the authority has been able to make of the various sources of capital spending power available to it including, since 1981-82 its receipts from the sale of assets.

Fish Farming

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue a circular to planning authorities on the lines of that issued in Scotland, clarifying their locus, and emphasising the special relevance of water authority views on applications in respect of fish farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I have no plans to issue a circular of this kind. There is already a requirement on local planning authorities in England and Wales to consult the relevant water authority when they receive planning applications for fish farms which involve works or operations either in the bed or on the banks of a river, and to take account of any representations received in determining the application. Water authorities control discharges from fish farms under the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Certain abstractions for fish farming purposes require licences from the water authority under the Water Resources Act 1963 and the Government have expressed their intention of bringing all such abstractions under control.

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to what action is being taken by water authorities in England to rear fish to meet the restocking requirements of their rivers and waterways.

Mr. Gummer: I have been asked to reply.

Information on the restocking of salmon by the regional water authorities in England and Wales is published annually in summary form by my Department's fisheries laboratory at Lowestoft. A copy of the latest publication "Salmon and Migratory Trout Fisheries Statistics for England and Wales, 1985" is being placed in the Library of the House. Information on restocking and on the rearing of fish for restocking purposes is also published by some water authorities in their annual reports to Ministers, which are also available in the Library of the House.

Water Pollution

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken by his Department in the light of the publication by the Thames water authority of the "Performance of Sewage Works — Annual Report 1985", with specific reference to the number of sewage works which failed to comply with their consents in 1985.

Mr. John Patten: The reports compiled by water authorities on the performance of their sewage treatment works in 1985 were voluntary and did not have to be submitted to the Department. However, all water authorities will be submitting formal reports for 1986 on the compliance of these works with consent conditions. Some have already been received and the rest are expected in the near future. We shall be examining the reasons for non-compliance and discussing with individual water authorities the action they propose to take to remedy the shortcomings identified in these reports. I envisage that Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution — through its new water pollution inspection arm — will have an important role in this.

Elderly Persons' Dwellings (Poole)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why he overturned the decision of the inspector at the public inquiry concerning the planning application to build elderly persons' dwellings on land off Petersham road, Poole Dorset.

Mr. Tracey: The Secretary of State has not overturned any decision by an inspector relating to a proposal for elderly persons' dwellings on this site.

Commission for the New Towns

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the achievements of the Commission for the New Towns since May 1979.

Mr. John Patten: The Commission for the New Towns is currently responsible for the assets and liabilities in 13 towns in England, nine of which have been inherited from former new town development corporations since 1979. The commission's main task, set out in the New Towns Act 1981 (as modified by the New Towns and Urban Development Corporation Act 1985) is one of disposal of property.

The commission has achieved total sales between 1979 and December 1986 resulting in income of some £624 million. Development projects initiated by new town corporations have been completed. The commission has been able to finance this investment entirely from the proceeds of the sale of assets and its revenue surplus.

The commission's disposals programme is an important component of the Government's policy for transferring assets from the public to the private sector and in promoting greater choice through competition. The disposals programme is currently running at approximately £140 million per annum.

Housing (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many empty council houses there are in the ownership of Portsmouth city council at the latest available date.

Mr. Tracey: Information on the council's housing stock within the city boundaries, including the number vacant, is contained in its HIP return, which is in the Library. For the total vacant, including overspill housing, the hon. Member should refer to the council's chief executive.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the proportion of the money allocated to the Housing Corporation in the coming year to be given to Portsmouth.

Mr. Tracey: Allocations to particular local authority areas are a matter for the Housing Corporation. I understand that it has now allocated about 5 per cent. of the resources for new projects in its west region to schemes providing homes for rent and for sale in Portsmouth.

Ansell's Brewery Site (Birmingham)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much derelict land grant has been paid in respect of the site of the former Ansell's brewery in Birmingham; and by how much this was affected by income from scrap.

Mr. John Patten: Birmingham city council has not yet submitted a claim for grant payment in respect of this site, although reclamation works totalling £300,000 have been approved for derelict land grant. The contract for this work stipulated that all salvaged building materials obtained from demolition or clearance (except items specifically excluded) should become the property of the contractor and it was therefore up to the contractor to make any such allowance in the tender price he submitted.

Notting Hill Trust

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has given a housing association grant to the Notting Hill Trust for the development of open land at the rear of Holsbury road east and Holsbury road west, Northolt, for houses and flats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I am aware that housing associations are interested in developing part of this site, but no grant-funded schemes have been submitted to the Department.

European Pearl Mussel

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has plans to introduce measures to protect the European pearl mussel, margaritefera margaritefera.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Nature Conservancy Council has recently recommended protection for the pearl mussel (margaritefera margaritefera) following its quinquennial review of protected animals and plants covered by schedules 5 and 8 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. The Secretary of State is currently considering that recommendation in the light of representations received from other interested parties, with a view to announcing his decision by the summer.

Homeless People

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to which local authorities (a) impose and (b) do not impose a test of previous local residence as a qualification for inclusion on the list of homeless people; what information he has as to the effect of such a test on the length of the list of homeless; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to require local authorities to impose a test of previous local residence as a qualification for inclusion on the homeless list; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: Section 67 of the Housing Act 1985 provides for the reference to another local authority of homeless people who have a local connection elsewhere in Great Britain. The detailed definitions of local connection and the operation of referral arrangements are the subject of an agreement between the local authority associations. Some 800 households a year are transferred between authorities on the basis of this agreement. No national breakdown by type of local connection is available, but we expect to obtain some information through the Department's research into homelessness. My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to impose requirements in this field.

Ozone Layer

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the current position of European Economic Community countries in the negotiations designed to formulate a protocol to protect the ozone layer under the Vienna convention.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Environment Council last November gave the Commission a mandate to participate in negotiations, along with EC member states, on the basis that existing Community measures were intrinsically sound but that some modifications might be required. At the Council on 19-20 March, at which I shall represent the United Kingdom, Environment Ministers will consider the Community's position for the next round of negotiations in April.

Richmond Terrace

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his current plans for the use of Richmond terrace and the new building on Richmond yard.

Mr. Chope: The Government have now decided that the majority of the space in Richmond terrace and in the new building on Richmond yard should be used to house the Secretary of State for Social Services and part of his departmental headquarters.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to reduce the time taken to process planning appeals referred to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government stated in their response to the fifth report from the Environment Committee, Session 1985-86, "Planning: Appeals, Call-in and Major Public Inquiries" (Cm. 43) that their principal objective with respect to the planning appeals system is to achieve a sharp reduction of the time taken in normal circumstances to reach a decision in all types of appeal, but without reducing the quality of decision. Many improvements in policy and procedure have already been made to achieve this objective. Detailed reviews over the last three years have identified necessary changes in legislation, guidance and administrative practice, some of which have already been implemented. Further changes are in train.

I shall write to my hon. Friend with details of the intended acceleration in the median times for deciding the various types of case.

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the planning appeals currently awaiting his decision in the London and south-east region where his inspectors completed their reports in (a) September 1986, (b) October 1986, (c) November 1986, (d) December 1986 and (e) January 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: The following section 36 planning appeals recovered for determination by the Secretary of State are currently with the Department's Greater London and south-east regional offices.

Inspector's report received	Local planning authority	Proposed development	Location
September 1986	Bracknell	Residential development	East of Wicks Green, Binfield
October 1986	Hillingdon	6 flats, 2 houses	Rickmansworth Road, Northwood
November 1986	Reigate and Banstead	Retail superstore	Reigate Road, Burgh Heath

Inspector's report received	Local planning authority	Proposed development	Location
December 1986	New Forest	Residential development	Testwood House Farm, Totton
	Tower Hamlets	4 buildings for office and industrial use	Wood Wharf, Business Park, Isle of Dogs
January 1987	Bracknell	Residential development	Warfield
	Tunbridge Wells	Retirement and starter homes	Furnace Lane, Horsmonden
	Westminster	Retention of blind over restaurant	23 Haymarket, SW1

Play Board

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on the future of Play Board.

Mr. Tracey: On 5 March Play Board resolved to withdraw from negotiation about the proposal that its role and functions be merged with the Sports Council, and to enter into liquidation. I am undertaking urgent discussions with the Sports Council about how best to take forward the Department's continuing support for children's play.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the amount of money available for the last round of bidding under the European regional development fund textile non-quota measures.

Mr. Tracey: The Department is responsible only for the administration of non-quota measures for infrastructure projects within England. Out of a total of £21,529,000 originally made available for these measures over a five-year period, the sum of £11,218,235 remains to be allocated.

Truscon RD27 Houses, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action he is taking in respect of Truscon RD27 houses in Storrington avenue, Liverpool, subsequent to the recent correspondence between his Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State and the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby.

Mr. Tracey: I shall answer this question shortly.

Thamesmead

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions have taken place between his Department and both the London residuary body and Thamesmead Town Ltd., regarding the terms of sale and a sale price for the land and buildings of Thamesmead; and what factors were taken into account when agreeing this price.

Mr. Chope: This Department has had full discussions with both the LRB and Thamesmead town regarding the terms of sale and sale price for the land and buildings at Thamesmead. In doing so, the Department has taken into account the need for the terms to be fair and reasonable to London ratepayers while allowing for the completion of the development of Thamesmead, the management of the housing and commercial property and the sale assets.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what will happen to the receipts from the sale of Thamesmead; how much of the total sale price will be paid initially by Thamesmead Town Ltd. to the London residuary body; and how further payments will be arranged.

Mr. Chope: Receipts from the sale of Thamesmead will go to the LRB for distribution in accordance with the Local Government Reorganisation (Capital Money) (Greater London) Order 1987. We shall make an announcement shortly on the terms of the sale.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report (a) the number of both tenants and owner-occupiers as a percentage of the population of Thamesmead and (b) the percentage of both tenants and owner-occupiers who voted in favour of a trust headed by Mr. Clive Thornton in October 1985 in the poll organised by his Department.

Mr. Chope: The population of Thamesmead comprises about two thirds tenants and one third owner-occupiers: according to 1985 figures, 5,500 dwellings are tenanted and 3,000 owner-occupied. During the consultation exercise the Department gave a commitment that voting patterns would not be disclosed.

Fish Disease

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the adequacy of his Department's inspection and other machinery in relation to the control of fish disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have been asked to reply.

Legislative controls and the work of this Department in seeking to prevent the introduction and spread of fish diseases are kept under review. Important changes in the machinery for dealing with fish diseases were made as a result of the Diseases of Fish Act 1983, including a provision for the registration of fish and shellfish farming businesses which was implemented in 1985. Earlier this year controls on the import of ungutted salmon and trout came into operation to safeguard against the introduction of the serious fish diseases VHS (viral haemorrhagic septicaemia) and IHN (infectious haematopoietic necrosis).

Sports Council

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Yorkshire and Humberside about the Sports Council's grant-in-aid for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to his reply, of 16 March 1987]: My right hon. Friend received a letter from the chairman of the Yorkshire and Humberside council for sport and recreation on 9 March expressing the council's concerns about the level of the Sports Council's grant-in-aid for 1987-88. When the Sports Council was told of the £6,372,000 increase in its grant for 1986-87—an uplift of 16 per cent. in real terms over the previous year—it was made clear to it that it could not expect a higher figure in 1987-88. Between 1979 and 1986 the council's grant has gone up by 42 per cent. in real terms. Its effective work has our continued strong support and confidence.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing Executive

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many dwellings are owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in the areas in which are located (i) Armagh and (ii) Dungannon; and how many householders in the categories of Housing Executive tenants, private tenants and owner-occupiers receive housing benefit in each of these two areas.

Mr. Needham: This is largely a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. I understand from the chairman that the total number of dwellings owned by the Housing Executive at 28 February 1987 is as follows:

	Number
Armagh district council area	4,517
Dungannon district council area	4,195

Details of the number of householders in receipt of housing benefit are as follows:

	NIHE tenants	Private tenants	Owner-occupiers	Total
Armagh district council area	2,991	302	1,913	5,206
Dungannon district council area	2,908	492	2,251	5,651

DEFENCE

Royal Ordnance Factories

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer of 24 February, Official Report, column 132, he will make a statement on the position regarding privatisation of the royal ordnance factories.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave yesterday, at column 376, to my hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins).

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has received any recent representations regarding the privatisation of the royal ordnance factories.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I have given him today.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has met trade union representatives to discuss the privatisation of the royal ordnance factories.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Further to a number of meetings over the last few years between Ministers and the trades unions, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence had a meeting yesterday with trade unions representatives to discuss the latest developments and to hear their views.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Jazz Section, Prague

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Czechoslovakia concerning the current trial in Prague of five jazz musicians, charged with the unlicensed communication of ideas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: When the sentences on five leaders of the Jazz Section were announced on 11 March I issued a statement underlining the grave concern to which they were bound to give rise, and expressing the hope that the sentences would be reconsidered on appeal in the light of Czechoslovakia's commitments under the CSCE Final Act. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House. Her Majesty's embassy has made our views clear to the Czechoslovak Foreign Ministry in Prague.

EMPLOYMENT

Community Programme

Mr. Merlyn Rees asked the Paymaster General what was the number of authorised and filled community programme places in the inner city task force areas on 31 December 1986 and 31 January 1987, respectively; what is the planned number of authorised and filled places in those areas in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 12 December 1986 and 31 January 1987 the number of filled places on the community programme in the eight inner city task force areas was 4,330 and 4,711 respectively. The December figures were collected early due to the Christmas holiday period.

Authorised places normally exceed the number of filled places in order to ensure that there are sufficient places available to replace the normal turnover in projects and to provide scope for increasing the range of projects funded in these areas of high priority. The number of authorised places on 12 December 1986 and 31 January 1987 was 5,638 and 5,608 respectively.

Current plans provide for an increase in the number of filled places in the eight inner city task force areas to 6,350 next year, in line with the priority given by the MSC to the inner cities when allocating places on the programme. No targets are set for authorised places, although the number will also rise.

Small Workshops Scheme

Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General how many workshops were built with assistance from the small workshops allowance during its two years of operation.

Mr. Trippier: The small workshops scheme was in operation from March 1980 to March 1985. Comprehensive statistics on the number of workshops qualifying for tax relief under the scheme are not available. A review of the impact of the scheme was published by the Department of Trade and Industry in 1985. This concluded that from 1980 to 1983 the scheme had a major impact on the supply of workshops up to 2,500 sq ft in size, and that the private sector supply of such workshops was perhaps of the order of three times as great as it would have been without the scheme in this period. The extension of the scheme to March 1985 for workshops not exceeding 1,250 sq ft had had a further major net impact on supply.

Labour Statistics

Sir David Price asked the Paymaster General how many building trade workers were registered as unemployed in the Winchester-Eastleigh employment area at the latest convenient date; and how many vacancies were notified in the same trades.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. As a result of the change to a claimant-based unemployment count, statistics of unemployment by industry have not been available for local areas since May 1982, when there were 359 unemployed registrants at Winchester and Eastleigh jobcentres whose last employment had been in the construction industry (as defined by the 1968 standard industrial classification). On 7 November 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of vacancies by industry is available, the number of unfilled vacancies at Winchester and Eastleigh jobcentres in the construction industry (as defined in the 1980 standard industrial classification) was 36.

Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General what were the numbers of people under 25 years of age who were unemployed in Coventry in May 1979, June 1983 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information, which is also in the library. The number of unemployed claimants aged under 25 years in the Coventry local authority area on 8 January 1987 was 9,164. The figure for July 1983 (not available for June) was 10,177. This comparison is affected by seasonal factors, and changes in the method of collection and compilation of the data. Statistics of unemployment for local authority areas are derived from the ward-based system and are available only from June 1983.

Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General if he will give the total number of employees in Coventry in May 1979, and at the latest available date, broken down by standard industrial classification division; and when he expects later figures to be available.

Mr. Lee: Employment statistics for local areas are available only for those dates when censuses of employment are taken. No census was taken in 1979 (or 1980) and the most recent figures are for September 1981; these are given in the table. More up-to-date census estimates for local areas, relating to September 1984, are expected to become available within the next month or so. Between censuses, employment statistics are based on small scale sample survey which cannot produce reliable results for areas smaller than the standard economic regions.

Mr. Nellist asked the Paymaster General what is the number of people living in Coventry, the west midlands and nationally who have never worked since leaving school (a) all ages, (b) under 18 years of age and (c) 18 to 25 years of age.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information, which is also in the Library. The table shows the numbers of unemployed claimants in the Coventry local authority district, the west midlands region and the United Kingdom of all ages who had not had a job since leaving full-time education, as at 8 January 1987, together with those aged under 18 years and those aged 18 years and over (not available for the 18 to 25 year age group).

Machines (Public Safety)

Mr. Madden asked the Paymaster General what safety regulations he has made since 1979 concerning machines located in public areas of shops, especially with regard to ensuring machines are securely fixed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: None. I am not aware of any particular reason for concern on this matter, but the hon. Member may wish to write to me.

Labour Force Survey

Mr. Fallon asked the Paymaster General when he will publish the results of the 1986 labour force survey.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department is publishing today the preliminary results of the survey, and revised employment estimates incorporating those results, so that the latest figures can be given to hon. Members in the "Financial Statement and the Budget Report". A copy of the information being published, which will be reproduced in the April edition of the Employment Gazette, is being placed in the Library.

The 1986 results show that the number of those without a job, using a definition of unemployment which follows the recommended guidelines of the International Labour Organisation, still remains below 3 million.

NATIONAL FINANCE

International Debt

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what information he has as to how much British banks will forgo in payments from Brazil during each month that the current suspension of interest payments continues;

(2) what information he has on sums which British banks received in interest payments on loans to Latin America by country in each of the past five years.

Mr. Ian Stewart: This information is not available.

North-West Region

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect of his Budget on the economy of the north-west region.

Mr. MacGregor: The Budget will be good for the economy of the north-west region, just as it will be good for the economy as a whole.

Departmental Manpower

Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 January.

Mr. MacGregor: At 1 January 1987 there were 599,421 staff in post in central Government Departments. Of these 506,688 were non-industrials and 92,733 industrials.

Civil List

Mr. Moynihan asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the total amount payable under the Civil List Acts to the royal family in the calendar years 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Lawson: The information on amounts payable to the royal family in the present and previous calendar year is as follows:

	1986 £	1987 £
The Queen's Civil List	4,136,860	4,326,100
HM Queen Elizabeth The Queen Mother	359,100	375,300
HRH The Duke of Edinburgh	200,300	209,300
HRH The Princess Anne, Mrs. Mark Phillips	124,800	130,400
HRH The Duke of York	33,300	50,000
HRH The Prince Edward	20,000	20,000
HRH The Princess Margaret, Countess of Snowdon	121,500	127,000
HRH Princess Alice, Duchess of Gloucester	49,200	51,400
HRH The Duke of Gloucester	97,800	102,200
HRH The Duke of Kent	132,000	138,000
HRH Princess Alexandra, Mrs. Angus Ogilvy	125,800	131,500
Total	5,400,600	5,661,200
Refunded by Her Majesty The Queen	355,600	371,700
	5,045,000	5,289,500

Notes

1. These figures combine the sum directly payable from the Consolidated Fund with supplementation provided by the royal trustees via the Treasury Vote "Class XIX, Vote 12 Economic and Financial Administration (HM Treasury)".

2. The underlying increase is 4·5 per cent., though the actual increase in total is 4·8 per cent. This difference is due to the additional Civil List payment to HRH the Duke of York following his marriage on 23 July 1986.

3. The sum of £20,000 has been payable from the Consolidated Fund to HRH the Prince Edward since he attained the age of 18 on 10 March 1982. An order was made by Her Majesty under section 4 of the Civil List Act 1952 allowing the full amount to be paid to HRH the Prince Edward from 1 January 1987.

4. Her Majesty paid £355,600 into the Consolidated Fund in respect of payments made in 1986 to members of the royal family whose expenses are met under section 3 of the Civil List Act 1972. A similar payment of £371,700 will be made for 1987.

Cash Limits

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide details of the cash limits set for 1987-88.

Mr. MacGregor: The cash limits on expenditure to be voted in Estimates are listed in the appendix of the "Summary and Guide to 1987-88 Supply Estimates" (Cm. 94), rounded to the nearest £1 million, and are shown precisely in the relevant booklets of Supply Estimates. The cash limits on local authority capital spending and other expenditure which is not voted are given in the table.

[1] All cash limits are net of receipts; receipts on this cash limit are expected to exceed capital expenditure in 1987-88, hence the negative limit.

VAT

Mr. Hirst asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1986, Official Report, column 742, on the consultation document "VAT Input Tax: Origin and Scope of the Right to Deduct," when he expects to publish the draft regulations which will provide the new rules for partial exemption.

Mr. Brooke: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise issued draft copies of most of the proposed new regulations in early February 1987 to those who had responded to the consultation document. Following discussions between Customs and certain interested trade parties, some changes were made and the proposed regulations are now in their final draft form.: I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library. The regulations themselves will be made and laid before the House on Tuesday 24 March, following approval by the House of the Budget resolutions.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Elections (Absent Votes)

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice his Department will issue to returning officers regarding the attestation of applications on RPF 9 for absent votes by electors resident in the same qualifying address on grounds which are common to all the applicants.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to issue such advice. Under the Representation of the People Regulations 1986 each individual applicant for an absent vote at a particular election must have his application attested by a person who is aged 18 years or over, knows the applicant but is not related to him, and has not attested any other application in respect of that election.

Begam and Mariam Chummun

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from trade unions about the threatened deportation of Begam and Mariam Chummun; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Deportation orders were made against Begam and Mariam Chummun on 16 March 1982. Representations received about the cases included one from a branch of a trade union. The deportation orders were quashed in a judgment of the Divisional Court on 25 March 1986. The Treasury Solicitor subsequently lodged notice of appeal against this judgment with the Registrar of Civil Appeals. The appeal has not yet been heard: meanwhile, no action is being taken against Begam and Mariam Chummun.

British Citizenship

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what languages, other than English, the leaflet "Your Right to British Citizenship" is being printed; whether advertisements about the leaflet and the need for eligible people to apply for British citizenship by 21 December are being inserted in the British ethnic minority media; what other action he is taking to ensure those eligible to apply know of the need to apply before the end of 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The leaflet is available in Bengali, Gujarati, Hindi, Punjabi, Urdu and Chinese. Advertisements have been placed in selected local newspapers and in ethnic minority newspapers published in this country. We will consider later in the year whether a further reminder is required. Every opportunity will continue to be taken through continuing contact with community organisations and representative bodies as well as public speeches to ensure that those who may be affected are aware of the provisions.

Immigrants (Detention)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the arrangements for the detention of persons wishing to enter the United Kingdom; and what proposals he has for housing them on redundant ships.

Mr. Waddington: Persons awaiting further interview by an immigration officer or refused entry may be detained in control areas at ports and airports, in other approved detention accommodation (including that at Harmondsworth), or in prisons, remand centres, police stations, or (in the case of persons under 17) in a place of safety. The Home Office has been considering possible ways to supplement these arrangements, including use of a modern passenger ship moored in a dock area. The vessel under consideration would provide decent living accommodation with facilities for relaxation, recreation and visits. No decision has yet been taken.

State Security

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 23 February, Official Report, columns 34-35, what steps he has taken to ensure that the information seized in relation to investigations surrounding project Zircon is used by the police only for the purposes mentioned in his answer.

Mr. Hurd: It is for the police to ensure that the procedures described in the answer which I gave to the hon. Member on 23 February are carried out.

Court of Appeal (Retrials)

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take in the light of the suggestion by the Court of Appeal in a recent judgment that it should be given wider powers to order a retrial.

Mr. Hurd: I have issued to interested organisations in the legal field a consultative paper seeking views on this issue by 17 April. A copy has been placed in the Library and further copies may be obtained from the Home Office.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the three police authority areas with the highest murder and attempted murder rates in each of the last three years;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the three police authority areas with the highest rate of rape incidents in each of the last three years.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 26 February 1987, c. 346]: In cases of homicide it is not always possible in the absence of a court decision to distinguish between offences of murder, manslaughter and infanticide. Attempted murders are too few in number to enable reliable rates for police force areas to be calculated and so are not included in this reply. The only available figures for rape also include attempted rape and aiding or abetting a rape. The following table gives number of offences of homicide and rape recorded in police force areas and average rates of offences per 100,000 population per year for the years 1983 to 1985 combined. Rates for individual years would be based on small numbers of offences which are subject to wide variation and can be misleading. Numbers of offences recorded in police force areas are published annually by type of offence in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (table S3.1 in volume 3 for the issue for 1985).

Sri Lankan Tamils

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the daily cost to public funds of looking after (a) the 58 Tamils claiming refugee status and (b) the six to whom limited rights of stay have been granted.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 23 February 1987, c. 28]: The estimated daily cost is about £3,700. The eventual cost to public funds cannot be determined until the cases are resolved as expenses incurred in the custody, accommodation or maintenance of persons removed from the United Kingdom after refusal of entry may be recovered from the owners or agents of the ship of aircraft in which they arrived.

Crime (Wales)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes were committed in Wales against the person, of criminal damage and of thefts from dwellings in (a) 1978 and (b) 1986; by what percentage the crimes increased or decreased; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 30]: Statistics of notifiable offences recorded by the police in Wales in 1978 are published in table 32 of the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales 1978", (Cmnd. 7670). Statistics for 1986 were published yesterday in "Home Office Statistical Bulletin 4/87". In 1986, police in Wales recorded 7,100 offences of violence against the person, 1,017 sexual offences, 28,874 offences of criminal damage, 18,216 burglaries in a dwelling, and 1,950 thefts in a dwelling.

Crimes of Violence

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the average figures served for life sentences imposed for offences of murder in the years 1960, 1970, 1975, and each year from 1980 to 1985.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 3 March 1987, c. 538]: The following table shows the readily available information on time spent under sentence in prison department establishments by those sentenced for murder. It also shows the numbers received in each year who were still in custody on 31 December 1986. The corresponding information for persons received in 1960 is not readily available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will appoint inspectors to examine allegations of a concert party involving dealings in the shares of Westland plc in 1985-86.

Mr. Howard: No. After due consideration, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry reached a decision last year not to appoint inspectors to investigate and report on the membership of Westland under section 442 of the Companies Act 1985. No new information has become available since that time which would necessitate a review of that decision.

Carbon Tetrachloride and Methyl Chloroform

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will give a figure for the annual industrial production in the United Kingdom of carbon tetrachloride;

(2) if he will give a figure for the annual industrial production in the United Kingdom of methyl chloroform.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I regret that this information is not available.

Chlorofluorocarbon-113

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give a figure for imports to the United Kingdom of chlorofluorocarbon-113 in (a) 1984, (b) 1985 and (c) 1986.

Mr. Alan Clark: Imports to the United Kingdom of chlorofluorocarbon-113 for the three years in question are as follows:

	£ million
1984	1·0
1985	1·5
1986	1·3

Lonrho plc

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received any representations in relation to a possible breach by Lonrho plc of section 231 of the Companies Act 1985 in relation to its Liechtenstein subsidiaries, Northchart and Coronation.

Mr. Howard: Yes, representations have been received and are under consideration. The subsidiaries Northchart and Coronation are incorporated in Zimbabwe and South Africa, respectively, not Liechtenstein.

Steel Capacity

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state the up-to-date comparative figures of percentage manpower and capacity cuts taken by other European companies/countries concerning steel capacity.

Mr. Giles Shaw: the most recent figures available from the Commission are as follows:

Switchgear

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect on the United Kingdom engineering switchgear industry of the Central Electricity Generating Board's policy towards replacement of obsolete switchgear equipment; what support his Department gives towards research and development in this field; what information he has on the level of capital investment in the switchgear industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 16 March 1987, c. 362-63]: The CEGB has, at the request of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy, made available to the companies concerned details of its future ordering plans for high voltage switchgear. My Department continues to keep in touch with the companies about the implications of these plans for the future of the industry.

Since 1981 the switchgear companies have benefited from over £2·5 million assistance towards research and development. Information available to my Department about capital investment in the switchgear industry has been provided in confidence.

WALES

Fish Farming

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to what action is being taken by water authorities in Wales to rear fish to meet the re-stocking requirements of their rivers and waterways.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Information on the restocking of salmon by the regional water authorities in England and Wales is published annually by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food fisheries laboratory at Lowestoft. A copy of the latest publication "Salmon and Migratory Trout Fisheries Statistics for England and Wales 1985" is being placed in the Library of the House.

Information on restocking and on the rearing of fish for restocking purposes in those parts of Wales which are within the Welsh water authority's area is published periodically by the Welsh water authority in its "Fisheries and Conservation Review," the latest edition of which is being placed in the Library of the House.

Highways (Expenditure)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each county the estimated highways capital and highways maintenance expenditure for 1986-87.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information provided in the following table relates to estimates of "Roads and Transport" capital and "Highways, Lighting and Road Safety" current expenditure for 1986-87. Local authorities do not provide the Department with estimates of highways capital and highways maintenance costs.

Further Education

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales what were the numerical and percentage increases in enrolments in non-advanced and advanced further education in Wales between 1979-80 and 1985-86.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is given in the following table:

Cash Limits

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to make any changes to his Department's cash limits in the current year.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Yes. The cash limit on class XVII, vote 2, is being reduced by £1,452,000 to £44,048,000. This reduction largely arises from a lower requirement for public dividend capital by the Welsh Development Agency.

Also, the cash limit on class XVII, vote 5, is being reduced by £5,660,000 to £180,602,000. This reduction largely reflects the fact that spending on the trunk road programme has fallen below provision, mainly on account of a lower rate of spend than forecast on schemes under construction.

These savings are being used to offset in part the increased expenditure arising from winter supplementary increases in class XVII, votes 3 and 6, and winter and spring supplementary increases in class XVII, votes 1 and 7.

PRIME MINISTER

State Security

Q66. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to change the responsibility for prosecution policy for offences under the Official Secrets Act.

The Prime Minister: No.

Hooliganism

Q69. Mr. Freud asked the Prime Minister if she will give the percentage of offenders charged with hooliganism in English courts in 1986 who were unemployed.

The Prime Minister: There is no offence of hooliganism in English criminal law.

Foreign Visits (Cost)

Mr. Skinner asked the Prime Minister what is the latest figure for the cost of her foreign visits since May 1979.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 23 February, columns 53-54.

Press Office

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister what new equipment has recently been installed in her press office; and for what purpose.

The Prime Minister: A computer system comprising seven terminals, two printers and a processor, together with fully supporting software has recently been installed. The system will help in the preparation of press releases and in the filing and retrieval of information. The arrangement follows a pilot project in a number of Government Departments, sponsored by the Government Information Service and the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 March.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 March.

Mr. Janner asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 March.

Mr. Leigh asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 March.

Mr. Marlow asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty The Queen.

ENERGY

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the annual cost of the energy industry, in the last year for which the figure is available, of the storage of high-level nuclear waste; what is the projected cost of the disposal of this waste; and to what extent these costs will be borne by the consumer.

Mr. Goodlad: Most of the high-level waste arising from the reprocessing of irradiated fuel is stored at Sellafield. BNFL charges its customers for this service.

BNFL's own costs for the treatment and storage of high-level waste in 1985-86 were £10 million.

The generating boards make provision in their annual accounts for future treatment, storage and eventual disposal of the intermediate and high-level wastes stored at Sellafield. At the end of 1985-86 the accumulated provision made by the CEGB stood at £338 million, and that made by SSEB, for which my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is responsible, stood at £88 million. These costs form part of the boards' total fuel cycle costs which are borne by the consumer.

A small volume of highly active wastes, resulting mainly from research and development on fast reactors, is stored by the UKAEA at Dounreay. The operational costs of storage in 1985-86 are estimated at £20,000. The costs of storage and eventual disposal fall to the Department of Energy under the terms of the appropriate programme letters with the authority.

The Government's policy on the disposal of waste arising under BNFL reprocessing contracts with overseas customers was set out in my reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 2 May 1986 at column 502.

Subsidence Compensation

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he proposes to respond to the report of subsidence compensation review committee on the repair and compensation system for coal mining subsidence damage.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government's response to the Waddilove report will be published shortly.

Power Stations

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will indicate the amount of coal required to run a coal-fired power station of 2,000 MW for 20 years, and the volume of spoil and ash which would be associated with both the coal mining and coal burning.

Mr. David Hunt: A 2,000 MW coal-fired power station could be expected to consume some 100 million tonnes of coal, some of which normally would be produced by opencast methods, over a 20-year period. The volume of ash which could be expected to arise would be of the order of 16·5 million cu m. The volume of spoil which could be expected to be produced from a modern colliery supplying such a power station would be of the order of 14 million cu m.

Severn Barrage

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the generating capacity of the proposed Severn barrage.

Mr. David Hunt: The generating capacity proposed by the Severn tidal power group in its published report for the Cardiff-Weston line is 7,200 MW estimated to produce an average annual output of 14·4 Terawatt hours.

Tidal Power

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy which sites, other than the Severn estuary, are being considered by his Department for tidal power generation.

Mr. David Hunt: The Department is giving 50 per cent. support to the Mersey Barrage company's current £800,000 study of a barrage in that estuary. Preliminary surveys of three possible small scale sites have been made by consultants and reports of these have been published and placed in the Library of the House. A further preliminary survey of all other feasible small scale sites on the west coast of the United Kingdom is in progress.

Windmill Power

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy what estimates his Department has made of the area required to build a farm of windmills capable of producing 2,000 MW.

Mr. David Hunt: An installation of 2,000 MW would probably spread over a number of separate sites. It is estimated that the total land area required might be up to between 200 and 250 square miles although there is still considerable uncertainty about this.

Chernobyl Disaster

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the national steering committee to report on its evaluation of existing emergency plans in the light of the Chernobyl disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend for Stafford (Mr. Cash) on 18 December 1986, column 612.

Energy Research

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will update the answer to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy of 14 July 1986, Official Report, column 386, relating to energy research; if he will provide a breakdown of the sub-total of non-nuclear, non-renewable research and development for each of the years mentioned; and if he will also update the figures to 1985-86.

Mr. David Hunt [pursuant to his reply, 13 March 1987, c. 317]: The table gives a breakdown of R, D&D expenditure by the Department of Energy.

[2] These figures for research development and demonstration into renewable sources of technology exclude external contributions to the programmes which are included in the response to the hon. Member for Barnsley, East (Mr. Patchett) on 10 December 1986 at column 199.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Transport

11. Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his intention with respect to the implementation of section 53 of the Education (2) Act 1986.

Mr. Dunn: Section 53 was brought into effect on 7 January of this year. It is intended to clarify the interpretation of section 55(1) of the Education Act 1944.

Scientific Research and Development

12. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the increase in spending by his Department on scientific research and development since 1979.

Mr. Walden: From 1979-80 to the current financial year 1986-87, spending on scientific research and development through the science budget and recurrent grant to universities has increased from about £700 million to over £1·2 billion in cash terms. Overall this represents an increase in real terms over the period of 6 per cent.

48. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about his Department's expenditure on scientific research.

Mr. Walden: Further to the reply of my right hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-East (Sir K. Joseph) of 6 May 1986 to my hon. Friend at column 11, we have received an additional 105 representations.

Special Education Schools

14. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many special education schools there are in (a) England and (b) Essex.

Mr. Dunn: The number of maintained and non-maintained special schools including hospital schools, in England and Essex in January 1986, was 1,493 and 42 respectively.

Student Grants

15. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received over the past 12 months about the level of student grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: In the 12 months from March 1986 to February 1987 about 1,850 representations have been received relating in one way or another to the level of student grants. In addition, over 100 organisations or persons have submitted evidence in response to the invitation of the review of student support.

34. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the implications for further education student numbers of the differences in the treatment for taxation purposes of students supported by grants and those supported by parental contributions.

Mr. Walden: None.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the total cost to the Exchequer of student maintenance grants in each year since 1970 expressed in the following ways (a) cost terms, (b) indexed, using 1979 as 100 (real terms), (c) including fees and (d) real terms (cash).

Mr. Walden [pursuant to his reply, 19 February 1987, c. 746]: The information is as follows:

[6] The change in the trend of expenditure on maintenance and fees between 1981-82 and 1982-83 reflects the reduction in tuition fees.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1962 (a) the value of student grants inside and outside London, (b) the real value when compared with the rise in retail prices, (c) the real value when compared with the rise in rents/accommodation costs, (d) the real value when compared with the rise in average earning, (e) the total value of student grants as a percentage of gross domestic product and (f) the real value when compared with the increase in book prices, all indexed using 1962 as a base.

Mr. Walden [pursuant to his reply, 25 February 1987, c. 243-244]: The total value of student maintenance[1] in England and Wales as a percentage of the United Kingdom gross domestic product[2] has been as follows (item e):

[3] Maintenance expenditure on teacher training has been estimated.

[4] The maintenance element of expenditure on lesser-value awards has been estimated.

[5] HND and Dip HE courses became designated courses in 1975-76.

[6] Up to 1976-77 minimum awards expenditure was included in fees, from 1977-78 it was included in maintenance.

School Buildings

16. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what number and proportion of unpublished reports of recent inspections of primary schools by Her Majesty's inspectors contain adverse comment about the state of school buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Member to my reply earlier today to the hon. Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Livsey).

School Governors

17. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to augment and further enhance the duties and responsibilities of school governors.

Mr. Dunn: The Education (No. 2) Act 1986 enhances and entrenches the functions of school governing bodies. As it is being implemented, the Government will be considering proposals for further measures to strengthen the effectiveness of schools.

Secondary Schools (Sixth Forms)

18. Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the future of sixth forms in secondary schools.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend receives such representations from time to time, usually in connection with proposals to reorganise post-16 education made under sections 12-13 of the Education Act 1980.

Young Persons (Education)

19. Mrs. Golding asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to provide extended education opportunities to those young people who currently leave school and then YTS and become unemployed.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's expenditure plans enable LEAs and colleges to respond to the needs of employers and students, including unemployed people, with a wide range of full-time and part-time courses. Initiatives such as YTS, replan and the new job training scheme represent a concerted effort to increase the education and training opportunities available to unemployed people.

City Technology Colleges

20. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the approximate number of teachers now expected to be employed by the first city technology college in each of the first four years of operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The numbers of teaching staff to be employed in the first four years and thereafter are for the governing body to decide. However, a college offering the kind of curriculum set out in "A New Choice of School" could be expected to employ 60-70 teaching staff once fully operational.

50. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what departmental expenditure will support the establishment of the first city technology college at Solihull; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Following the recent generous offer of sponsorhsip for the Solihull city technology college by Hanson Trust, efforts to raise additional sponsorship locally are under way. My right hon. Friend will review the necessity and scope for any support for capital expenditure from public funds once the outcome of this exercise is known. It has always been envisaged that CTC running costs would be met through a grant from the Department.

30. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on recent progress regarding the city technology colleges.

41. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the current steps being taken to promote the formation of the proposed new city technology colleges.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) and my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett).

Road Safety

21. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will establish a road safety campaign in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The provision of road safety education in schools is a matter for local education authorities and the schools themselves. The Department issued guidance on the subject in 1979 in a booklet "Safety at School: General Advice". My right hon. Friend will give careful consideration to possible further action in the light of the work of the interdepartmental group on road safety.

Unemployed Persons

22. Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to improve the availability of education for the unemployed.

35. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to remove restrictions on education and training for the adult unemployed.

Mr. Walden: I cannot usefully add to the replies given earlier today and on 2 December at column 745 by my hon. Friend the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold) to the hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding), and on 20 January by my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans) at column 498.

Adults (Literacy)

23. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what number and proportion of adult illiterates in the population will receive training in basic skills of literacy this year from provision made or supported by his Department's spending; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The Department funds the adult literacy and basic skills unit to encourage the development and improvement of adult basic skills provision in England. It is local education authorities and voluntary organisation who provide tuition locally within the framework of the education service. Between them they are likely to provide tuition for some 121,000 adults to help improve their literacy during a year.

National Curriculum

24. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in favour of a national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold My right hon. Friend has received just over 100 representations in favour of a national curriculum, from members of the public and others.

High Technology Graduates

25. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to expand the number of high technology graduates to meet current and future skills shortages.

Mr. Walden: The number of science and engineering graduates last year was some 30 per cent. higher than in 1979. Measures already in train, including the engineering and technology programme, are likely to generate a further seven per cent. increase by 1990. Further initiatives will be considered in the light of the economy's developing need for graduates in particular disciplines.

Universities (Research and Development)

26. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of Britain's university research and development effort is supported currently by industry, business and educational foundations; and what was the comparable proportion in 1978-79.

Mr. Walden: About 13·5 per cent. in 1984-85 the latest year for which all relevant figures are available. Comparable figures are not available for 1978-79.

27. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science which organisations and institutions have complained to him about the decline in research in universities; and what steps he is taking to reverse the decline.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has received representations from a number of organisations and individuals about provision for research in universities. The Government have made available additional resources both for universities' recurrent grant and through the science budget. Our policy is to encourage those resources to be used selectively, in support of excellence.

Training Standards Advisory Service

28. Mr. George Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to link the work of Her Majesty's inspectors with that of the training standards advisory service.

Mrs. Rumbold: Her Majesty's inspectors and the Manpower Services Commission already have a constructive working relationship in respect of youth training scheme provision and their respective interests in it. Discussions are taking place about how links can be continued and developed further when the training standards advisory service begins its work in earnest.

King Edward's Foundation Schools

29. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has received any proposals from Birmingham over the future of Birmingham's King Edward's foundation schools.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received no such proposals from the Birmingham local education authority.

AIDS

31. Mr. Duffy asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the video campaign in schools on the dangers of AIDS will begin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend announced on 6 March his intention to commission, from the BBC's production centre at the Open University, a resource package for schools about AIDS, which will include video material and is intended for use with pupils in the 13-16 age-range. The package will become available to schools during this summer.

Teachers (Pay and Conditions)

32. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received following his statement on teachers' pay on Monday 2 March.

42. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received regarding the pay offer to teachers announced on 2 March.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about teachers' pay and conditions following his statement of 2 March.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Since my statement on 2 March I have received around 100 letters from hon. Members and almost 500 letters from members of the public on teachers' pay and conditions.

43. Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether, pursuant to his statement on 2 March, Official Report, column 591, he has yet received any approach from teachers trade union leaders on the question of future negotiating rights in the profession; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend received a letter from the general secretaries of the three largest teacher associations last week asking that direct negotiation be restored before 1 April 1988. In his reply he stated that it remained his view that a breathing space and experience of the operation of the interim advisory committee are needed before decisions can be reached about the right permanent arrangements. The Government wish to move towards new permanent arrangements but continuing disruption in schools can only delay this process.

45. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met representatives of the National Union of Teachers to discuss teachers' pay and conditions.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend last met representatives of the NUT on 21 January to discuss teachers' pay and conditions of employment. He has since met Mr. Jarvis on more than one occasion when this subject has been discussed.

Competitive Sport

33. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that adequate facilities and opportunities to participate in competitive sport are available for pupils in schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government attach importance to competitive sport in schools and wish all pupils to have opportunity to participate. Following a seminar in November 1986, which was hosted by our Departments, my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport announced on behalf of the Department of the Environment and the Department of Education and Science that a study was being commissioned of the place of sport in the school curriculum. The results of this study will be available to a new group which is being formed as a result of that seminar and which will be based on the physical education advisory panel of the Sports Council. Details of the group's membership and terms of reference will be announced shortly. My right hon. Friend will consider further action in the light of the group's work.

Scottish Universities (Funding)

36. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to meet the chairman of the University Grants Committee to discuss the funding of Scottish universities.

Mr. Walden: The funding of Scottish universities is not specifically on the agenda for any future meeting between my right hon. Friend and the chairman of the University Grants Committee.

Violence in Schools

37. Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent steps he has taken to ascertain the effect of television violence on the level of violence is schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: In April 1983, my Department published the report of a study by a group of teachers of the impact of television on pupils and of the values it conveyed. The report expressed concern about the cumulative effect on young people of the frequent presentation of violence, while accepting that research evidence was inconclusive.

Grammar Schools

38. Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the position of grammar schools.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend receives representations about grammar schools from time to time, generally in connection with proposals for the closure of such schools made under section 12 of the Education Act 1980, and particularly about comparative performance between those local authorities that retain selection and those which have not.

Church Schools

39. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the future of church schools.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received a number of general representations about the future and worth of church schools within the maintained system. He has also received representations on behalf of individual church schools.

Bradford

40. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make additional resources available to Bradford to meet the district's education service needs.

Mr. Dunn: The main source of Government support for revenue expenditure on local authority education is rate support grant, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. The only powers available to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science to pay grants to local authorities are powers under the Education Support Grants Regulations 1984 and the Education Training Grants Regulations 1987. Authorities have been informed of the grants they can expect to receive in 1987-88 under these regulations. My right hon. Friend has no plans to pay additional grant to Bradford. He is considering the authority's representations about their allocation of capital expenditure for 1987-88.

Nursery Education

44. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any proposals to extend the provision of nursery education.

Mr. Dunn: Our plans for expenditure on education allow for provision attributable to the under-fives to continue within broadly the same totals as today. It is for the local education authorities to determine the scale and nature of such provision in their areas in the light of their relative priorities and their assessment of local needs.

GCSE

46. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken to monitor the quality of general certificate of secondary education provision in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We are monitoring the GCSE in its early years, and discussions are currently being held with the GCSE examining groups and teachers' associations as part of this exercise. In addition, Her Majesty's inspectorate is conducting its own monitoring exercise which involves:

(a) focusing on GCSE issues and classroom practice during normal school and subject specialist visits;
(b) termly discussions with LEA officers, inspectors and advisers;
(c) annual analysis of LEAs' expenditure policies; and
(d) an evaluation of GCSE in-service teacher training.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

47. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the pupil-teacher ratios for primary and secondary schools in Hampshire.

Mr. Dunn: The pupil-teacher ratios for maintained primary and secondary schools in Hampshire in January 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, were 23·5 and 16·8 respectively.

Special Needs

49. Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken towards securing improved arrangements for non-educational provision identified in statements of special needs made under the Education Act 1981; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Most of the non-educational provision identified in statements involves the provision of health services, which are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services. Advice to district health authorities and local education authorities, issued jointly by the Departments of Education and Science and Health and Social Security, makes it clear that the best means of collaboration for each area needs to be settled locally and stresses that inter-authority and inter-professional co-operation and collaboration are essential for effective assessment under the provisions of the Education Act 1981.

My right hon. Friend is aware of the problems in this field. He will be taking these into account in his review of the provisions of the Education Act 1981, which will be carried out in the light of the findings of recent research and of the inquiry by the Select Committee into special education.

Capital Expenditure Allocations (Lancashire)

51. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further representations he has received about capital expenditure allocations for Lancashire.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received representations from hon. Members and Friends and their constituents. He has also received and acceded to a request from the Lancashire county council to meet an all-party delegation.

Career Education and Guidance

52. Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provisions are being made to ensure that secondary school students are given the appropriate career education and guidance.

Mrs. Rumbold: Primary responsibility for provision of career education and guidance rests with individual local education authorities. However, following from the White Paper "Working Together", my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and Employment are planning a new initiatve designed to improve the effectiveness of provision. Details will be announced shortly.

Plant Breeding Institute and National Seed Development Organisation

53. Dr. Bray asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will reconsider the privatisation of the Plant Breeding Institute and National Seed Development Organisation, in view of the resignation of the director, Professor Peter Day, and 60 of the staff.

Mr. Walden: No. An information memorandum, offering PBI/NSDO for sale, will be issued shortly. Moreover the impression the hon. Member gives of substantial resignations from PBI is misleading. I understand that the director, currently aged 58, has 16 years previous working experience in the USA and has now decided—following a successful period at the PBI —to return to take up a prestigious new appointment. Of the 64 staff who have left the PBI in the last three years, half were voluntary premature retirements and redundancies and the others reflect natural turnover in a work force of some 250. Over the same period 54 staff have been recruited to PBI, mostly on short-term contracts. Overall, these changes reflect a relative shift in the balance of work from plant breeding and crop science towards growth in plant biotechnology.

Microcomputers

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the reasons for the difference between primary and secondary schools in the contribution made to teaching by microcomputers; and what plans he has to improve the situation in secondary schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: The 1985 survey of microcomputers in schools found that a higher proportion of primary heads than of secondary heads reported that microcomputers had made a significant contribution to teaching in their schools. This may reflect differences in the content and delivery of the curriculum as between the two phases—making the potential contribution more readily grasped in the primary context — and it may also reflect the practical circumstances which obtained at the time of the survey. The potential contribution in secondary schools is being increasingly widely recognised and the Government see no reason of principle to suppose that the potential is less in secondary schools than primary.

Continuing Education (Self-Financing)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with the vice-chancellor of the Open University about the self-financing aspects of continuing education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has not discussed this subject with the vice-chancellor. The Open University's continuing education programme is intended to be self-financing. However, the Government recognised that some pump-priming funds for the university's professional, industrial and commercial updating (PICKUP) activities were required, and between 1982-83 and 1984-85 made available loans totalling £2·5 million; they also provided a grant of £0·3 million in 1984-85. The loans were converted to grant in April 1986 in order to assist the development of the continuing education programme.

Inter-University Research Centres

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what study he has made of the proposal by Professor G. W. J. Mitchell FRS, chairman of the Science and Engineering Research Council, on 5 November 1986 for the study of inter-university research centres in increasingly expensive fields such as mass spectrometry, X-ray crystallography and amino-acid sequencing a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: While my right hon. Friend is aware of this suggestion made by Professor Mitchell in a lecture to the Royal Society last November, he has yet to receive any formal proposal. My right hon. Friend understands that the general concept is to be discussed by the appropriate bodies responsible for supporting university and polytechnic research and he looks forward to receiving their advice.

Undergraduates (Statistics)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of (a) male and (b) female undergraduates at the universities of Oxford, Cambridge, York and Kent in each of the years from 1980 to 1986.

Mr. Walden: The information is given in the following table. Figures for 1986 are not yet available.

Students (Financial Support)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science which is the first year in which he anticipates a new system of student financial support can be introduced.

Mr. Walden: The date of introduction of any new system of student support would depend on how it differed from the present sytem, and in particular on what legislation might be necessary.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Developing Countries (Debt)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list in the Official Report the extent of indebtedness of all developing countries for the latest year for which figures are available; and to what extent each sum is made up of debts owed to (a) United Kingdom commercial banks and (b) Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have been asked to reply.

The extent of indebtedness of developing countries as at 31 December 1985 is listed in section II, table 2, of "OECD External Debt Statistics (1987)." The exposure of United Kingdom commercial banks to developing countries at the same date is listed in the "Bank of England Quarterly Report (September 1986)." Copies of both publications are available in the House of Commons Library. Amounts owed by these countries to Her Majesty's Government are compiled as at the end of each financial year and excluding pre-1945 claims for compensation are owed exclusively to the Overseas Development Administration. The principal amount owed to the ODA by each country as at 31 March 1986 is as follows:

SCOTLAND

Population Statistics

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the Scottish regions in order of percentage growth in electorate since 1981; and what has been the percentage growth and actual figures in each case.

Mr. Lang: The information for the Scottish regions and islands areas for the period 1981-87 is set out in the table.

Colleges of Education

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received from the Church of Scotland about Scottish colleges of education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The education committee of the Church of Scotland wrote on 23 February to my right hon. and learned Friend about the composition of the governing bodies of the colleges of education, about which my Department consulted last year. The composition of the governing bodies from 1 April is prescribed in schedule 1 of the Colleges of Education (Scotland) Regulations, which were made on 2 March and laid before Parliament on 11 March.

Dee Corporation

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the employment implications for Scotland of the recent reorganisation announced by the Dee Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind [pursuant to his reply, 6 March 1987, c. 717]: I understand that the Dee Corporation is offering for sale, as a going concern, all 18 Shoppers Paradise stores in Scotland, and 10 of the smallest Fine Fare stores. The employment in these 28 shops is around 450.

I understand further that the Dee Corporation is planning to open, by the end of June this year, nine new stores in Scotland, employing at least 1,750 persons. Thus, the net employment in Dee Corporation stores in Scotland is expected to rise substantially.

KMS Ltd

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department at any time over the past five years has had contracts with KMS Ltd.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 10 March 1987, c. 147]: I have no record of any contract being placed with KMS Ltd in the last five years.

SDA (Scott Lithgow)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much the Scottish Development Agency paid for the land recently acquired from Scott Lithgow shipyard.

Mr. Lang: The financial details of the recent acquisition by the Scottish Development Agency of land at Scott Lithgow are commercially confidential and in accordance with normal practice are not being made public.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Pensioners

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners were in receipt of social security payments in Brighton and Leicester, respectively, in 1986; how many of those will be required to pay 20 per cent. of their rates bill under the provisions of the Social Security Act 1986; what will be the average weekly payment by such pensioners towards rates on the assumption that their rate liability will be unchanged from 1986-87; and how many such pensioners will be paying rates for the first time when the new requirement comes into force.

Mr. Lyell: The numbers of pensioners in receipt of supplementary pension in the areas covered by Brighton and Leicester local offices are as follows:

	Number
Brighton	7,119
Leicester	18,303

Information on the number of pensioners in receipt of housing benefit in the areas of Brighton and Leicester local authorities is not available. However the total numbers of rate rebate recipients for 1985-86 for each area were as follows:

	Number
Brighton	24,037
Leicester	46,046

These figures are likely to include many of the supplementary pensioners mentioned in the previous figures.

The sample data used for illustrative purposes in the technical annex to the White Paper "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9691) are not broken down by specific areas. It is, therefore, not possible to analyse the potential effect of a minimum contribution to rates by all households as requested.

AIDS

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to reply to the application for a grant from the organisation Streetwise; and what research has been undertaken by his Department into homelessness and the extent to which the AIDS virus is being spread by male prostitutes.

Mr. Newton: A preliminary discussion has taken place with Streetwise and a further meeting with officials has been arranged to discuss their grant application. The Department is not supporting any research into the extent to which the AIDS virus is being spread by male prostitutes.

The following studies into homelessness have been funded by the Department:

Completed

Homeless newcomers to London 1974-1976

Evaluation of the Great Chapel Street Medical Centre 1978-1981

Evaluation of the Plymouth Night Shelter 1982-1985

In progress

Evaluation of pilot schemes for the delivery of primary health care to the homeless.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in future publicity about AIDS, he will emphasise that condoms are available free at family planning clinics.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to allow patients infected by the human immuno deficiency virus from blood products manufactured by the National Health Service protein fractionation centre in Edinburgh to claim compensation.

Mr. John MacKay: I have been asked to reply.

There is no scheme to compensate those who allegedly suffer adverse effects as a result of medical treatment. Negligence established by the courts is the basis of liability for most medical injuries; and compensation may be awarded by the courts in cases where negligence has been proved.

Mr. E. W. Parish

Mr. Mudd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will arrange for a reply to be sent to the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne in response to a letter passed to his hon. and learned Friend the Member for Mid-Bedfordshire (Mr. Lyell) on 4 December 1986, from Mr. E. W. Parish, of 7 Treglenwith Road, Camborne, Cornwall.

Mr. Lyell: I replied to my hon. Friend today.

National Insurance

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of men and women paying national insurance contributions at the full rate and at each other rate, together with the estimated cost in each case of exempting the first £2,335 of income in calculating the employee's contribution liability.

Mr. Major: The information on the average number of class 1 contributors in 1986-87 is as follows:

Employees' not contracted out Contribution Rates	Great Britain: Millions
	Males	Females	Total
Per cent.
5·00	0·3	1·1	1·4
7·00	0·6	1·5	2·1
9·00	10·5	3·6	14·1
Optants 3·85	—	1·2	1·2
Total	11·4	7·4	18·8

The estimated reduction in yield in a full year from exempting the first £2,335 of income from employees' class 1 contributions is as follows:

Employees' Contribution Rates	£ billion (Great Britain) (1986-87)
Per cent.
5·00	0·2
7·00	0·3
9·00	2·9
Optants 3·85	0·1
Total	3·5

Notes:

In assessing the effect of exempting the first £2,335 of income from employees' contributions, it has been assumed that employees would not pay primary class 1 contributions on the first £44·75 of their weekly earnings.

In deriving these estimates, it has been assumed that the contracted-out rebate would apply to the contribution rates of contracted-out employees on earnings between £44·75 and £285 per week (the upper earnings limit).

All estimates are based on the assumptions used in the report by the Government Actuary on the drafts of the Social Security Benefits Up-rating (No. 2) Order 1986 and the Social Security (Contributions, Re-rating) (No. 2) Order 1986 (Cm 24).

Maternity Payments

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payments for maternity items were made to women in Tooting in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lyell: I regret that the information requested is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Free Milk and Vitamins

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women and children in Tooting are in receipt of free welfare milk and vitamins in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lyell: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough (Mr. Flannery) on 2 March at column 495.

Benefits

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many supplementary benefit claimants live in hostels and are treated as boarders by each of his Department's local offices of Stockton, Hartlepool, Middlesbrough, Eston and Redcar;

(2) how many supplementary benefit claimants live in private nursing or residential homes and are treated as boarders by each of his Department's local offices of Stockton, Hartlepool, Middlesbrough, Eston and Redcar;

(3) how many supplementary benefit claimants are being assessed as board and lodgers in each of his Department's local offices of Stockton, Hartlepool, Middlesbrough, Eston and Redcar.

Mr. Lyell: I regret that the information requested is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what monitoring procedures he has established in order to assess the effects of the changes to the Supplementary Benefit Single Payment Regulations introduced in August 1986; what effects are are being monitored; what findings are currently available; and if he will make a statement on the effects of the changes upon claimants.

Mr. Major: Information on the effects of the August 1986 changes on expenditure under individual single payment regulations will be obtained from the May 1987 annual statistical enquiry as it is only the ASE which provides a breakdown of expenditure by regulation number (e.g. regulation 12—bedding).

Separate data, from Management Information Statistics collect information on the total single payment decisions and amounts paid, but do not record the individual regulation number, apart from payments made under regulation 30. The information in the table is taken from the latest available MIS statistics.

Electoral Statistics

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the 20 largest parliamentary constituencies by electorate, with their electorates; and what is the average constituency electorate on the current register.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my predecessor on 3 June 1986 at column 527. Information from the 1987 register will not be available until the end of April 1987.

Emphysema

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give the names of the individuals who gave oral evidence to the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council with regard to their investigations into emphysema among mineworkers;

(2) what organisations gave oral evidence to the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council during the investigations into emphysema among mineworkers;

(3) what organisations gave written evidence to the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council during the investigations into emphysema among mineworkers;

(4) on what date the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council started taking evidence about emphysema among mineworkers;

(5) when he expects to receive the report of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council on its investigations into emphysema among mineworkers.

Mr. Major: The Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's investigation is still in progress. The council first invited evidence by a press notice issued on 17 January 1985. I understand that it hopes to submit its report later this year.

GPs (Retirement Payments)

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing what payments a general practitioner in the National Health Service receives on retirement, assuming that his length of service was 30 and 40 years, respectively and that he earned average general practitioner's earnings.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have the information that is available as soon as possible.

EC (Retirement Pensions)

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the basic retirement pension in each European Economic Community country, the respective contribution rates as a percentage of average earnings and the pension as a percentage of average incomes.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Local Offices (Claims)

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the backlog of claims at the Gosford street and Park court offices of his Department in Coventry in January 1986, July 1986 and January 1987, respectively.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each year since its introduction the value of the Christmas bonus for pensioners at (a) 1973 and (b) 1987 prices.

Mr. Major: As the Christmas bonus was introduced in December 1972, its value expressed at 1972 prices in December of each year is shown in column 1 of the table. Column 2 shows the value in December 1986 prices.

	Value of the Christmas bonus (£)

Body Appliances

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the terms on which contractors to the National Health Service will supply body appliances.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 5 March 1987, c. 677]: I understand that the hon. Member is referring to arrangements for the supply and fitting of surgical appliances and orthopaedic footwear. North West Thames regional health authority is currently negotiating a new national contract for such provision on behalf of the National Health Service. The terms and conditions were issued by recorded delivery on 13 February to the individual contractors who were invited to tender.

Sickle Cell Disease

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources he is at present allocating for research, screening and counselling for sickle cell disease and thalassaemia and in which hospitals this work is being done.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 5 March 1987, c. 678]: The Department is providing £7,300 for research at St. Bartholomew's hospital; £10,000 for the national haemoglobinopathy reference centre in Oxford; and about £110,000 through the South East Thames regional health authority, for the diagnosis of rare blood disorders at King's college hospital. The Medical Research Council, the main Government funded body for biomedical research, supports other work.

Screening and counselling services are provided by district health authorities which decide the resources to be devoted locally to these disorders in the light of local needs and competing priorities. Information about hospitals in which services are provided is not collected centrally.

Grants, currently of £15,000 each, are also made to the Sickle Cell Society and the Organisation for Sickle Cell Anaemia Research.

Retirement Age

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average age at which (a) men and (b) women retire from work in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 11 February 1987, c. 284]: Information is not available in precisely the form requested.

Information is held on the average age at which men and women claim retirement pensions on their own contributions and, from survey information, on the proportion of men and women in different age groups who consider themselves to be retired. Since it is possible to continue work whilst drawing state retirement pension and since some people retire from employment before minimum state pension age, both sources are relevant. The information is set out in the tables.

Cash Limits

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the regional cash limits for both revenue and capital as originally announced for each financial year from 1979-80 to 1987-88.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 16 March 1987]: The information requested is given in the tables.

The 1987-88 initial revenue cash limits do not include the £25 million allocated from the waiting list fund, £7 million for the treatment care and counselling of victims and carriers of AIDS or the £6 million provided for the establishment of a breast cancer screening service.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Alcoholic Drinks (Ingredients)

Mr. Coombs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce ingredient listing on alcoholic drinks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: When the matter was last considered in the Community there was little support for ingredients listing for all alcoholic drinks; the House was also opposed. None the less, there is still a Community commitment to consider the question of ingredients listing. If there is a fresh round of discussions, I will examine any proposals on their merits and in consultation with interested parties.

Fish Farms

Mr. Colvin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he has any plans to invoke section 29 of the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975 regarding the granting of licences for fish rearing; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to seek to extend his powers under the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975 to permit him to exercise control over fish farms; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will introduce legislation to provide a statutory framework for the regulation of the establishment and running of fish farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: There is a statutory framework for the regulation of the establishment and running of fish farms. The main elements are contained in the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, the Water Resources Act 1963, the Control of Pollution Act 1974 and the Diseases of Fish Acts 1937 and 1983. The Government have already announced that they intend to add to these controls by extending the requirement for water abstraction licensing by water authorities to fish farms producing fish for the table. We have no plans to extend powers of control over fish farms under the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975, nor to use the provisions of section 29 of that Act.

Fisheries Review

Mr. Colvin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action has been taken by his Department to implement the recommendations of the consultative paper on the review of inland and coastal fisheries in England and Wales, published jointly by his Department and the Welsh Office.

Mr. Gummer: Our 1981 consultation paper covered a range of issues concerning local fisheries administration, salmon conservation, fish farming and fish disease. Action has been taken on many of the points covered in the consultation paper, including:

the registration of fish farms for disease control purposes, consequent upon the passing of the Diseases of Fish Act 1983; changes to the list of notifiable fish diseases and the revision of movement controls applying to infected sites; the introduction of controls over the import of ungutted salmon and trout;

the exemption of certain types of fish farm from the provisions of Section 30 of the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975; following a study of salmon sales control (which concluded that salmon tagging would not be viable) the introduction, in the Salmon Act 1986, of a new offence of receiving or handling salmon, believing or having reason to suspect it was taken illegally, and of powers to introduce salmon dealer licensing schemes;

the introduction of new measures to tighten the management of the commercial salmon fishery off the north east coast of England and provison, also in the Salmon Act 1986, for a review in three years' time of fishing for salmon with nets in this area and certain areas of the Scottish east coast.

Milk Products

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has sanctioned the sale of milk products derived from the milk of cows which have been treated with the hormone bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Currently, field trials of bovine somatotropin are in progress authorised by animal test certificates granted under the Medicines Act 1968 by my Department. Before such certificates were granted, we were satisfied as to the safety of the consumer of milk or other produce from treated animals, among a number of other matters laid down in the Medicines Act. These questions were thoroughly scrutinised by a committee of independent experts as well as by my officials. No doubts on this score were thrown up at any stage in the course of this scrutiny. Had such doubts been revealed, the certificates for the animal tests would not have been granted in the first place. Thus there has never been any reason for milk from treated cows or products derived from it to be withheld from sale.

Food and Drink Surpluses

Mr. Canavan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current volume and value of surplus stocks of food and drink (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in the European Economic Community.

Mr. Gummer: The following table shows the quantity and value of stocks in public intervention storage at 30 November 1986, the latest date for which full information is available.

Tributyl Tin

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the latest available estimates of the scale of use of tributyl tin compounds in agriculture.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 16 March 1987]: I am advised that tributyl tin compounds are not used in agriculture.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects his Department's Advisory Committee on Pesticides to report on the problem of tributyl tin compounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 16 March 1987]: The Advisory Committee on Pesticides is an independent committee which advises on the safe use of pesticides in agriculture, public health and industry. It will examine the use of tributyl tin compounds in anti-fouling paints in April with particular emphasis on their effects on the marine environment and will go on to look at their other industrial uses at the earliest opportunity as relevant studies are completed.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy that, in the event of a breach of a management agreement in an environmentally sensitive area, which results in damage to wildlife habitats, he will require the land to be restored to its former condition.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 16 March 1987]: I refer the hon. Member to the schedules attached to the relevant statutory instruments. He will note that key prescriptions are not amenable to the approach which he suggests. For example there is no practical means of remedying a breach of a prohibition on herbicide use.

Farm Publications

Mr. Lawrence asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make available to hon. and right hon. Members at no cost copies of "Farming

UK", "Rural Enterprise and Development", "Action for Rural Enterprise" and "Farm Woodland Scheme" so that hon. and right hon. Members may be able to distribute them to farmers in their constituencies.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 16 March 1987]: The complete pack "Farming and Rural Enterprise", is available from HMSO bookshops and their agents, price £8·50.

Copies of the policy documents "Farming UK" and of "Rural Enterprise and Development" may also be purchased separately at a price of £3·95 each.

The handbook, "Action for Rural Enterprise", is available free of charge from the Development Commission, from local offices of CoSIRA and from MAFF regional and divisional offices.

The consultation document, "Farm Woodland Scheme", which has been sent to all organisations known to be interested, may be consulted at MAFF regional and divisional offices.

TRANSPORT

Ports Industry

71. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to meet the European Commissioner with responsibility for ports to discuss harmonisation of the European Community ports industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend has regular meetings with the Commissioner responsible for transport, in the course of which questions of ports policy have been discussed. The Government do not, however, see any case for harmonisation in the ports field and have no plans to raise this idea with the Commission.

Roads

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the road schemes planned by his Department to which objection hearings in the High Court are awaited.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The only road scheme planned by the Department to which a hearing in the High Court is awaited is A5 Telford-Shrewsbury.

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each metropolitan district and each London borough the estimated highways capital and highways maintenance expenditure for 1986-87.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 3 March 1987, c. 533]: I regret that my earlier answer contained a number of errors. The correct information is in the following tables.

Night Flying (Landing Procedures)

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport under what circumstances, at night, the pilot of an aircraft is entitled to ask air traffic control to cancel his instrument flight rules plan during his approach to land and, thereafter, accept responsibility for maintaining his own separation from other aircraft.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The rules under which aircraft flying within the United Kingdom airspace may fly are laid down in the Rules of the Air and Air Traffic Control Regulations 1985.

Under these rules, the commander of an aircraft in flight outside controlled airspace at night is not required to file a flight plan for the purpose of obtaining an air traffic control clearance. However, if an instrument flight rules plan is filed, it may be cancelled at any stage of the flight but the commander must still comply with the instrument flight rules.

For an aircraft in flight within controlled airspace at night, it is a requirement that an instrument flight rules flight plan be communicated to an air traffic control unit and that the aircraft must be flown in conformity with the air traffic control clearance obtained. The instrument flight rules flight plan cannot be cancelled in these circumstances.

London Transport (Safety)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the implications for safety standards of the policy decisions taken by London Regional Transport or its London Buses and London Underground subsidiaries since 1983 relating to the improvement of commercial performance.

Mr. David Mitchell: The primary responsibility for maintaining safety of both bus and underground systems rests with the operators. London Regional Transport is governed by the relevant statutory requirements and the bodies responsible for ensuring compliance. I am happy to report that the corporation's success at meeting its commercial objectives and so reducing the burden upon the taxpayer and London ratepayers has been achieved without weakening the very high standards of safety expected of its services.

Fishing Industry

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan at columns 285-86 of the Official Report on 12 March, when consultations with representatives of the fishing industry will be completed; and if he will make a statement;

(2) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan at columns 285-86 of the Official Report on 12 March, if he intends to consult representatives of the Scottish Fishermens Federation and the Scottish White Fish Producers Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We have asked the 56 representative bodies that we have consulted to let us have their written comments on the light dues proposals by 2 April, so that we may consider them prior to the meeting that we are arranging for 6 April. This will provide an opportunity for discussion of the proposals and for any further comments. That would effectively complete the consultation with the industry. The Scottish Fishermen's Federation and the Scottish White Fish Producers Associaton are among those consulted.

M23 (Traffic Congestion)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he will take to reduce traffic jams at exit 10 on the M23 in the early mornings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have asked our agent, the West Sussex county council, to prepare a peak-hour traffic signal scheme.

Airports (Landing Charges)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about proposed increases in landing charges by the British Airports Authority.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A small number of representations have been received. From 1 April 1987, airport charges at BAA's London airports will be subject to price regulation by means of formulae that should ensure that airlines using Heathrow or Gatwick will enjoy, on average, real reductions in charges over the next five years.

Aircraft Noise (Gatwick)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the disposition of noise monitoring equipment at Gatwick airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The four noise monitoring units at Gatwick continue to achieve their purpose of helping to protect communities close to the ends of the runway from high levels of noise disturbance by departing aircraft. The Department is considering whether new equipment should be installed and if so, where it should be positioned. In addition, the general noise climate around the airport is assessed each year by the Civil Aviation Authority, on behalf of the Department, using mobile noise-monitoring equipment and computer modelling techniques.

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department is taking to reduce aircraft noise at Gatwick.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We have taken a number of important measures. Gatwick has benefited from the ban on non noise-certificated subsonic jet aircraft on the United Kingdom register, which took effect on 1 January 1986. It will also benefit from the ban on non noise certificated foreign aircraft, which takes effect from 1

January 1988. The Government impose limits on the noise made by aircraft taking off, by day and by night, and restricts night movements. Movements at night by "noisier" jet aircraft (that is having a 95PNdB noise footprint exceeding 4 square miles on take-off or 2½ square miles on landing) will not be permitted from 1 April this year, except for emergencies and a few day-time flights that have been unavoidably delayed. In addition, disturbance is reduced by concentrating departing aircraft on noise preferential routes. The Government also encourage the use of quiet take-off and landing procedures at the airport.

For the future the Government remain committed to taking all the measures they sensibly can to reduce disturbance due to aircraft noise near busy airports; and we are considering a number of initiatives that should help to alleviate disturbance at Gatwick and elsewhere.

Assessment Studies (London)

Mr. Malins asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to consult boroughs on terms of reference for stage 2 of the London assessment studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are writing to the local authorities concerned today to consult them on the proposed terms of reference. We shall also be inviting comments from other interested organisations.

The report on stage 1 analysed the problems in the study areas. The aim of stage 2 is to develop possible ways of dealing with them. The studies will look at a wide range of options, with a view to identifying possible alternative strategies for each area. They will take full account of the operation of the local road system, the role of public transport, and the safety and convenience of pedestrians and cyclists.

The proposed terms of reference are as follows:

1. The aim of stage 2 of the studies is to identify possible options for reducing the problems identified in stage 1 of the studies.

2. The consultants carrying out the studies are to consider a range of options to enable the road system to cater more effectively for necessary longer distance traffic within London, including public transport improvements, better traffic management, control and enforcement of parking and junction improvements as well as possible new construction where that can be achieved without serious environmental damage.

3. It is not the aim to increase traffic in London. The objectives will be to deal more efficiently with existing traffic, where possible to stop it from using unsuitable residential roads and shopping streets, and to enable other road users, including cyclists and pedestrians, to move more safely and freely.

4. It is not the Government's policy to restrict car use through road pricing within the foreseeable future, but it will be open to the consultants to consider proposals to charge for using specific roads or locations, and to estimate the effects on traffic in the study areas of more general measures, including completing the Government's policy of gradually raising to realistic levels the scale charges for taxing the benefit of having a company car available for private use.

5. One of the objectives of providing more effectively for longer distance traffic is to enable public road transport to function more efficiently and reliably. The consultants are to discuss with the operators how far traffic problems within the study areas could be helped by possible new or improved public transport facilities, interchanges and station car parks. Further work on possible new rail and underground investments will be carried forward under the aegis of the Secretary of State's London Passenger Transport Group.

6. The studies will need to take account of objectives for the study areas set out in local plans and strategic guidance for unitary plans as it is developed. In some places plans to maintain and develop economic activity depend on improved access. The Department is already supporting boroughs through TSG to achieve necessary improvements. The studies will consider whether further action is needed to improve access to the rest of London and the national road system. The consultants are to draw attention to development policies which could have undesirable consequences in overloading the road system.

7. The consultants are to assess the merits of these options, having regard to the Government's transport policies, including those for public transport, and their policies and guidance for roads and traffic in London, the Department's continuing concern to secure value for money and the sensitivity of the environment and the social fabric of the areas concerned. They are also to take account of the Government response to the Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment report on urban road appraisal.

Rural Bus Services

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Transport what will be the rate of grant for rural bus services in 1987-88.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government introduced a rural bus grant last April to encourage provision of rural bus services during the change over to deregulation. It is to be phased out over the following three years. The grant was paid at 6p per eligible bus mile in 1986-87. It will be paid at 5p per bus mile in 1987-88 and so will continue to be an important incentive for rural bus service operators.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many recipients of supplementary benefit on Merseyside have had their payments suspended for not attending job training scheme interviews; how much in benefit has been withheld; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The new job training scheme will not begin in Merseyside until April 1987. The scheme is entirely voluntary and no benefit sanctions will apply if someone does not wish to take up training or leaves prematurely.

National Insurance Contributions

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many individuals have been excepted from payment of class 2 national insurance contributions because their earnings were below the limit for each year since 1979.

Mr. Major: The information is as follows:

Year	United Kingdom
1978-79	27,450
1979-80	27,500
1980-81	29,500
1981-82	27,100
1982-83	39,900
1983-84	52,500

(1) The figures show the number of persons excepted from payment of class 2 contributions in the last week of the relevant contribution year.

(2) Final figures are not available for later years.

Ophthalmic Regulations

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what steps are taken to monitor the operation of the National Health Service (General Ophthalmic Services) Amendment Regulations 1985 (SI 1985, No. 298); and if he will make a statement;

(2) what powers are available to him to deal with allegations of breaches of the National Health Service (General Ophthalmic Services) Amendment Regulations 1985 (SI 1985, No. 298).

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the operation of the National Health Service (General Ophthalmic Services) Amendment Regulations 1985 (SI 1985, No. 298); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: These regulations have been revoked and provisions relating to the general ophthalmic services are now contained in the National Health Service (General Ophthalmic Services) Regulations 1986 (SI 1986 No. 975). I understand that these new regulations are operating satisfactorily.

The Department monitors the operation of these services through the information which it receives from family practitioner committees.

Complaints which suggest a breach of the regulations are subject to investigation by the ophthalmic service committee of the family practitioner committee concerned in accordance with the National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations 1974 (SI 1974 No. 455). These regulations provide a range of penalties which may be imposed on those practitioners found in breach of their terms of service.

Hearing Therapists

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many hearing therapists have been trained; how many are currently employed; what has been the annual wastage rate; and what attempts are being made to reduce it;

(2) how many hearing therapists are currently employed by the National Health Service.

Mr. Major: Although records are not kept centrally, I understand that since 1978, 75 hearing therapists have been trained at the City Literary Institute. There are at present about 60 hearing therapists in post and 12 students on the current course. We continue to keep in close touch with the training authority and the British Society of Hearing Therapists about the development of hearing therapy in the National Health Service.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what financial provision is currently being made for the training of hearing therapists;

(2) whether any estimate has been made of the number of hearing therapists needed in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Following seven years pump-priming by the Department, provision for the training of hearing therapists, and estimation of the numbers needed, is now the responsibility of individual district health authorities.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice his Department has given on the desirability of districts employing hearing therapists.

Mr. Major: The Department has consistently encouraged the establishment of hearing therapy posts in the National Health Service. In 1978 the Department issued a circular to all regional health authorities encouraging them to establish two or three hearing therapist posts in their regions. Until the cessation of central funding in 1985 the Department wrote each year to RHAs asking them to nominate candidates for the training course. In 1985, the Department, in conjunction with the National Health Service training authority, held a seminar to enable participants from the NHS to appreciate the value of hearing therapists and to demonstrate what they can achieve as an integral part of services for people whose hearing is impaired.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many district health authorities employ at least one hearing therapist.

Mr. Major: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Audiological Consultants

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many audiological consultants are employed by the National Health Service and in which regions and districts; and what has been the increase in numbers since 1979 and since 1983.

Mr. Newton: Information on the employment of National Health Service consultants is not available centrally for all districts. Numbers of consultants contracts held by regional health authorities, district health authorities designated for teaching purposes, and special health authorities for the London post-graduate teaching hospitals are set out in the table. Some consultants hold contracts of more than one authority.

Deafness

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children have been born profoundly deaf in each of the last five years; and how many specialised centres there are for their treatment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: No precise estimates are available but it is generally accepted that around one child in every 1,000 is born profoundly deaf. Responsibility for their treatment rests with individual health authorities and detailed information about the specific facilities provided is not collected centrally.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to ease the conditions for compensation for industrial noise deafness; and to what extent an extension is affected by the current level of provision for audiological testing.

Mr. Major: Noise-induced hearing loss was prescribed as an industrial disease on 28 October 1974 on the basis of recommendations in a report by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council (Cmnd. 5461 October 1973). In that and subsequent reports the recommendations have been influenced, among other things, by the availability of audiological resources.

A further report is expected this year. Whatever the recommendations, these will be considered carefully, and in the light of other demands on the social security system.

Audiological Centres

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many specialised audiological centres providing the full range of hearing tests there are in the United Kingdom; and what is the waiting time for a first appointment at each.

Mr. Major: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time, in each of the regions, for a first appointment with (a) a general surgeon and (b) an ear, nose and throat surgeon.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give the right hon. Member the information he seeks. Statistical information on cases awaiting out-patient consultation is not collected centrally.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each region, the waiting lists for (a) general surgery and (b) ear, nose and throat surgery; if he will express the figures as numbers per hundred thousand of the population; and if he will give the percentage increase since 1979 and since 1983 respectively.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is given in the tables.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is in the table.

Hearing Aids

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what investigation there has been regarding the use that is made of National Health Service hearing aids after issue to (a) the general population and (b) elderly people; and what research has been done into the problems that are encountered with the use of hearing aids.

Mr. Major: We hope that the national study of hearing being carried out by the Institute of Hearing Research will throw light on this problem.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what type of follow-up help is normally provided to those supplied with National Health Service hearing aids.

Mr. Major: District health authorities make their own arrangements using the staff and facilities available to them.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many new patients are supplied with hearing aids annually; and what is the average waiting period from the time of diagnosis that a hearing aid is needed to its eventual supply.

Mr. Major: I am sorry that I cannot give the right hon. Member the information he seeks. It is not available centrally. Responsibility for the supply of National Health Service hearing aids now rests with the Mersey regional health authority. The right hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the regional chairman.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the elderly population over 65 years of age have a National Health Service hearing aid.

Mr. Major: Specific information is not available but it is known that hearing aid possession rises after retirement age.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his estimate of the proportion of elderly people over 65 years of age who have a hearing loss so great that they would benefit from the provision of a hearing aid;

(2) what is his estimate of the proportion of the adult population who have a hearing loss so great that they would benefit from the use of a hearing aid.

Mr. Major: Whether patients might benefit from the provision of a hearing aid depends on a complicated set of factors including, of course, the degree and type of hearing loss suffered. In view of this, it is not possible to give accurate estimates but I hope that people, especially elderly people, who feel that their hearing is becoming impared will seek medical advice so that the best treatment may be given.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the adult population have a National Health Service hearing aid.

Mr. Major: It has been estimated that 3·8 per cent. of the adult population have hearing aids, 80 per cent. of these supplied by the National Health Service.

Audiology Technicians

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the number of audiology technician posts in the National Health Service in each of the past five years; what is the current number of vacancies; and what changes there have been in the percentage of posts that are vacant over the last five years.

Mr. Major: Information on posts and on vacancies is not collected centrally. Numbers of physiological measurement technicians (audiology) in post for the five years to 1985 (the most recent year for which information is available) are as follows:

30 September	Number
1981	760
1982	800
1983	790
1984	790
1985	780

Source: DHSS annual census of NHS non-medical manpower.
Note: All figures rounded to nearest 10 whole-time equivalents.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many audiological technicians have been trained in each of the last five years; what is the estimated turnover; and what steps are being taken to reduce it.

Mr. Major: Information on staff completing training, or on turnover of staff, is not collected centrally. The numbers of student physiological measurement technicians (audiology) in post for the five years to 1985 (the most recent year for which information is available) are as follows:

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recommendations his Department has issued on the desirable number of audiological technicians per million population; and how many regions have achieved this recommended number.

Mr. Major: None. The number of technicians required is a matter for determination by the individual health authorities.

Abortion

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions during the last 12 months officials of his Department have visited the Leicester Nuffield clinic, Scraptoft Lane, Leicester in order to monitor the implementation of the Abortion Act and the Infant Life (Preservation) Act.

Mr. Newton: The Leicester Nuffield clinic, which has only two beds approved under the Abortion Act, has not been visited in the last 12 months.

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions during the last 12 months officials of his Department have visited the abortion clinic at Dean Park nursing home, Bournemouth, in order to monitor the implementation of the Abortion Act and the Infant Life (Preservation) Act.

Mr. Newton: The Dean Park nursing home has received one visit of inspection under the Abortion Act during the last 12 months.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions during the last 12 months officials of his Department have visited the Wellesley hospital, Southend on Sea, Essex, in order to monitor the implementation of the Abortion Act and the Infant Life (Preservation) Act.

Mr. Newton: The Wellesley hospital, which has only two beds approved under the Abortion Act, has not been visited in the last 12 months.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide details of each death notified with legal abortions in England and Wales from 1982 to 1986, listed by (a) duration of pregnancy (i) under nine weeks (ii) nine to 12 weeks, (iii) 13 to 16 weeks, (iv) 17 to 19 weeks and (v) 20 weeks or over and (b) the abortion procedures and showing whether sterilisation was notified concurrently.

Mr. Newton: The information is shown in the table.

These statistics may exclude deaths occurring after the notification of the abortion.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of legal abortions without sterilisation performed in England and Wales from 1968 to 1986 (a) by gestation period of (i) under nine weeks, (ii) nine to 12 weeks, (iii) 13 to 16 weeks and (iv) 17 to 19 weeks and (b) by main procedure (1) aspiration, (2) D and C or D and E, (3) hysterotomy, (4) laminaria tents, (5) prostaglandines, (6) saline and (7) utus paste.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the exact information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the available information on all abortions by period of gestation and procedure is shown in the following publications: "Registrar General's Statistical Review—Supplement on Abortion 1968-1973," table 13. "Abortion Statistics Series AB," table 3.1 1974-1980, table 14 1981-1985. Copies of these volumes are in the Library.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions during the last 12 months officials of his Department have visited the abortion clinic at Hampshire clinic, Basingstoke, in order to monitor the implementation of the Abortion Act and the Infant Life (Preservation) Act.

Mr. Newton: The Hampshire clinic has only two beds approved under the Abortion Act. Approval was granted in June 1986. Prior to approval the hospital received two visits of inspection in February and April 1986. It has not been visited since that time.

Mr. Cyril Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions during the last 12 months officials of his Department have visited the abortion clinic at Highfield hospital in Rochdale in order to monitor the implementation of the Abortion Act and the Infant Life (Preservation) Act.

Mr. Newton: The Highfield hospital, which has only three beds approved under the Abortion Act, has been visited once in the last 12 months.

Tricycles

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) new and (b) good condition second-hand tricycles are available in his Department; what plans his Department has for their disposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: There are no new invalid three-wheelers available in England. The last contract for the purchase of these vehicles was completed in April 1978.

On 1 March 1987 there were 1,023 invalid three-wheelers in good condition available for re-issue. The Department also has some 1,100 vehicles around the country which are kept in reserve for the use of three-wheeler drivers when those they have on permanent loan are off the road.

The future of these vehicles is a matter which we shall be considering over coming months.

Benefits (Claimants)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many supplementary benefit claimants are being assessed as board and lodgers in his Department's local offices in Greenock and Port Glasgow;

(2) how many supplementary benefit claimants live in hostels and are treated as boarders by his Department's local offices in Greenock and Port Glasgow;

(3) how many supplementary benefit claimants reside in private nursing or residential homes and are treated as boarders by his Department's local offices in Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Lyell: I regret that the information requested is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Children in Care

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average cost to local authorities, as notified to his Department, of keeping children between the ages of (a) five to 11 years and (b) 11 to 16 years in care; and what range of costs the average covers.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not collected centrally in the form requested. Some information about local authority expenditure on children in care is, however, published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy in its "Personal Social Services Statistics" publications, copies of which are available in the Library.

Streetwise (Parliamentary Question)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to answer the question of the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich, for answer on 24 February, regarding a request for funding by the organisation Streetwise.

Mr. Newton: I replied to the hon. Member on 17 March.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to whether Calderdale health authority is operating a full computerised call and recall scheme for screening all women at risk of cervical cancer covering all the family doctor practices in the district.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Cancer (West Cumbria)

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest position in implementing recommendation five of the report of the independent advisory group chaired by Sir Douglas Black which investigated the possible increased incidence of cancer in West Cumbria.

Mr. Newton: The Government have reached agreement in principle with the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine that we should establish there a small area statistics unit of which Professor Geoffrey Rose should be honorary director. The following terms of reference have been proposed for the unit.

"On behalf of the Government:

(i) to study available statistics in order to detect any unusual incidence of disease as early as possible and, where appropriate, to investigate;
(ii) to examine quickly reports (formal and informal) of unusual clusters of disease in the neighbourhood of industrial installations and advise authoritatively as soon as possible;
(iii) in collaboration with relevant bodies build up reliable background information on the distribution of disease amongst small areas so that specific clusters can be placed in proper context;
(iv) to develop the methodology for analysing and interpreting statistics relating to small areas."

The work of the unit will be guided by a steering committee drawn from those Government Departments in the United Kingdom responsible for health and environmental questions, the Health and Safety Executive and independent experts.

It is expected that the details of the contract with the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine will be finalised soon and the unit will start work in the early part of the next financial year.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost of advertising of the £5 cold climate allowance; what is the estimated cost of administration of the scheme (a) in the current year and (b) in January 1987; and what other expenditure has been incurred, apart from the cost of the payments themselves.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 29 January 1987, c. 367]: The full cost of advertising and administering the exceptionally cold weather scheme in the current year will be assessed at the end of the winter period. However, total advertising costs for January 1987 were about £670,000.

Additional manpower in the form of 300 overtime man-years was allocated to local offices to help process cold weather claims at a cost of some £4 million. Extra travel and subsistence in connection with overtime working and increased postage costs were also incurred.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, how much was spent by his Department on advertising the availability of exceptionally severe weather payments (a) in 1986 and (b) so far in the current year in (i) Scotland, (ii) Strathclyde and (iii) Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 12 February 1987, c. 341]: The availability of exceptionally severe weather payments in 1986 was advertised on a national basis only, at a cost of £267,000.

In January 1987 press and radio advertising was undertaken on a national basis at a cost of £400,000 and advertisments for insertion in local newspapers, leaflets and posters were produced and distributed centrally at an approximate cost of £68,000. Scotland also undertook its own advertising at a cost of about £54,700.

In addition, local advertising was undertaken, for which the estimated costs for January 1987, are as follows:

Scotland	9,000
Strathclyde	4,000
Greenock and Port Glasgow	500

Benefits

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the backlog of claims at the Gosford street and Park court offices of his Department in Coventry in January 1986, July 1986 and January 1987, respectively.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 17 March 1987]: The table sets out the information requested about outstanding claims to social security benefits at Gosford street.

Benefit	14 January 1986	29 July 1986	13 January 1987
Sickness/Invalidity	204	113	86
Maternity allowance	90	86	60
Severe disablement allowance	not known	12	42
Supplementary benefit	396	742	321
Retirement pension	263	250	245

Park court is an unemployment benefit office, rather than a DHSS office, and I understand there are no claims to unemployment benefit outstanding.

Finance

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year since 1979 the total income in each region under section 58, section 65 and section 66 of the National Health Service Act 1977; and if he will give these figures (a) in cash terms, (b) deflated to take account of inflation generally, (c) deflated to take account of the movement of National Health Service pay and prices and (d) as a percentage of total National Health Service expenditure.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986, c. 122]: The following figures are derived from the annual accounts of health authorities. Reliable figures for section 58 income are not available for years before 1983-84.

Notes:
1. The figures in columns b have been adjusted to 1985-86 prices using the gross domestic product deflator.
2. The figures in columns c have been adjusted to the same 1985-86 base using centrally assessed movements in NHS pay and prices. They should be interpreted with caution as the composition of expenditure in individual regions is bound to vary from the national average. The calculation takes account only of pay and price movements affecting current expenditure by health authorities and does not reflect the different elements making up capital expenditure and that of the family practitioner services.
3. The total expenditure figures used to calculate the percentages in columns d include all current and capital expenditure by authorities together with expenditure on family practitioner services. The latter expenditure cannot strictly be attributed to particular regions but has been assigned to regions on a geographical basis from the annual accounts of family practitioner committees. The totals used to calculate the percentages for special health authorities do not include any of this expenditure and these figures are therefore not strictly comparable with those for regions.
4. Percentages too low to round to 0·01 per cent. are omitted.

Chiropodists and Speech Therapists

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in respect of each English district health authority the ratio of (a) chiropodists and (b) speech therapists per head of population in 1980 and at the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 22 January 1987, c. 716]: Information is not held centrally in the form requested and would be disproportionately expensive to obtain. Figures available in respect of regional health authorities in England are given in the tables.

WALES

Inland and Coastal Fisheries

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Wales what action has been taken by his Department to implement the recommendations of the consultation paper on the review of inland and coastal fisheries in England and Wales, published jointly by his Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him yesterday by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on how much money has been spent by local authorities in Wales on (i) twinning arrangements, showing separately the costs of related visits abroad, (ii) the establishment of nuclear-free zones and (iii) on emergency shelters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is not held centrally.

Children in Care

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average cost to local authorities, as notified to his Department, of keeping children between the ages of (a) five to 11 years and 11 to 16 years in care; and what range of costs the average covers.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Information is not available in the form requested. However, data published by the CIPFA statistical information service gives average figures for the Welsh counties as follows:

Appeals (Ministerial Adjudication)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales in what circumstances he has the role of adjudicator in appeals against decisions made by local authorities and public bodies in Wales; and if he will list the powers under which he fulfils that role.

Mr. Mark Robinson: A list of the various appellate powers is in preparation and I shall reply as soon as possible.

Cancer and Leukaemia

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he is in a position to provide information concerning the levels for cancer and leukaemia along the coast of north Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: In the 1974-78 quinquennial report of the Wales cancer registry it was noted that both Clwyd and Gwynedd had elevated rates of registrations for all cancers combined when compared with other areas in Wales. This result remained when allowance was made for the differing age and sex structures of the areas concerned. Initial work on the quinquennial report covering the years 1979 to 1983 indicated that this differential persisted. However, in view of the registry's concern about the validity of the cancer registrations of both Clwyd and Gwynedd a validation exercise was initiated. This work required the comparison of computer listed entries against individual case notes, which necessitated the prior consent of the consultant involved in each case. As a consequence, the exercise has taken some time to complete. The results are set out in the following table:

Registration of cancers 1974-83

	1974-78 number	1974-78 annual rate per 100,000 population	1974-78 standardised registration rate	1979-83 number	1979-83 annual rate per 100,000 population	1979-83 standardised registration rate
All leukaemias (ICD 204-208)
North Wales coast (Clwyd)	102	13·9	132	111	14·0	131
North Wales coast (Gwynedd)	92	11·4	109	104	12·8	117
North Wales coast	194	12·6	120	215	13·4	124
Wales	1,309	9·4	100	1,401	10·0	100
All malignancies (ICD 140-208)
North Wales coast (Clwyd)	3,813	520·2	110	4,070	515·0	105
North Wales coast (Gwynedd)	3,898	483·9	104	4,283	527·6	104
North Wales coast	7,711	501·2	107	8,353	521·4	104
Wales	57,839	413·2	100	64,490	458·4	100

These confirm the elevated rates derived from the 1974 to 1978 quinquennial report of the Wales cancer registry. There is no evidence of a readily identifiable cause for this differential, which remains even when allowance is made for the extent to which the age and sex structure of the population of the area differs from that of Wales as a whole. There are no grounds at this stage for assuming any particular environmental factor is responsible.

Whereas the 1974 to 1978 quinquennial report of the Wales cancer registry indicated a higher rate of cancers for Gwynedd than for Clwyd, the present studies mostly indicate higher rates for the Clwyd portion of the north Wales coast than for the Gwynedd portion.

I have invited Professor Hubert Campbell, Emeritus Professor of Medical Statistics at the University of Wales College of Medicine, to undertake some further investigation of this data under the auspices of the steering committee for the proposed small area statistics unit announced today by my hon. Friend the Minister for Health.

Notes:

1. The North Wales Coast area is defined as comprising the areas of the following pre 1974 local authorities:

Clwyd
- Connahs Quay
- Flint MB
- Holywell UD
- Holywell RD
- Prestatyn UD
- Rhyl UD
- Abergele UD
- Colwyn Bay MB

Gwynedd
- Llandudno UD
- Conway MB
- Penmaenmawr UD
- Llanfairfechan UD
- Ogwen RD
- Bangor MB
- Gwyrfai RD
- Caernarfon MB
- Lleyn RD
- Beaumaris MB
- Menai Bridge UD
- Amlwch UD
- Holyhead UD
- Twrcelyn RD
- Valley RD
- Aethwy RD

2. The incidence of cancer varies greatly with age. The standardised registration rate (SRR) is an index which enables ready comparison of incidence rates in populations in different age and sex structures. The set of age-sex — specific incidence rates for Wales as a whole is denoted as the standard. These "standard" rates are then applied to the age-sex distribution of a particular area to calculate the number of registrations that would have been "expected" in this population had the area experienced, at each age, the cancer incidence of the standard population. The "expected" incidence so found is then compared with the "observed" incidence and the ratio is multiplied by 100 to give an index in which 100 is the norm.

$$\text{SRR} = \frac{\text{Observed incidence} \times 100}{\text{Expected incidence}}$$

3. The apparent overall increase in the rates recorded in the later quinquennium compared with the earlier may well be attributable to more efficient reporting of cases and does not necessarily indicate any true increase in the incidence of leukaemias and other malignancies.

ENVIRONMENT

Miss Linda Bascombe (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Mudd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for a reply to be sent to the hon. Member for Falmouth and Camborne in response to a letter passed to his hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey) on 22 December 1986, concerning Miss Linda Bascombe, of 12 Trevithick road, Falmouth, Cornwall.

Mr. John Patten: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 22 December, and have now sent a further letter.

Waste Disposal

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for the quantities of trichlorotrifluoromethane that were disposed of at land-based waste sites in (a) 1985 and (b) 1986.

Mr. Waldegrave: Trichlorotrifluoromethane (CFC 113) is used as a speciality solvent. Neither United Kingdom production figures nor import statistics are available for trichlorotrifluoromethane, and I cannot therefore quantify the usage of this material with any precision. However, extrapolation from European Community data suggests that no more than about 200 tonnes of this material is contained in the residues from solvent recovery which arise annually in the United Kingdom for disposal by incineration or landfil.

Planning Legislation

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications within the town and country planning legislation are currently being determined by him; and if he will indicate those cases where consideration has taken longer than (a) three months, (b) six months and (c) one year.

Mr. Waldegrave: I understand that my hon. Friend is referring to called-in planning applications. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State currently has 124 such applications under consideration, 62 of which were called in between three and six months ago; 47 between six months and one year ago; and 15 over one year ago.

European Year of the Environment

Sir Hugh Rossi asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what his Department is contributing to the European Year of the Environment.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom EYE Committee, of which the hon. Member is a member, has overall responsibility for the United Kingdom Programme for EYE.

My Department intends to provide more than £750,000 in direct support of the committee and the team which we have established to run EYE on a day-to-day basis. This sum includes £300,000 which, subject to parliamentary approval of the Estimates, will be available to grant-aid individual projects and events within the EYE programme.

DOE and PSA are sponsoring a number of events and projects for EYE, including an international pollution abatement fair and conference, the new "Better Environment" awards for industry (which will form part of a Community-wide award scheme) and a revised handbook on Community environmental policy. We have identified many other projects and activities to promote the themes of EYE, and will seek further opportunities to publicise the year and the activities of the committee.

Inner City Programme (Birmingham)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the contribution of the inner city programme to voluntary groups in Birmingham.

Mr. Ridley: In 1985-86, one third (£8·6 million) of the Birmingham inner city partnership programme supported 465 voluntary sector schemes. The partnership aims to help inner city residents help themselves and this is often achieved through voluntary sector projects. £9·8 million of the 1986-87 programme has been set aside for the voluntary sector demonstrating increased support from the urban programme.

SCOTLAND

New Towns (Housing)

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the individual and total bids for housing capital allocation by the Scottish new towns development corporations in response to his letter of December 1986, including a breakdown between capital allocation, between rehabilitation and new construction, and the estimates by development corporations of expected revenue from sales of assets.

Mr. Lang: The following tables set out the estimates contained in the budgets recently submitted to my Department by the new town development corporations:

Abortion

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide details of each death notified with legal abortions in Scotland between 1981 and 1986 listed by (a) duration of pregnancy (i) under nine weeks, (ii) nine to 12 weeks, (iii) 13 to 16 weeks, (iv) 17 to 19 weeks and (v) 20 weeks or over and (b) the abortion procedure, and showing whether sterilisation was notified concurrently.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is not available, as the latest in the series of inquiries into maternal deaths in Scotland dealing with the period specified has not yet been completed.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of legal abortions without sterilisation performed in Scotland between 1968 and 1986 (a) by gestation period (i) of under nine weeks, (ii) nine to 12 weeks, (iii) 13 to 16 weeks and (iv) 17 to 19 weeks and (b) by main procedure (i) aspiration, (ii) D and C or D and E, (iii) hysterotomy, (iv) laminaria tents, (v) prostaglandines, (vi) saline and (vii) utus paste.

Mr. John MacKay: The number of legal abortions without sterilisation performed in Scotland between 1968 and 1985 by gestation period is given in table 1. The available information about the number of legal abortions without sterilisation by method is given in table 2. Figures for 1986 are not yet available.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many National Health Service abortions were performed in each health board area in Scotland in 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. John MacKay: The number of abortions performed in National Health Service hospitals in 1984 and 1985 is set out in the table by health board of treatment. The figures for the island health boards have been grouped together because of the small number of terminations performed. Figures for 1986 are not yet available.

Employment Statistics

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many women in Greenock and Port Glasgow are employed by firms with fewer than 12 employees;

(2) how many women in Greenock and Port Glasgow are employed for fewer than 21 hours a week;

(3) how many women in Greenock and Port Glasgow are in employment; and how many began new jobs on or after 1 May 1985.

Mr. Lang: Information is not available in the precise form requested. Employment statistics are obtained from the census of employment, and the most recent information for local areas is for September 1981. Figures for September 1984 are not yet available below the levels of standard regions, nor is information available about the numbers taking up new jobs after May 1985. In September 1981 there were 16,490 women employed in the Greenock travel-to-work area (1984 definition) of which 6,051 were working not more than 30 hours a week. Analyses by size of firm or actual number of hours worked are not available.

Fuel Disconnections

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the numbers of domestic consumers disconnected from (a) their electricity and (b) their gas supply in (i) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (ii) Strathclyde and (iii) Scotland in each of the past five years.

Mr. Lang: The information requested on electricity disconnections is not held centrally, but I am asking the chairman of the South of Scotland Electricity Board and the North of Scotland Hydro-Electricity Board to write to the hon. Member.

Information in respect of gas consumers is a matter for British Gas plc. I am asking the chairman to respond to the hon. Member's request.

Children in Care

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average cost to local authorities, as notified to his Department, of keeping children between the ages of (a) five to 11 years and (b) 11 to 16 years in care; and what range of costs the average covers.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is not available in the form requested. In 1985-86 the average gross cost to local authorities of residential care was £325 per child per week. The average cost of fostering and boarding out was £37 per child per week. Neither of these costs includes the costs of social workers involved in case work, culminating in children being placed in care.

Zircon Satellite

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Strathclyde as to the extent to which inquiries into the Zircon affair by the Strathclyde police are being conducted independently of the Metropolitan police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

Reprocessing Plant (Dounreay)

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to receive the recommendations of the reporter following the local planning inquiry into the proposal to locate a reprocessing plant for fast breeder reactors at Dounreay.

Mr. Ancram: I understand that the reporter hopes to circulate part I of his report in May. Thereafter he will have to provide parties to the inquiry with an opportunity to comment, and then consider, in the light of comments, whether any amendment is required. I expect that a period of at least eight weeks will elapse between the circulation of part I by the reporter and my receipt of the final report.

Scottish Development Agency

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now make available copies of the report of the review of the Scottish Development Agency.

Mr. Lang: Copies of the report of the review are now available in the House Library and copies have been sent to all right hon. and hon. Members with Scottish constituencies.

ENERGY

Dinorwig

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will indicate the generating capacity of the Dinorwig pump storage station, and make a statement on the feasibility of building further such facilities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: The declared net capability of the Dinorwig pumped-storage station is 1728 mw sent out. The Central Electricity Generating Board advises me that its system requirements for the foreseeable future do not require the addition of further pumped storage capacity.

PRIME MINISTER

Caterpillar Truck Company

Mr. Dewar asked the Prime Minister if she will place in the Library copies of the letters she has written to the Caterpillar Truck Company regarding the proposed closure of the plant at Uddingston together with copies of the company's replies.

The Prime Minister: No. It is not my usual practice to publish exchanges of this kind.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Beira Corridor

69. Mr. Don Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on EEC aid for reconstruction of the Beira corridor as a means of securing for Zimbabwe and other landlocked countries in southern Africa transport routes alternative to those controlled by South Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: About 40 per cent. of the 110 mecu (over £75 million) available under the third Lomé convention for regional projects in southern Africa will be spent on improving transport and communications, particularly the Beira corridor. This was established in a memorandum of understanding which was signed by the European Commission and the member states of the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC) in January 1986. A project worth around 40 mecu (about £30 million) for essential improvements to Beira port is now being prepared by the European Commission.

Britain will also be contributing bilaterally to the Beira corridor project.

Nepal

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the level of aid given to Nepal; and if he will list the major projects.

Mr. Chris Patten: Our aid disbursements to Nepal in 1986 are provisionally estimated at £9·9 million.

Our main current projects are:

	£ million
Maintenance of British funded roads	8·7
Eastern Region Water Supply	4·2
Forestry Research	2·2
Malaria Control	1·0

Two important new projects are due to start shortly. These are:

	£ million
Maleku-Mugling road	7·7
A group of projects for the development of the Koshi Hills in Eastern Nepal	9·0

Our continuing programme of technical assistance includes support for the Nepal administrative staff college, the Lumle agricultural centre, the Budhanilkantha school and a training programme which brings to the United Kingdom over 100 trainees a year.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Performance

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to what factors he attributes the decline in Britain's share of manufactured exports since 1979 and the trend of Britain's export performance in comparison with other European manufacturing nations.

Mr. Alan Clark: Our share of world exports of manufactured goods reflects a variety of factors including both price and non-price competitiveness and the geographical and commodity composition of our exports. United Kingdom exports of manufactures were again at record levels last year and since 1981 the United Kingdom volume share of main manufacturing countries' exports of manufactures has been maintained, halting years of decline.

Regional Development Grant

Mr. Duffy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what total payments in regional development grant were made in Yorkshire and Humberside in 1978-79 and 1986-87.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Payments of regional development grants in the Yorkshire and Humberside region in 1978-79 were £30·2 million. The provisional figure for the first 11 months of 1986-87 is £24·4 million.

Post Office (Privatisation)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent consideration he has given to privatising all or part of the Post Office.

Mr. Pattie: I have followed with interest the recent public debate on this issue, but I have nothing to add to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bootle (Mr. Roberts) on 19 February, at column 750.

Far East (Imports)

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has had recent discussions with his European Economic Community counterparts on problems arising from imports from far eastern countries into the United Kingdom and other European Economic Community member states.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have regular meetings with my European counterparts at which we discuss a range of issues including, when appropriate, problems arising from imports from far eastern countries into the United Kingdom and other Community states.

Films (Distribution)

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he proposes to take to relax restrictions on the distribution of films following the conclusion of the experiments in Manchester and Glasgow.

Mr. Pattie: My right hon. Friend will consider what action, if any, should be taken as a result of the Manchester and Glasgow film releasing experiment in the light of the Director General of Fair Trading's assessment of its results.

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the total expenditure by all Government Departments on Westland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Pattie: This information is not readily available. I shall give a further reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Japan (Trade)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken and intends to take in the future to secure greater trade opportunities for British goods and services within the Japanese market.

Mr. Alan Clark: We continue to press the Japanese Government fully to open their markets to imported goods and services. The Community has taken one issue, restrictions on imports of alcoholic drinks, to the GATT, and detailed discussions are in train on other sectors, including cars and medical equipment. In respect of financial services, I have made clear my readiness to use the reciprocity provisions in the Financial Services Act.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Letters and Visits)

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many letters and visits are allowed to prisoners; and whether he will review current arrangements.

Mr. Mellor: All convicted inmates are entitled to one letter on reception and after that to one letter a week on which postage is paid at public expense. In addition, since last April a convicted inmate in open establishments may send and receive as many letters paid for from his earnings as he wishes. Other convicted inmates are allowed at least one additional letter a week on which postage is paid from prison earnings. There are no restrictions on the number of letters an unconvicted prisoner may send and receive; he may send at public expense any letter necessary to his defence or on any matter connected with his case and two letters a week to relatives or friends, the postage on any other letters being met from his earnings or private cash.

Adult convicted prisoners are entitled to a visit on reception and every four weeks thereafter, and convicted young offenders to a visit on reception and every two weeks thereafter. Unconvicted prisoners are normally allowed daily visits (except on Sunday), but for operational reasons these arrangements may need to be altered at particular establishments. In such cases the length of visits is increased, wherever possible, to compensate for their reduced frequency.

Governors are encouraged to allow letters and visits above the minimum entitlement wherever practicable. There are no present plans to review the numbers of visits to which an inmate is entitled. The removal last April of the restrictions on the number of letters which inmates in open establishments may send and receive was one element in the start we had made on implementing the recommendations of the control review committee for developing incentives in category C and D establishments.

Lordship of the Manor Titles

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the sale of lordship of the manor titles detached from property.

Mr. Hurd: The Government see no significant issues of principle in these transactions.

Amusement Arcades

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce greater control on amusement arcades under the present Gaming Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans at present to introduce greater controls on amusement arcades but are keeping the matter under review. To this end we are now considering whether we should initiate reseach into the extent to which under-16s use amusement arcades and the implications of this for the young people concerned.

Data Exchange

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current volume of data items exchanged between his Department and her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and what are the expected future volumes if the Government data network is fully implemented.

Mr. Hurd: The only computer data supplied to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise by the Home Office is information on vehicle keepers — about 4,000 cases a week — provided on behalf of the Department of Transport as an inquiry-only service on the vehicle keepers index held on the police national comupter. There are no plans for any other exchange of computer data between the Home Office and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. The volume of data transfers is not expected to change as a result of the possible use of the proposed Government data network by the police national computer unit.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the exemption orders under section 29 of the Data Protection Act; and when he expects to announce the data subject access fee.

Mr. Waddington: My right hon. Friend will bring them forward when he has reached conclusions in the light of consultations, which are not yet complete, with interested parties about these orders.

Water Cannon

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has completed his evaluation of the prototype water cannon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The two prototypes have now been evaluated and account has been taken of the use of water cannon by the police services of some of our European partners. In consultation with chief officers of police, we have concluded that in policing rioting of the kind experienced in this country in 1981 and 1985, any benefits in the deployment of water cannon would be outweighed by their operational and tactical disadvantages, including lack of manoeuvrability, quick exhaustion of water supply, and vulnerability to attack. It is not therefore proposed to add water cannon to the range of equipment now available to the police to deal with serious disorder. Arrangements will be made to dispose of the two prototypes. The Department will, however, continue to monitor developments, including the use of water cannon overseas, so that the position can be reviewed if necessary.

Police (Complaints)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer of 26 February, Official Report, columns 348–49, on civil actions against police officers, he will give details of the nature of the complaints, the names of the complainant and the numbers of officers, and their ranks, involved in each of the 10 cases referred to in his answer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1987, c. 696]: In the absence of any knowledge of the wishes of the individuals concerned, we do not think it would be right to give the names of the complainants. I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the other information requested is as follows:

Nature of allegation	Numbers and ranks of officers involved
1. Assault	Two Sergeants Three Constables
2. Unlawful imprisonment	One Chief Inspector Two Sergeants
3. Assault	One Sergeant One Constable
4. Assault and false imprisonment	Five Constables
5. Assault and false imprisonment	Two Constables
6. Assault, false imprisonment, malicious prosecution	One Sergeant Two Constables
7. Assault and false imprisonment	Three Inspectors Two Sergeants One Constable
8. Assault	One Sergeant
9. Assault	One Sergeant
10. Unlawful imprisonment	One Sergeant

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Planning Education (Scotland)

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received from the Royal Town Planning Institute about planning education in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The implementation in Scotland of the recommendations of the transbinary working group on town and country planning was discussed briefly at a meeting that I had with a deputation from the Royal Town Planning Institute on 26 February 1987. Since then, the chairman of the Scottish branch of the Royal Town Planning Institute has written in similar terms about planning education in Scotland to Ministers in both the Department of Education and Science and the Scottish Education Department. As the correspondence centred on the Scottish dimension it was considered appropriate that it should be dealt with by the Scottish Education Department. This was the substance of my reply.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what he is doing to encourage more private funding for city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is continuing a series of discussions with prospective sponsors of city technology colleges. Where companies have already indicated a firm interest the Department is encouraging them to widen the basis of local support by means of collaborative arrangements.

Class Sizes

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing the number of classes and of pupils in classes of more than 30 pupils for each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The number of classes with more than 30 pupils and the number of pupils in those classes in maintained primary and secondary schools in England in each year since 1979 was as follows. The analyses are in respect of classes taught by one teacher on a specified period on the day of the census count in January of each year. The figures should not be taken as representative of the pattern of classes over the academic year as a whole.

January each year	One teacher classes with more than 30 pupils	Pupils in these classes

Pupils (Statistics)

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the proportions of pupils in comprehensive, secondary modern and grammar schools in each local education authority.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The proportion of pupils in comprehensive, secondary modern and grammar schools in each local education authority in England in January 1986 was as follows:

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the pupil-teacher ratios for each local education authority for the most recent year for which figures are available, and for 1983 and 1979.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General if he will state for each new job training scheme pilot area, by male/female and by age group, 18 to 25 years, and 25 years plus, the number of entrants per week and the cumulative total of filled places per week since the week ended 6 February.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The table shows, for each of the pilot areas from the week ended 13 February, the number of entrants per week and the weekly cumulative totals of trainees in training. The information on breakdown by sex and age groups is not available in the form requested, but the second table gives a percentage breakdown for entrants in each area up to 6 March.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what is the latest estimated financial provision for the new job training scheme for 1987-88; what percentage of that money is additional to existing funding; and how much will be transferred from other projects at present financed by the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Tourism

Mr. Butterfill asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the prospects for creating jobs in the tourism sector by means of Government funding in areas where industrial employment is depressed.

Mr. Trippier: We are proposing to make an additional £5 million available in 1987-88 to the English tourist Board and the British Tourist Authority so that they can expand their marketing and development activities and continue to give priority to encouraging tourism in areas of unexploited potential and high unemployment. Some £2·6 million of this will be used to extend the ETB's section 4 scheme of assistance for tourism projects. The scheme has proved to be highly cost effective in creating jobs at local and regional level and there is scope for it to make a significant contribution to the creation of new sources of employment in areas experiencing a decline in traditional industrial employment.

NATIONAL FINANCE

EC (Financial Situation)

72. Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the European Economic Community Foreign Affairs Council will next receive a report on the European Economic Community's own financial situation.

Mr. Brooke: The Foreign Affairs Council will discuss the Commission's report on the future financing of the Community budget at its meeting on 27-28 April.

EC Budget

73. Sir Russell Johnston asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the recent proposals by Mr. Jacques Delors, President of the European Economic Community Commission, for reform of the European Economic Community budget.

Mr. Brooke: The president of the Commission's proposals for reform of the EEC budget contain a wide range of ideas, which Her Majesty's Government will be examining closely. The first priority must be to look at ways of controlling expenditure, especially on agriculture.

Company Appropriation Account

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1985 and an estimate for 1986 a company appropriation account on the same basis as in table 285 of the "Annual Abstract of Statistics, 1959".

Mr. MacGregor: The information is not available in the form requested.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1957, 1961, 1971, 1981 and the latest year for which figures are available, the number of tax units taxed as self-employed compared to the number classified in the employment statistics and population censuses as self-employed, the amount of income assessed to tax, and the amount of income and the amount of tax paid per head in terms of 1980 prices; and if he will provide an estimate for the current financial year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Clearing Banks

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the assets and liabilities of the clearing banks as closely as possible to the basis shown in table 299 of issue No. 87 of the "Annual Abstract of Statistics".

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the monthly financial statement published by the Banking Information Service. I have placed a copy of the latest statement in the Library.

Companies (Taxation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will publish in the Official

Report a table showing for the years 1958, 1964, 1969, 1974, 1979 and 1985 the gross overseas income for tax purposes of the companies and financial institutions, as defined on page 168 of the annual supplement to Economic Trends 1987, the amount set off against tax of other countries under double taxation relief, and the amount of tax collected;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing in greater detail than table 1.10 in the edition of the "United Kingdom National Accounts 1986", for the years 1975, 1979 and 1985 the property income from abroad net of foreign taxes and the property income paid abroad less United Kingdom taxes for each sector, including financial institutions, together with the totals of United Kingdom tax and foreign tax payable and the amount of double taxation relief on income from abroad.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Current Account Statistics

Mr. Shore asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on what the surplus or deficit on current account of the United States of America, Germany, Japan, France, Italy and the United Kingdom has been in each year since 1973; and what is the forecast for 1987.

Mr. Lawson: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Madden asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total capital allocation made to local authorities in England and Wales in each year since 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

EC (Grants)

Mr. Caborn asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the new community instrument of 1,500 mecu (£1,100 million) is likely to come to smaller and medium-sized enterprises in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

The Council of the European Communities has adopted a decision to make a facility of 750 mecu available under the new community instrument for lending to small and medium-sized enterprises. The European Investment Bank has agreed to provide a further facility of 750 mecu for the same purpose. Applications for loans under both facilities will be made to the European Investment Bank. Funds will not be allocated to particular member states and it is not yet possible to estimate what proportion will come to the United Kingdom.

DEFENCE

Properties (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many properties in the ownership of his Department are vacant in north Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: At 30 November 1986, the last occasion on which data were collected, there were 906 married quarters vacant in north Yorkshire. Of these, 397 were being held against a major new operational deployment at RAF Leeming; 273 were undergoing or awaiting modernisation, works services or furnishing; 131 had been allocated to incoming families; and 29 were in the process of disposal. There was, therefore, a balance of 76 married quarters at various stations for which there was no immediate requirement. These quarters will be disposed of if no service requirement is identified.

Park Vista Site

Mrs. Barnes asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 4 March, Official Report, column 602, if he will list all other restrictive covenants governing the southern boundary wall of the Park Vista site, Greenwich, to which he or any of his predecessors have been party; and if he will place copies of all such covenants in the Library.

Mr. Freeman: There is no record of any restrictive covenant governing the southern boundary of this wall other than the one already placed in the Library.

Reserve Forces (Benefits)

Mr. Cockeram asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is now in a position to make an announcement about the payment of social security benefits to members of the reserve forces.

Mr. Freeman: I am pleased to announce that volunteers in the Reserve Forces will be able to earn the standard quarter day's pay for each of up to 16 mid-week drill nights in a year without suffering any reduction in unemployment benefit. The necessary amending regulations will be introduced shortly.

Gurkhas

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the military and civilian establishments Her Majesty's Government fund in Nepal for Gurkhas and their dependants.

Mr. Stanley: Her Majesty's Government fund the following military and civilian establishments in Nepal for Gurkhas and their dependants:

Dharan:
- Headquarters, British Gurkhas Nepal
- British Gurkhas Depot (Recruitment, Eastern Nepal)
- British Military Hospital
- Gurkha Welfare Scheme
- British Gurkhas Nepal Support Units (REME Workshops, ordnance depot, pay and records office, etc.)
- Area Office, Property Services Agency
- Educational and recreational facilities

Katmandu:
- Gurkha Transit Camp
- Movements Detachment

Pokhara:
- British Gurkhas Centre (Recruitment, Western Nepal).

There are also married quarters at all three sites. In addition, there are a total of 27 area welfare centres. These are funded by the Gurkha Welfare Trust, a charitable organisation to which the Government make a small financial contribution.

Research and Development

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of gross domestic product is allocated to defence research and development.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1985-86 defence research and development expenditure was 0·6 per cent. of GDP.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to lay before Parliament the statutory order designating the Mourne mountains an environmentally sensitive area.

Mr. Viggers: A number of sites throughout Northern Ireland are being investigated but decisions have not yet been taken on which will be considered in detail for potential designation as environmentally sensitive areas in 1988.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sites he will consider for designation as environmentally sensitive areas in 1988 in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: The enabling Order in Council will shortly be laid before Parliament. The statutory rule designating the Mournes and Slieve Croob as environmentally sensitive areas will be made as soon as possible after the coming into operation of the order.

Strip Searches

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many strip searches were made of female prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry, in February; if he will give the number of persons involved and the number of times each person was seached; whether any prison contraband, smuggled items or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being conducted; and if he will indicate the reasons for the search, namely making an appearance in court, and in which court, on remand, attending trial, inter-prison visit or other reasons.

Mr. Scott: Forty searches were carried out on 24 prisoners during February; Nine prisoners were searched once, 14 were searched twice and one prisoner was searched on three occasions. No prohibited article was found during these searches and no prisoner refused to be searched. The searches were carried out in the following circumstances.

	Number
First admission on remand—awaiting trial	4
First admission on sentence—final discharge	25
Attending Bangor Remand Court	1
Attending Belfast Remand Court	4
Attending Newtownards Remand Court	1
Bail Court appearances	5

Children in Care

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average cost to public funds of keeping children between the ages of (a) five to 11 years and (b) 11 to 16 years in care; and what range of costs the average covers.

Mr. Needham: Information is not collected on a basis which would enable the segregation of costs into the age bandings requested. The average cost during 1985-86 to public funds of keeping children in care has been calculated as follows:

1. Childrens' Homes run by Health and Social Services Boards.
Average running costs per resident week for 1985-86 (Costs range from £217 to £452)	277
2. Voluntary Childrens' Homes.
Average weekly charge levied on Health and Social Services Boards by Voluntary Homes (Costs range from £88 to £235)	172
3. Boarded out children.
Average weekly boarding allowances	44

Unfit Dwellings

Mr. Mallon asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many unfit dwellings there are in Newry rural housing district or Armagh rural housing district; and what steps he is taking to make grants available to relieve the situation.

Mr. Needham [pursuant to his reply, 16 March 1987, c. 379]: "The Northern Ireland Housing Condition Survey 1984" published by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, estimates that 2,675 dwellings were unfit in the Newry and Mourne district council area. Of that figure, and in accordance with the Province-wide trend, the highest proportion, some 89 per cent. (2,393) were in the rural part of the district.

The housing condition survey estimates that in 1984 there were 1,515 unfit dwellings in the Armagh housing district. It is not possible without disproportionate cost to disaggregate the rural figure. A range of renovation grants are available to relieve this problem and it is anticipated that the Executive's grants scheme will continue on a similar level in 1987-88 as in 1986-87.

The improvement of unfit dwellings generally is a high priority area and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive encourages occupants to improve their dwellings using grant-aid. Recently the Executive has completed a pilot study into rural unfitness centred on Rosslea in Co. Fermanagh to assess the extent of the problem and the needs and preferences of people in the area. The findings of the report are now being considered in depth and I will look carefully at the recommendations which flow from it.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Central America

9. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United States Government about the implications for a peaceful settlement of the conflict in Central America of the role of United States warships operating in the vicinity of Nicaragua; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend and other Ministers and officials regularly discuss important issues, including the situation in Central America, with the United States Administration and they are fully aware of our views.

48. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the implications for the possibility of a peaceful settlement to the conflict in Central America of the supply of arms to the Contra forces in Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: We do not believe the problems of the region can be resolved by armed force and have constantly urged restraint on all sides. We have clearly demonstrated our support for a political solution to the problems of Central America on the basis of the Contadora objectives. Our actions have been, and will remain, consistent with that policy.

Angola

10. Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on South African incursions into and attacks against the People's Republic of Angola that have taken place since October 1986.

Mrs. Chalker: We have no record of receiving any representations. We have always condemned cross-border violence in southern Africa.

46. Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent meetings between Her Majesty's Government and representatives of the Angolan Government.

Mrs. Chalker: The most recent ministerial level meetings with a representative of the Angolan Government took place in July 1986 when my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Energy, my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Trade and Industry and myself had meetings with the Angolan Minister of Foreign Trade, Senor Ismael Martins, during his visit to the United Kingdom.

Soviet Union (Human Rights)

15. Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Russian embassy over the difficulties that parliamentary human rights groups have experienced in obtaining visas to visit the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

18. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has protested to the Soviet authorities concerning the refusal to grant visas to a delegation from the all-party parliamentary committee for the release of Soviet Jewry.

Mr. Renton: I have made representations on two recent occasions: on behalf of the All-Party Parliamentary Committee for the Release of Soviet Jewry; and on behalf of my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) and representatives of the Parliamentary Wives for the Release of Soviet Jewry. In the former case, Her Majesty's ambassador in Moscow also expressed his strong regret to the Soviet authorities that visas had not been forthcoming.

Cyprus

19. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Turkish Government as to the withdrawal of Turkish troops from Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: This is an issue which we have regularly raised with the Turkish Government. The withdrawal of foreign troops will obviously have to form part of any comprehensive settlement to the Cyprus dispute. We believe that the United Nations Secretary General's initiative is best placed to achieve such a settlement; and we therefore give his efforts our full support.

EC Policies

20. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further proposals he intends to place before his European Community partners for the development of Community policies.

Mrs. Chalker: In the course of regular contacts with our colleagues from other member states and the Commission my right hon. and learned Friend and I have made clear our views on the need to reform the common agricultural policy, ensure better control of expenditure, relieve burdens on small businesses, complete the common market in goods and services and develop policies on other matters to the benefit of Britain and the Community as a whole.

Nicaragua

21. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's current diplomatic relations with Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: We have normal diplomatic relations with Nicaragua.

29. Mr. Terry Fields asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received concerning Her Majesty's Government's relations with Nicaragua.

Mr. Eggar: We have received letters from right hon. and hon. Members, individuals and organisations on the subject of Nicaragua, including our relations with Nicaragua. In reply, we have made clear that we have normal diplomatic relations with Nicaragua, but that we want to see Nicaragua end its support for guerrillas in neighbouring countries and make progress towards genuine pluralist democracy.

54. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with representatives of the United States Government about United States policy on Nicaragua, with particular reference to support for the Contras.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend and other Ministers and officials regularly discuss important issues, including the situation in central America, with the United States Administration and they are fully aware of our views.

South Africa (Buccaneer Aircraft)

23. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the meeting of the Security Council Committee set up by United Nations Security Council resolution 421 of 1977 on 27 February, he will investigate the supply of spare parts for Buccaneer aircraft to South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: The meeting in question produced no new evidence that might form the basis of an investigation into the alleged supply to South Africa of spare parts for Buccaneer aircraft.

Oman

24. Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's diplomatic relations with Oman.

61. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to make a visit to Oman.

Mr. Renton: Our relations with Oman are excellent. I visited Oman from 26 February to 1 March, and met His Majesty the Sultan and several of his Ministers. While in Oman I led the British side at the annual meeting of the Anglo-Omani joint commission.

The Prince and Princess of Wales made a highly successful visit to Oman last November. Exercise Saif Sareea, a joint military exercise held in Oman from 16 November to 8 December, was a further illustration of the continuing close ties between the two countries.

Afghanistan

25. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with his Soviet counterpart during his forthcoming visit to Moscow the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 11 March at column 225.

43. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Pakistan about the situation in Afghanistan and the problem of refugees from Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: We remain in close touch with the Pakistan Government. As I told the House in the Adjournment debate on 5 March, Afghan refugees continue to flee into Pakistan: at least 85,000 over the last year. We condemn the recent callous and bloody bombing raids into Pakistan, which killed over 110 innocent civilians and Afghan refugees, and cast a pall over Soviet professions to want a peaceful settlement.

Sri Lanka

26. Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will offer to act as intermediary in efforts to negotiate an end to communal violence in Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have not been asked, neither would we wish to become involved in Sri Lanka's internal problems. We have made clear to all parties involved our view that a negotiated settlement is the best way to a lasting peace.

British Council

27. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to meet the chairman of the British Council to discuss future financial provisions for the council.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to do so.

Cyprus (Human Rights)

28. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received on the human rights situation in Cyprus.

Mr. Eggar: Representations on human rights in Cyprus are regularly received from individuals and organisations. Most recently the Dodecanesian-Cypriot Association and the National Federation of Cypriots in Great Britain have written to us about them. President Kyprianou also wrote to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 3 January about the question of missing persons in Cyprus.

National Unity of Salvadorean Workers

30. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meetings he has held with representatives of the National Unity of Salvadorean Workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None, but representatives of this union called on Foreign Office officials in London in December 1986 and February 1987. As part of their normal duties, Her Majesty's diplomatic staff accredited to El Salvador maintain contact with the trade unions.

Guatemala

31. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has had from the Guatemalan Government about the reported incursion of British troops from Belize into the Peten region; and if he will make a statement on the progress of United Kingdom relations with Guatemala.

Mr. Eggar: None. There was no incursion. Diplomatic relations were re-established between the United Kingdom and Guatemala on 29 December 1986. My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office met President Cerezo on 10 February in Guatemala.

Bophuthatswana

32. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he or any of his Ministers have plans to make an official visit to Bophuthatswana.

Mrs. Chalker: We have no such plans.

Soviet Union (Trade)

33. Mr. James Lamond asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during his visit to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, he will raise the matter of development of trade.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Yes.

South Africa

34. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has yet met the new ambassador to the Court of St. James sent by the South African Government to replace Dr. Denis Worrall.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend met Mr. Killen during the visit which he paid to South Africa in July 1986 in his capacity as president of the Foreign Affairs Council of the European Community.

55. Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on making resolution 591 of the United Nations Security Council of 28 November 1986 regarding the arms embargo against South Africa mandatory.

Mrs. Chalker: The Security Council adopted resolution 591 by consensus as a voluntary resolution. Its voluntary status is therefore already determined and is not subject to change.

59. Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will encourage the President of the European Economic Community Council of Ministers to continue to seek consensus on the inclusion of coal in the list of items of South African exports embargoed for purposes of import into the European Community.

Mrs. Chalker: In line with the statement by Ministers in European political co-operation on 15-16 September 1986, it rests with the presidency of the day to seek consensus on this issue.

62. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the European Commission Council of Foreign Ministers proposes to take any further initiatives on South Africa in the coming months.

Mrs. Chalker: The Foreign Ministers of the Twelve will continue their efforts to work to promote peaceful dialogue, with the aim of achieving fundamental change in South Africa.

64. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what approaches have been made by the United States Administration seeking Her Majesty's Government's support for a multilateral programme of sanctions drawn from the list of measures included in the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1966.

Mrs. Chalker: None.

65. Mr. Maxton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on South Africa's failure to comply with United Nations resolution 435 regarding the independence of Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: We have received representations from various sources on South Africa's failure to implement United Nations Security Council Resolution 435. They include Parliamentary questions as well as letters from hon. and right hon. Members, non-governmental organisations and members of the public.

Saudi Arabia

35. Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's diplomatic relations with Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, Central (Mr. Lord) on 11 March at column 211.

70. Mr. Torney asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice his Department gives to British citizens intending to travel to Saudi Arabia about those offences which carry amputation as a possible penalty in that country; what is his policy with regard to making representations to the Saudi Government in cases where British citizens face such punishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: All British nationals travelling overseas are advised to respect local laws and customs. An advisory booklet "Living in Saudi Arabia—a brief guide", states that amputation is a possible penalty for theft in Saudi Arabia.

The Saudi authorities are aware that certain penalties are abhorrent to British opinion. Appropriate representations are made if individual cases involving British nationals arise.

Argentina

36. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to visit Argentina.

Mr. Eggar: No.

UNESCO

37. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to how many nations have withdrawn from UNESCO since 1980.

Mr. Eggar: Three.

Intermediate Range Nuclear Forces

38. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his European North Atlantic Treaty Organisation colleagues about the Soviet offer to remove all intermediate nuclear forces from Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend continues to have regular bilateral discussions with Foreign Ministers from NATO countries. These cover a wide range of topics including developments in arms control negotiations. Contacts at official level are also maintained on a regular basis.

Africa Fund

39. Mr. Cabora asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British participation in the Africa Fund under the chairmanship of Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom already provides substantial aid to the front-line states both bilaterally and through the European Community. It is not our policy to give financial support to political parties or organisations committed to the use of violence.

Soviet Union

40. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit the Soviet Union.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend will accompany my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on her visit to the Soviet Union from 28 March to 1 April.

58. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will discuss human rights problems when he next meets his opposite number in the Soviet Union.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Yes.

Lebanon

41. Dr. M. S. Miller asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with President Gemayel concerning the prospects of ending the civil war in the Lebanon.

Diplomatic Immunity

45. Mr. Robert C. Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will now make it his policy to seek a review of the Vienna convention to enable the tightening of international agreements to combat the abuse of diplomatic immunity.

Mr. Eggar: We agreed (Cmnd. 9497) with the report in 1984 of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Commons on the abuse of diplomatic immunities and privileges that it would be wrong to regard amendment of the Vienna convention as the solution to the problem of abuse of diplomatic immunities in view of the difficulties of achieving any restrictive amendment and the doubtful net benefit even if we were successful. That remains our view. We further agreed with the Committee's recommendation that we should apply the existing provisions of the convention more firmly. We continue to attach importance to this. The Diplomatic Corps is well aware of the serious view which we take of abuses of diplomatic immunity.

50. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how often he meets the doyen of the Diplomatic Corps; what matters he discusses with him; and whether, at his last meeting, he discussed abuses of diplomatic privilege.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the doyen on a variety of occasions. The issues they have discussed have included aspects of the abuse of diplomatic privileges and immunities. However, we think it more appropriate that particular cases of alleged abuse should be discussed direct with the head of mission or missions concerned.

51. Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to which Governments he has made representations about standards of diplomatic behaviour, particularly concerning the aiding and abetting of terrorists.

Mr. Eggar: All heads of mission in London are well aware of the stringent standards of behaviour which we expect of diplomats and of the grave view which we take of terrorist activity.

We are determined to deal decisively with states that sponsor terrorism. On two occasions, the murder of WPC Fletcher and the attempt by Nezar Hindawi to blow up an airliner, the responsibility of the Libyan and Syrian authorities respectively was clear beyond doubt. In both instances we decided to sever diplomatic relations.

Iran-Iraq War

47. Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest assessment of prospects for a peaceful settlement to the Iraq-Iran war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We have consistently made clear our desire to see an early negotiated settlement to this conflict. Regrettably there are no indications at present that Iran and Iraq are both willing to agree to a ceasefire and enter into negotiations leading to a peaceful settlement of the conflict. We continue to believe the best way forward is via the good offices of the United Nations Secretary General.

63. Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his European Economic Community counterparts, and particularly France, on the supply of arms and equipment to either side in the Iran-Iraq war.

Mr. Renton: The Iran-Iraq conflict has figured prominently in discussions at all levels within European political co-operation, including the recent ministerial meeting on 23 February. We continue to use all suitable opportunities to urge all countries both within the EC and outside, to adopt a policy as strict as ours on the supply of defence equipment.

Mozambique

49. Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on violations of the Nkomati accord between Mozambique and South Africa by the South African Government.

Mrs. Chalker: Representations have been received in the past from the Government of Mozambique. We have urged the South African Government to abide by both the letter and spirit of the accord.

Southern Africa (Front-line States)

52. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he makes of the economic position of the front-line states in southern Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: A number of front-line states in southern Africa are experiencing severe economic problems, caused by worsening terms of trade, heavy debt burdens, regional insecurity and in some cases civil conflict and inappropriate economic policies. We are supporting the front-line states' economic development and efforts to reduce their economic dependence on South Africa. We are giving substantial support through bilateral and multilateral aid programmes, amounting to over US$1 billion to the region since 1980-81; we have also pledged £35 million to the Southern African development co-ordination conference for development in the front-line states, particularly Mozambique.

Test Ban Treaty

53. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to discuss the possibility of a comprehensive test ban treaty with the United States Government.

Mr. Renton: My right hon and learned Friend expects to meet Mr. Shultz shortly. Their discussions normally cover a range of arms control issues.

Chemical Weapons

56. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report progress towards the prohibition of chemical weapons at the conference on disarmament.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The chemical weapons negotiations resumed on 3 February. We hope it will be possible to build on the encouraging progress made last year.

Postal Communications

57. Mr. Woodall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the subject of postal deliveries to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics has been placed in the agenda of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, Helsinki review conference currently taking place in Vienna.

Mr. Renton: Our delegation has already raised this issue in debate on a number of occasions. With other Western countries, we have tabled a proposal aimed at ensuring freedom of transit of postal communications.

Middle East

60. Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards a middle east peace stettlement.

Mr. Renton: We are profoundly concerned at the absence of progress towards a solution of the Arab-Israel dispute. We and our European partners will try actively to help reduce the differences between the parties with a view to the convening of an international conference.

Grenada

66. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations between the United Kingdom and Grenada; and what matters are currently causing problems in these relations.

Mr. Eggar: We enjoy close and friendly relations with Grenada. There are no matters currently causing problems in these relations.

India

67. Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the visit by his hon. Friend the Minister of State the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) to India, with particular reference to discussions concerning an Anglo-Indian extradition treaty.

Mr. Eggar: My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) visited India on 9-12 December 1986. He had profitable discussions on a range of issues, including the possibility of concluding an extradition treaty with India. A further round of consultations between legal experts took place in New Delhi in February at which useful progress was made.

CSCE (Human Rights)

68. Mr. Grist asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe discussions in Vienna with particular reference to human rights.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Dudley West (Dr. Blackburn). The Vienna meeting has now entered its third and final phase, during which work will begin on drafting of a concluding document.

Military Equipment

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria he uses in deciding whether parts supplied to either side in the Iran/Iraq war under existing contracts are lethal equipment for the purposes of the guidelines set out in his answer of 29 October 1985, Official Report, column 450.

Mr. Renton: All applications for export licences are of course looked at in the light of our current policy on exports to Iran and Iraq. If there were any doubt over whether equipment under a contracts signed before the introduction of the current Guidelines in December 1984 was lethal or not, a judgement would be made as to whether such equipment would significantly enhance the capability of the recipient to prolong or exacerbate the conflict. Indeed it was precisely because of such definitional problems that the current policy was introduced in 1984.

Communications Officers

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends any changes in the role of communications officer in British missions overseas; if he intends to reorganise the communications administration department of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Change in Diplomatic Service telecommunications to meet modern requirements is a continuing process. For the foreseeable future a mixture of locally engaged, general service and specialist communications staff will be employed on this work in British missions overseas. In common with other departments of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office the communications administration department is subject to regular inspections and organisational changes as necessary.

Israel

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to make it the policy of the European Community to make any further granting of EEC trade concessions to Israel dependent on progress by that country towards a peaceful solution to the middle east conflict.

Mr. Renton: No. We do not believe that such action would help our objective of bringing all the parties to the Arab-Israel dispute together for constructive negotiations.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on discussions with the Israeli Government concerning forged passports used by agents of the Israeli Government; what assurances he has received from that Government that there will be no repetition of this behaviour; what impact he anticipates this behaviour will have on travellers to and visitors in adjacent Arab countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We protested in strong terms to the Israeli Government at the misuse of forged British passports and sought an assurance that such unacceptable behaviour would not be allowed to happen again. The possible implications for British citizens in the Middle East were among the points which we raised with the Israelis. The Israeli Government subsequently expressed regret and informed us that steps had been taken to avoid recurrences. On the basis of these assurances we regard the incident as closed.

Foreign Affairs Council

Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 16 and 17 March.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary and I attended the Foreign Affairs Council in Brussels on 16 March. My hon. Friend the Minister for Trade also attended.

The Council agreed on the overall figure for the new generation of financial protocols for some of the Community's Mediterranean partners.

Against the background of a continuing deterioraton in the trade balance between Japan and the Community, the Council invited the Commission to increase its efforts to improve access for European firms in Japan, particularly in the automobiles, medical equipment and leather goods sectors. A copy of the Council's statement has been placed in the Library of the House.

The Council discussed EC-US trade relations and expressed concern at prospective trade legislation currently before the United States Congress. The Council stated that if the United States took restrictive measures affecting EC exports, the Community would respond in accordance with its GATT rights. A copy of the Council statement has been placed in the Library of the House.

At the initiative of the United Kingdom, the council discussed the international implications of the Commission proposals for an oils and fats tax, particularly as regards developing countries, the United States and the Community's obligations under the GATT. Further discussion will take place in the Agriculture Council.

My right hon. and learned Friend reported to the Council on his visit to Hungary on 8-10 March. The Council discussed the Commission's draft mandate for the negotiation of an EC-Hungary trade and economic co-operation agreement and agreed that it should aim to reach agreement on the mandate at the April Foreign Affairs Council.

Discussion continued on rules for the exercise of the implementing powers of the Commission.

Meeting in political co-operation, the Foreign Ministers issued a statement condemning the recent attacks across the Afghan border as deliberately aimed against civilian targets in Pakistan and calling on the Soviet Union to put a stop to such outrages and to agree to a rapid and total withdrawal of its troops. A copy of the statement has been placed in the Library of the House.

The Prime Minister: Under the Race Relations Act 1976, discrimination in selection in favour of ethnic minority or white candidates on the grounds of their race, colour or ethnic origin is unlawful. The Civil Service is taking positive steps which demonstrates its commitment to making a policy of equal opportunities effective.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Phil Penn

Mr. Ron Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the recent jailing of Phil Penn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have not received any representations.

Asylum

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people from Sierra Leone have (i) applied and (ii) been granted political asylum in the United Kingdom since the present Government in that country assumed power.

Mr. Waddington: Information on applications and grants in 1979 to 1985 was published in tables 1 and 5A-5F of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Refugee Statistics, United Kingdom, 1985" (Issue 12/86). It is hoped to publish corresponding figures for 1986 around the end of April.

Police (Road Traffic Control)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the increased number of police officers assigned to road traffic control following the announced increase in police manpower of October 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 7 October 1986 my right hon. Friend announced increases of 111 police officer posts for three provincial forces with effect from 1 November 1986. Of these, 11 were specifically for road traffic policing.

Police (Wapping Public Houses)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan Police Commissioner as to how many Metropolitan police officers visited each of the following public houses in Wapping: (i) the Brown Bear, (ii) the Prospect of Whitby, (iii) Ivories Piano Bar and (iv) the Artful Dodger, on the evening of 24 January; what rank of officers were involved in each visit; how many arrests were made at each of the public houses; how many of the officers involved were wearing riot equipment; what injuries were suffered by officers and members of the public in each location; how many charges followed the arrests of persons located at each public house; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner that there is no record of on-duty police officers having entered any of these public houses on 24 January. The available information is that a total of three sergeants and 30 constables in ordinary uniform were deployed to police the area outside the Artful Dodger and Brown Bear public houses between about 10.45 pm and 11.15 pm. A total of four people were arrested for offences of drunkenness, using insulting words, and obstructing a police officer; three were charged and one was cautioned; no injuries to police officers or members of the public were reported. Information about other incidents which may have occurred outside other public houses during the course of the evening are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mentally Disordered Offenders

Dame Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he proposes to issue advice to doctors and social workers about the supervision of mentally disordered offenders who have been conditionally discharged from hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: After consultation with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services we are publishing today revised and more comprehensive guidance to hospitals, and to consultant psychiatrists, probation officers and social workers who are responsible for providing statutory supervision for conditionally discharged patients in the community. The guidance is intended to inform supervisors of their responsibilities; encourage the widespread adoption of existing good practice; promote the fullest co-operation between the professionals responsible for the patient's care and supervision; and ensure that the Home Office is kept fully informed. We are confident that the new guidance will improve further the effectiveness of supervision and the protection it provides for the public. Copies of the new guidance are being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Local Development Agency Fund

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made since the establishment of the Local Development Agency Fund in April 1986.

Mr. Hurd: This fund was established jointly by my Department, the Department of the Environment, the Department of Health and Social Security and the Department of Transport and has available to it approximately £1 million a year for a three-year period. Its aim is to strengthen the voluntary sector locally by making grants to new or already existing local development agencies. Typically, but not exclusively, these are "generalist" bodies like councils for voluntary service or volunteer bureaux; but all of these exist to provide practical support and encouragement for the voluntary groups on their areas, to provide a forum in which different groups can meet together and share information and experience, to stimulate volunteering, and to promote more effective working relationships between voluntary bodies and statutory agencies. The fund is administered by a committee which is broadly representative of the voluntary sector and which includes representatives of both local and central Government. It is a requirement that all applications for grants should be supported by a local authority willing to provide not less than 30 per cent. of the total sum requested. Applicants must also show that their proposed activity is supported by voluntary bodies in their areas.

After its consideration of a first round of applications, the fund had awarded 57 grants to several different kinds of development agency. These agencies are widely spread geographically and represent both urban and rural areas. Although the fund committee was, from the start, anxious to recognise the needs of groups representing ethnic minority organisations and to receive applications from them the first response here was disappointing. A second round of applications was, therefore, invited with its emphasis on the desire to encourage and strengthen development work in the ethnic minority voluntary sector. Since then, the fund has offered a further 14 grants for this purpose.

ENVIRONMENT

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the achievements of the urban development corporations since their inception.

Mr. John Patten: When the London Docklands Development Corporation and the Merseyside Development Corporation were created in 1981 their areas were characterised by extensive areas of derelict docks, a severe lack of basic infrastructure and high and continuing job losses. In just five and a half years both corporations have achieved notable success in securing the regeneration of their areas.

LDDC's area covers some 2,065 hectares, forming part of three London boroughs. The corporation has secured private sector development and commitments of over £1·6 billion, giving a gearing ratio of private to public capital investment of 6·4 to 1. Over 300 companies have started in—or moved into—docklands; a total of over 7 million sq ft of non-residential floor space is being developed or is already completed; over 8,000 permanent jobs have been attracted to the area; and about 10,000 new homes have been completed or sites started.

LDDC has itself reclaimed over 320 hectares of land for new uses; it has part funded the docklands light railway, which is due to open later this year; and its total support for community projects has exceeded £10 million. The corporation has now begun major infrastructure schemes in the royal docks.

MDC's area covers 350 hectares of docklands in the local authority areas of Liverpool, Sefton and Wirral. It has a key role in the recovery of the heart of Merseyside, and despite a more difficult economic climate it has achieved considerable success. 166 hectares of dereliction have been reclaimed; 112,000 square metres of old buildings have been refurbished for new uses; some 224 homes are currently being created by new build or conversion; 1,156 new jobs have been created and at least 700 construction workers are employed on MDC schemes at any one time. With major projects including the restoration of the historic Albert dock, improvements to the south docks, and Brunswick Business park, MDC is succeeding in creating a climate of confidence in its area in which he private sector is prepared to invest, and £65 million has so far been spent or committed by the private sector.

Mr. T. F. Smith (Home Purchase)

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the causes for the continued delay in the purchase by Mr. T. F. Smith of his council dwelling at 9A East Dulwich road SE22.

Mr. Tracey: I understand that there have been delays on the part of Southwark borough council in registering its leasehold title to 9A East Dulwich road. The Department has repeatedly pressed the council to resolve the matter.

Oakthorpe Village

Mr. Orme asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he is having regarding assistance to the residents of Oakthorpe village; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Last month I met a delegation from North-West Leicestershire district council led by my hon. Friend the Member for Leicestershire, North-West (Mr. Ashby) to discuss their call for assistance for Oakthorpe. Following the positive response of British Coal in tackling the problems caused by the underground fire and its expenditure of £2 million on essential works, I discussed with the council ways in which it might seek to obtain further assistance from the Government for environmental improvements in the general improvement area it has declared at Oakthorpe.

Thamesmead

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has consulted any of the London boroughs regarding the terms of direction and the terms of disposal of Thamesmead.

Mr. John Patten: No, but my right hon. Friend has closely consulted the London Residuary Body, which has a duty to protect the interests of London's ratepayers.

London Docklands Development Corporation (Land Sales)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the highest figure achieved for the sale of London Docklands Development Corporation land for private housing to date.

Mr. John Patten: Prices vary widely according to the conditions of sale and to the location and size of the site. In some locations, however, such as on the Isle of Dogs, £1·5 million per acre has been obtained. The maximum price for an individual site to date is commercially confidential information.

Shire Counties (Rates)

Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in order the six highest rated shire counties in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chope: Following is the available information:

Highest shire county precepts in England and Wales 1987-88

	Pence
Derbyshire	262·0
Cleveland	252·0
Cumbria	246·5
Nottinghamshire	236·0
Bedfordshire	232·2
Avon	228·5

Merseyside Maritime Museum

Mr. Thornton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are being made to help finance completion of the Merseyside maritime museum.

Mr. John Patten: I have arranged with my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts to transfer £1·4 million from the DoE/UAI cash block to the Office of Arts and Libraries in order to meet the cost of completing the Merseyside maritime museum. The transfer will enable the Office of Arts and Libraries to pay grant-in-aid to the national museums and art galleries on Merseyside Trust, which is managing completion of the contract. The cash limit of the block has been reduced to £366·873 million.

Residuary Bodies (Cash Distribution)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much cash is being distributed to successor authorities by the London and metropolitan residuary bodies; what assessment he has made of the implications this will have for the level of rates in these authorities; and what are the residuary bodies' levies for the 1986-87 and 1987-88 financial years.

Mr. Chope: The financial benefits resulting from the removal of an unnecessary tier of local government are now being realised. This will greatly benefit London borough and metropolitan district councils and their ratepayers.

Within two years of abolition of the Greater London council and the Metropolitan county councils successor boroughs and districts are expected to receive additional cash entitlements totalling £431 million and capital spending power in excess of £754 million.

Ratepayers will benefit directly in three ways. First, the distributed balances of the abolished councils totalling £257 million can be returned to them through lower rates. Secondly, some £174 million in cash receipts received by successor authorities will reduce their need to finance capital expenditure from borrowing or revenue. And thirdly, residuary bodies' levies are significantly lower in 1987-88 than in 1986-87. Indeed in three areas — Tyne and Wear, West Midlands and West Yorkshire — ratepayers will no longer be required to contribute towards the residuary bodies' costs.

Taken together with the Government's estimate of long term annual savings of some £100 million resulting from staff savings it is clear that our decision to remove this unnecessary and wasteful burden of local government bureaucracy was fully justified. In London alone the cash to be distributed by the London Residuary Body in the two years following abolition amounts to around £100 per household.

Subject to audit and certification of the abolished councils' 1985-86 accounts, residuary bodies are in the process of distributing inherited revenue balances after deduction of amounts applied to staff compensation payments resulting from abolition. The timing of distribution is at the discretion of the residuary bodies but they estimate that by 31 March 1988 the following amounts will have been distributed to rating authorities in their areas:

Estimated revenue balances of abolished councils to be distributed to rating authorities by 31 March 1988

	£ million
London	129·0
Greater Manchester	46·3
Merseyside	15·6
South Yorkshire	nil
Tyne and Wear	12·6
West Midlands	46·6
West Yorkshire	7·3

In addition my right hon. Friend has made orders under section 77 of the Local Government Act 1985 requiring residuary bodies to distribute capital moneys among the rating authorities in their areas. The residuary bodies estimate that by 31 March 1988 they will have distributed the following amounts of capital spending power inherited from the abolished councils and accruing from their own disposals of capital assets and repayments of principal on loans.

Estimated capital spending power to be distributed to rating authorities by 31 March 1988 (£ million)

	Inherited from abolished councils	Generated by residuary bodies
London	368·8	263·3
Greater Manchester	62·3	10·4
Merseyside	nil	1·0
South Yorkshire	5·5	2·0
Tyne and Wear	4·6	4·0
West Midlands	4·5	11·1
West Yorkshire	10·6	5·7

The following estimated amounts of capital receipts cash entitlement arising from the same sources will have been distributed to rating authorities by 31 March 1988, after deducting amounts applied by residuary bodies.

Estimated capital receipts cash entitlements to be distributed to rating authorities by 31 March 1988 (£ million)

The levies now announced by each residuary body for the forthcoming financial year, and those for the current year are as follows:

Residuary body levies 1986-87 and 1987-88 (£ million)

	1986-87	1987-88
London	48·2	22·0

Truscon RD27 Houses, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action he is taking in respect of Truscon RD27 houses in Storrington avenue, Liverpool, subsequent to the recent correspondence between his Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State and the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby.

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to his reply, 17 March 1987, c. 439]: We are considering the further material forwarded by the hon. Member together with his request that we review the decision not to designate these properties nationally under the housing defects legislation. I hope to write to the hon. Member shortly.

Thamesmead

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail in the Official Report the valuation that has been placed on the land and buildings at Thamesmead by the district valuer.

Mr. Chope: I shall answer this question shortly.

THE ARTS

Objects in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Cormack asked the Minister for the Arts if he anticipates any call in the near future on the Contingency Reserve for a work of art offered in lieu of inheritance tax.

Mr. Luce: I am very pleased to be able to announce that heritage Ministers have accepted in principle a major Constable painting, "Stratford Mill", known also as "The Young Waltonians". This painting, of the highest quality and importance, has a current market value of £10 million. Under the acceptance-in-lieu procedures agreed in 1985, which allow a call on the reserve, we will be taking steps to acquire it for the nation at a cost of some £5·5 million. This is the most valuable item ever accepted in lieu of tax. In accordance with the wishes of the executors, it will be allocated to the National gallery.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers' Employers

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next proposes to meet the representatives of the teachers' employers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is meeting representatives of the teachers' employers on 26 March.

Overseas Students

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to draw to the attention of overseas students seeking to study for degrees in the United Kingdom a list of institutions offering approved courses of study and certified degrees.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend is considering the possibility of legislation to curb bogus degrees. The British Council is able to offer prospective students information on universities and institutions authorised to award degrees in the United Kingdom by Royal Charter or Act of Parliament.

Boarding Schools

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the cost to his Department of applying to maintained sector boarding schools the 85 per cent. formula for capital funding which currently applies in the voluntary aided sector, assuming expenditure remained at the level of the last financial year for which he has statistical information relating to capital allocations to, and expenditure by, local education authorities in respect of their maintained boarding provisions.

Mr. Dunn: It is not possible to make this calculation, since local education authorities ar not required to submit details of capital spending on individual projects to the Department.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he or any of the Ministers in his Department last met representatives of the Boarding Schools Association to discuss boarding provision in the maintained and independent sectors of education; and what further meetings are planned.

Mr. Dunn: I received a deputation from the Boarding Schools Association in May 1984 and have been in touch with the association by correspondence since then. I have expressed my willingness to meet the association again if it wishes.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list, since 1980, the proposals which have come before him under sections 12 or 13 of the Education Act 1980 for the closure or significant reduction of boarding provision in maintained schools; and what was his decision in each case.

Mr. Dunn: The table lists proposals published under sections 12 and 13 of the Education Act 1980 for the clolsure or discontinuation of boarding provision in maintained schools, and shows in each case the Secretary of State's decision, or local education authority determination in accordance with section 12(7) of the Act. The list excludes special schools.

Voluntary Aided Schools

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will set out in tabular form the cost to public funds for the last five financial years of the 85 per cent. system of funding the capital costs of voluntary aided schools.

Mr. Dunn: The cost to public funds of capital expenditure at voluntary aided and special agreement schools in England over the last five financial years is as follows:

Capital grant to voluntary aided and special agreement schools

Year	England £ million
1981-82	28·7
1982-83	22·2
1983-84	19·0
1984-85	24·7
1985-86	31·0

Bradford University

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the reduction in grants to the University of Bradford for 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: No representation has to date been received in the Department about the University of Bradford's recurrent, equipment or capital grant for 1986-87.

Hearing-Impaired Children

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he intends to amend the Education (Teachers) Regulations 1982 to extend the mandatory requirement to possess a recognised qualification as a teacher of the deaf to teachers working in the peripatetic and advisory services with hearing-impaired children.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend will consider whether the requirement for mandatory qualifications for teachers of the deaf should be extended to cover teachers working in the peripatetic and advisory services. However, any extension could not be done simply by amending the 1982 regulations. It would require an amendment to section 27 of the Education Act 1980 to enable regulations to be made to cover the qualifications of teachers other than those in schools and establishments of further education.

Inspectors (Returns)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil on 6 March, Official Report, column 705-6, concerning returns made by district inspectors of Her Majesty's inspectorate, what separate items of statistical and financial information were given in the returns for the last year to show the distribution of resources and the overall levels of expenditure within a local education authority; whether such information is collected by means of a standard form; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Her Majesty's inspectors sought statistical and financial information from local education authorities covering the range of issues discussed in the report on the effects of local authority expenditure policies on education provision in England, 1985. A standard form was used. Detailed information on actual and estimated education expenditure by individual local authorities is published each year by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy and copies are placed in the Library.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science further to his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil on 6 March, Official Report, columns 705-6, concerning returns made by district inspectors of Her Majesty's inspectorate, if he will review whether parts of the returns containing assessments by inspectors of the appropriateness of provision and the impact of changes may be placed in the Library without statistical information given by local education authorities in confidence; what considerations have been material to such parts of the returns not being pubished; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. The assessment by Her Majesty's inspectors of provision made by individual local education authorities are based on the statistical and financial information they provide and on Her Majesty's inspectors' general knowledge of the authority. Neither of these is complete enough in its coverage to allow judgments to be made about the quality of education in individual LEAs. However, the information from and assessment of all 97 English LEAs, when drawn together and analysed, is able, in the view of Her Majesty's inspectors, to provide a well-founded picture of the general picture and noticeable trends nationally. It is this picture which makes up the reports by Her Majesty's inspectors on the effects of local authority expenditure policies on education provision. The treatment of the background material relating to individual LEAs in confidence ensures a high return from them without which the reports would be considerably diminished. Only in their published inspection reports on education provision in single LEAs are Her Majesty's inspectors able to provide a securely based judgment of efficiency and effectiveness across an individual authority.

TRANSPORT

Docklands Light Railway

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many people he estimates to be employed in the London docklands light railway project.

Mr. David Mitchell: The docklands light railway will employ 102 people when it opens to the public in July. These figures do not include LRT's consultants and the contractors' personnel who have worked on designing and constructing the project.

National Bus Company

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) at what price the Yorkshire Traction company has been sold as one of the National Bus company subsidiaries;

(2) if he will make it his practice to reveal the details of National Bus company subsidiary sales where the sale has been completed.

Mr. Moore: As the right hon. Member will know from the answer given to him on 16 March by my hon. Friend the Miniser of State the prices obtained for individual National Bus Company subsidiaries are confidential while sales of the remaining subsidiaries are in progress. A report will be made to the House in due course on the aggregate proceeds of sale.

Single Track Railway Lines

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 16 March, Official Report, column 392, about railway lines which have been reduced to single track, if he will make it his policy to collect the information for future years.

Mr. Moore: No. As the hon. Member will know from the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister of State on 28 April last, this is not a matter for Her Majesty's Government.

Transport Appraisal

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he proposes to make any changes to the values of time used in transport appraisal in view of the research sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the light of the evidence from this research we intend to make substantial changes to the values of non-working time. We have today published new values in a report "Values for Journey Time Savings and Accident Prevention". A copy has been placed in the Library.

Values associated with time savings, injury and loss of life have been used for many years in economic appraisals of transport policy, projects and operations. The values of time recommended by the Department have been updated regularly to take account of changing prices and income. Values of time spent on such non-work activities as shopping, holidaying and commuting are based on research originally carried out in the 1960s. A new programme of research into the value of this non-working time, using modern techniques and more recent data, has now been completed and the results have been used to formulate the new values given in the report. The research evidence is contained in a report "The Value of Travel Time Savings", which has been published separately by the consortium of researchers who carried out the studies for the Department.

The most significant finding was that people are willing to pay more to reduce the amount of their own time spent travelling. The new values in the report reflect this finding. The report also gives new values for the average cost of casualties. While separate research into this area has also been undertaken, no conclusive empirical evidence has emerged. In these circumstances it is our judgment that, for the present, the weight currently attributed to accident savings relative to time savings should be maintained. The values of accident savings have been derived on this basis, but we will keep this matter under review.

We are concerned to minimise uncertainty on road improvement schemes already at public inquiry or awaiting a final decision from the Secretaries of State for Transport and the Environment. It is therefore important that final decisions on the new values are reached quickly. Before reaching these decisions we propose to have a short period (four weeks) of consultation with experts in the field and others who may wish to comment. Current values of time and accident costs will continue to be used until we make a further announcement on the new values.

The Secretaries of State for Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales will also be considering whether to use the new values in transport investment decisions in their countries. The aim would be to maintain a consistent approach throughout the United Kingdom. With major changes of this kind, we shall of course be looking closely at how the proposals work in practice.

The research represents an important step forward in our understanding of the value people attach to the time they spend travelling outside their working hours. The proposals will properly reflect this new appreciation in our assessments of value for money in transport. The new values of casualty costs underline our continuing commitment to make our roads safer for all users.

Earls Court (Congestion)

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to relieve traffic congestion and nuisance in the Earls Court area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Consultants have been examining the possibility of sharing the west London railway corridor to provide relief for the Earls Court area. Work has progressed far enough to show that a relief road could be provided running mainly in cutting from Shepherds Bush to the River Thames.

The report on the first stage of the west London assessment study has highlighted the severe environmental and safety problems in the Earls Court area. It seems clear that whatever other action may be taken a new route is likely to be the only way of achieving substantial improvement of the environment in the area. I have therefore decided that we should now consult the local planning authorities on a proposal to safeguard the line of a western environmental improvement route. I have today written to ask for their comments on this proposal.

Channel Ferries (Safety)

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Transport which recommendations made by the official inquiry into the capsized ferry European Gateway in 1982 have since been acted upon.

Mr. Moore: Recommendations of courts of formal investigations are carefully considered and all relevant organisations within the industry are consulted before a decision is taken. The European Gateway/Speedlink Vanguard inquiry made 15 recommendations, the most important six of which covered the provision and operation of watertight doors below the waterline, thus addressing a major factor in the loss of the European Gateway — the flooding below the waterline after she was holed in a collision. These recommendations have been implemented for all new ships and virtually implemented or are being discussed internationally for existing ships. The key recommendations which requires the fitting of power operated, watertight doors below the waterline has been implemented for all United Kingdom registered roro ferries.

The full 15 recommendations and the action taken against each are as follows.

Recommendations	Action taken
1. The Department should recognise that modern radar provides an alternative to compass bearings as a means of detecting the risk of collision and should emphasise this in M Notices.	The Department did not accept this premise but an M Notice was issued to draw attention to the proper use of radar as an aid to navigation and in the avoidance of collisions.
2. Funds should be provided for research into the phenomenon of a symmetric flooding of a symmetrical compartment.	Stage 1 of the research project has been completed and stage 2 will commence shortly.
3. Consideration should be given to catering for the possibility of abandoning a ship listing to more than 15°.	For a ship whose keel was laid on or after 1 July 1986 the regulations now require that the lifeboats can be launched when the ship is listed up to 20°.
4. Distribution and use of portable VHF sets should form part of the drill practised at musters.	A ship whose keel was laid on or after 1 July 1986 is required to have an emergency means of two-way communication (which may be fixed or portable or both) between emergency control station, muster and embarkation stations and strategic positions on board.
5. Passenger vessels should carry at least two portable loudhailers for communication with passengers in emergencies	A ship whose keel was laid on or after 1 July 1986 requires either a public address system or some other means of communication.
6. There should be uniformity of practice in the stowage of lifejackets in ships of the same class.	In the final stages of discussions with the Industry.
7. Lifejackets for children and their stowage should be clearly marked "FOR CHILDREN".	It has been agreed with the Industry that new lifejackets presently marked for "persons weighing less than 32 kg" will also have the word "child" stencilled on them. Stowage will be so marked.
8. Distinguishing the stowage position of the safety knife in liferafts by luminous paint.	There is a difficulty in finding a suitable material which retains its luminosity for 12 months when stored in darkness. Meanwhile the position of the knife is being marked by reflective tape or some similar means, on a voluntary basis.
9. Regulations should require that, when practicable, passenger ships should operate with watertight doors closed.	After consultation with the industry my Department has issued written guidance on the provision of access openings in watertight bulkheads of passenger ships and procedures for operating watertight doors. An M Notice on "The operation of watertight doors on passenger ships" has also been issued.
10. Power operation of watertight doors on passenger ships should be mandatory.	The relevant regulations have been amended so that power operation on new ships is a statutory requirement. In addition all existing UK registered passenger ro-ro ferries are now fitted with power operated doors.
11. Regulations should provide for uniformity in the operation of watertight doors.	The UK has taken this matter up with the International Maritime Organisation and it is expected to be agreed at the next session of the appropriate sub-committee.

Recommendations	Action taken
12. Regulations should require watertight doors in machinery spaces to be kept closed in reduced visibility.	After extensive consultation it is expected that the next revision of the regulations dealing with the closing of openings in watertight bulkheads will include these requirements.
13. Regulations should permit selected watertight doors in machinery spaces to be open in clear visibility.
14. Until regulations are changed British passenger ships should comply with Regulation 3 of the Merchant Shipping (Closings and Openings in Hulls and Watertight Bulkheads) Regulations 1980.	An M Notice has been issued to remind owners of passenger ships of the statutory requirements for the closing of openings in watertight bulkheads.
15. Consideration should be given for the counsel to the tribunal to be independent of the Department of Transport.	When there appears to be a conflict of interest it is the Department's view that this can be met by appointing separate representation for the Department's marine directorate.

DEFENCE

Services (Accident Statistics)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place int the Official Report the number of disabling accidents in the Army, Navy and Royal Air Force in the years 1980 to 1986 and the latest available figures for 1987, which resulted in the discharge of the service man or service woman from the particular arm of the service, showing each service and year separately.

Mr. Freeman: The following numbers of United Kingdom regular service personnel have been medically discharged since 1980: principally because of accidental injury, sustained on or off duty.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the number of fatal accidents which occurred to service personnel in the Army, Royal Navy and Royal Air Force in the years 1980 to 1986 and the latest available figures for 1987, showing each arm of the services and each year separately.

Mr. Freeman: The following numbers of United Kingdom regular service personnel have sustained fatal accidents on or off duty, since 1980:

Submarines

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to meet the American submarine authorities responsible for submarine movements in the Clyde coast and Irish sea areas to discuss the potential danger posed by submarines to United Kingdom fishing vessels.

Mr. Stanley: No. The problem of the potential interaction of fishing vessels and submarines in relatively confined areas of sea space is well appreciated by both the RN and the USN.

RAF (Catering)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the extension of contract catering facilities at Royal Air Force bases in Scotland; and if he will list the time scale envisaged for completion of such extensions.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Contract catering was introduced at RAF Turnhouse and RAF Pitreavie Castle last year. We are also examining the possibility of contracting out the catering support function in RAF junior ranks messes throughout the United Kingdom by early 1990. Contracts for this work would be let at RAF Leuchars and RAF Kinloss in mid-1988, but we do not yet know when contracts would be let at other RAF stations in Scotland.

As a separate measure, the Army, which provides catering services at RAF Benbecula, is considering contracting out elements of these services; if this programme proceeds, contracts would be let later this year.

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those operational Royal Air force bases in the United Kingdom which have catering services provided by (a) contract and (b) civilian manpower.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The following stations controlled by RAF Strike Command have catering services provided by contract:

Fylingdales
Manston
Northolt
Turnhouse
West Drayton

There are no RAF stations at which the catering service is wholly civilian manned. Catering is provided by a mixture of civilian and service personnel at the following Strike Command stations in the United Kingdom.

Aldergrove
Barnham

RAF (Civilian Jobs)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the number of civilian jobs presently held in each of the Royal Air Force bases established in Scotland; and if he will list these according to the work involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: On 1 February 1987 the numbers of civilians employed at RAF stations in Scotland were as follows:

RAF Station	Number of civilians employed
Benbecula	2
Buchan	45
Kinloss	199
Leuchars	200
Lossiemouth	281
Machrihanish	29
Pitreavie Castle	12
Prestwick	3
Saxa Vord	25
Stornaway	4
Tain	8
Turnhouse	24
	842

The figures exclude civilian staff employed by the RN and the Army at these units, and also staff employed on behalf of the United States Air Force.

Details of the duties on which individual members of staff are employed at any given time are not held centrally; I regret that this information could not be provided without disproportionate effort.

RAF (Private Contractors)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of savings accrued through the use of private contract facilities at Royal Air Force bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: About £12 million per annum.

Suicides

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the number of suicides in the Army, Royal Navy and Royal Air Force in the years 1980 to 1986 and the latest figures for 1987, showing each arm of the services and each year separately.

Mr. Freeman: There have been the following numbers of suicides by United Kingdom regular service personnel since 1980:

Year	Army	Royal Navy and Royal Marines	Royal Air Force
1980	11	3	10
1981	18	6	8
1982	23	3	14

1984	18	2	9
1985	18	5	7
1986	19	7	12
1987	figures not yet available

Figures for attempted suicides cannot be collated in a meaningful form, because degrees of true intent cannot be judged.

Active Service Fatalities

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the number of active service deaths which occurred in the Army, Royal Navy and Royal Air Force in each of the years 1980 to 1986, and the latest available figures for 1987, showing each arm of the services separately.

Mr. Freeman: There have been the following numbers of active service deaths of United Kingdom regular service personnel since 1980:

Courts Martial

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Official Report the number of convictions arising out of courts martial in each of the armed services which resulted in (a) sentences of detention, (b) discharge and (c) administrative discharge in the years 1980 to 1986 and the latest figure for 1987, showing each year and each sentence group separately.

Mr. Freeman: Administrative discharge is not a sentence awarded by courts martial. Details of sentences of detention and discharge are as follows:

	Royal Navy		Army		Royal Air Force
	Detention	Dismissal from Service	Detention	Dismissal from Service	Detention	Dismissal from Service
1980	8	16	471	303	97	41
1981	5	12	489	354	115	64
1982	9	18	463	429	118	79
1983	8	25	377	336	93	52
1984	11	24	351	355	103	55
1985	12	17	335	345	71	75
1986	10	20	264	258	51	30

Numbers cover awards of detention and dismissal from service including mandatory dismissal after the award of imprisonment by court martial. They do not include such awards from summary trial by commanding officers in the Royal Navy. No figures are yet available for 1987.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many courts martial were conducted in each of the years from 1980 to 1986 and the latest figure for 1987, showing each service separately.

Mr. Freeman: The figures are as follows:

	Royal Navy	Army	Royal Air Force
1980	54	1,123	243
1981	57	1,125	226
1982	49	1,148	239

1986	60	644	144
1987[1]	6	115	27

[1] January and February

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report, the number of appeals (a) made and (b) granted in each of the armed services against a decision of courts martial in each of the years 1980 to 1986 and the latest available figures for 1987.

Mr. Freeman: Although there are arrangements for an accused to petition against the finding or sentence of a court martial, the only route of appeal as such is to the Court Martial Appeal Court. Details of such appeals are as follows:

	Number of appeals made	Number of appeals granted

Prosecutions

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Official Report the number of prosecutions proceeded with for abuse of rank, attacks on superior officers and drug-related problems in the years 1980 to 1986 and the latest figures for 1987, showing each service and each offence separately.

Mr. Freeman: "Abuse of rank" is not an offence within the terms of the Service Discipline Acts. Statistics on offences involving attacks on superior officers could only be provided at disproportionate cost. Figures for convictions for drug-related offences are as follows:

	Royal Navy	Army	Royal Air Force
1980	100	39	14
1981	100	70	32
1982	36	69	17

1984	61	149	143
1985	52	130	77
1986	[1]12	89	20

[1] Complete details for 1986 for the Royal Navy are not yet available. No figures for 1987 are yet available.

Short-Range Missiles

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the Government's latest assessment of the numbers of the short-range missiles held by NATO and Warsaw pact countries.

Mr. Stanley: Information on the numbers of land-based short range missile systems held by NATO and the Warsaw Pact is contained in annex A to volume I of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1986". It is planned to update this information in the next "Statement on the Defence Estimates".

Army Air Corps

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the ratio of pilots currently engaged in flying duties to aircraft in the Army Air Corps.

Mr. Freeman: Approximately 1·1:1. This ratio is planned to rise in the coming years to levels closer to those now found in the Royal Air Force and Fleet Air Arm.

AWACS

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects that the agreement on the airborne warning and control system will be signed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The contract with Boeing Aerospace Company for the purchase of its airborne early warning and control system was signed on 26 February.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated unit cost of the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Nations are currently evaluating the outcome of the project definition phase. It would be inappropriate to publish any cost estimates at this stage.

Exercise Swift Sword

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of exercise Swift Sword.

Mr. Stanley: The net additional cost to the United Kingdom of exercise Swift Sword is estimated at some £4·3 million, most of which resulted from the airlift. The Sultan of Oman's Government, who provided considerable support, also bore significant costs.

Chinook Helicopters

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the vulnerability of Chinook helicopters to ground fire on the central front.

Mr. Stanley: Our support helicopters are not normally expected to operate in situations involving exposure to round fire. However, their vulnerability to such action has been assessed by the Defence Operational Analysis Establishment. The conclusions of that study are classified. We are also aware that American experience in Vietnam showed the Chinook to be able to absorb considerable damage from ground fire while maintaining an operational capability.

5 Airborne Brigade

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual cost of maintaining 5 Airborne Brigade.

Mr. Stanley: The annual running cost of 5 Airborne Brigade is some £80 million at current prices. This figure includes the brigade's personnel costs, as well as such items as spares, maintenance, direct support and the extra costs of airlift for parachute training. It excludes, inter alia,the capital costs of equipment and accommodation.

Army Officers (Ages)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many lieutenant generals in the British Army are over the age of 50 years;

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

"Inside Intelligence"

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General if he will seek an injunction to prevent the publication of the book, "Inside Intelligence", by Anthony Cavendish; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Mr. Cavendish has undertaken to make his manuscript available to the Government. The question of an injunction does not therefore arise at this moment.

Unification Church

Mr. O'Brien asked the Attorney-General how many civil proceedings involving charitable trusts associated with the Unification Church have been completed in the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Information is not held about all proceedings brought against charities generally. However, in the past five years there have been no proceedings in England and Wales concerned with the charitable status of trusts associated with the Unification Church other than the two actions brought by myself in 1984, which are presently pending.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Sudan

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of United Kingdom financial aid to Sudan for the financial years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87; and what are the projected figures for aid to Sudan for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Chris Patten: Gross British bilateral aid to Sudan amounted to £35·0 million in 1984-85 and £36·8 million in 1985-86. These totals include expenditure on disaster relief and food aid. Figures for 1986-87 are not yet available. It is not our practice to reveal forward planning figures but we expect to maintain substantial aid programme to Sudan in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Wilkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give a breakdown of the specific projects of United Kingdom aid and the finance allocated to them in the Sudan during the current financial year.

Mr. Chris Patten: Expenditure in the Sudan on British bilateral capital aid projects and associated technical cooperation is provisionally estimated as follows in the current financial year:

EMPLOYMENT

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Wareing asked the Paymaster General how many people have been inteviewed at Merseyside jobcentres for the job training scheme since its commencement; and how many of these have been found work.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him of 12 March, which explained that the new scheme is not even scheduled to begin in Merseyside until April 1987.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what is the latest estimated financial provision for the new job training scheme for 1987-88; what percentage of that money is additional to existing funding; and how much will be transferred from other projects at present financed by the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 18 March 1987]: Details of expenditure for 1987-88 are set out in Class VII, Vote 5, section L of the Supply Estimates, published on 17 March.

Income Statistics

Ms. Harman asked the Paymaster General what is the average weekly income of residents in the constituencies of Peckham, Southwark and Bermondsey and Dulwich for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lee: The information available comes from the family expenditure survey and relates to average gross weekly income of households in the Greater London area. The family expenditure surveys do not provide income information for smaller areas of Greater London.

Average gross weekly household income

1979	133·20
1980	169·55
1981	193·47
1982	200·63
1983	(a) 220·70
	(b) 218·98
1984	231·27
1985	248·60

Notes:
(1) Under the housing benefit scheme introduced in stages from November 1982 some cash transactions were eliminated leading to a reduction in the level of cash income. For 1983 figures are given (a) covering the same transactions as in the earlier years and (b) on a cash transactions basis consistent with the years 1984 and 1985.
(2) Gross income as defined in the family expenditure survey comprises cash income (for example from employment, investments, pensions and cash social security benefits) together with selected other benefits such as the imputed value of owner occupied accommodation and the value of luncheon vouchers. It does not cover most non-cash benefits such as free prescriptions or benefits in kind (for example free coal, company cars). Gross income will not reflect rent and rates rebates except in so far as described in note 1 above.

Paignton Secretarial College

Mr. Steen asked the Paymaster General how many (a) TOPS and (b) YTS placements have been made with the Manpower Services Commission with Paignton secretarial college in each of the past three years; at what annual cost; how many people so placed subsequently found paid employment; how many places he proposes to support in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I am arranging to meet my hon. Friend to discuss this matter.

Tourism

Mr. Bevan asked the Paymaster General what information he has as to the number of new attractions constructed in each of the tourist board areas in each year since 1978; and if, in each case, he will give details of the principal such attractions.

Mr. Lee: Neither my Department nor the English or Regional tourist boards hold information on all new attractions. Information is, however, available on new developments, or expansion-improvements to existing attractions, which received offers of support under the scheme of selective financial assistance operated under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969. Under this scheme, assistance to attractions has been offered as follows:

Information relating to projects assisted before 1983 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

SCOTLAND

Airborne Fisheries Patrols

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the contract for airborne fisheries patrols between August 1986 and May 1987, giving a summary of the costs of these arrangements, the terms of that contract, the type of aircraft and radar equipment used and the standard of surveillance and enforcement achieved; and if he will list any changes he intends to make to these arrangements from May.

Mr. John MacKay: From 1 September 1986 a Dornier 228 equipped with Bendix 1500 surveillance radar was chartered for the period until 31 may 1987.

The cost of the charter for the six months up to 28 February 1987 was £413,000. As an interim solution the Dornier has achieved a satisfactory level of surveillance and support for protection and enforcement. From 1 June 1987 a Fokker F27-200 will be acquired and thereafter employed in this role. Tenders for operating the Fokker F27 are due to be opened on 20 March 1987 and a decision announced in early-mid April 1987.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the hospital inpatient waiting lists for each health board at the end of September 1986.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Dr. John Mitchell (Complaint)

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland 9 March, Official Report, column 89, he will make a statement on the finding of the Health Service Commissioner for Scotland on the complaint made by Dr. John Mitchell.

Mr. John MacKay: In respect of the failure of the board to provide Dr. Mitchell with an adequate response to the representations he made to it about nurse staffing levels, the complaint was upheld by the Health Service Commissioner for Scotland, who was not able to investigate the complaint about nurse staffing levels. The board has conveyed to Dr. Mitchell its apologies.

Pharmacies

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to reply to the hon. Member for Maryhill regarding correspondence relating to parity of treatment of essential small pharmacies in Scotland compared with those in England and Wales.

Mr. John MacKay: A reply was sent by my noble Friend the Minister of State to the hon. Member yesterday.

Patients (Safety Rails and Gates)

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he is having with Strathclyde regional council social work department and Glasgow district council housing department to improve the provision of safety rails and gates fitted in patients' homes in the light of delays in some patients being discharged from hospital, about which the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill has written to him.

Mr. Ancram: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what savings have resulted to the National Health Service in Scotland from the introduction of the selected list scheme of National Health Service drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The information we have from the Scottish Health Service Common Services Agency shows that the selected list scheme saved £8·1 million on the Scottish NHS drugs bill in the first year of the scheme's operation. In each of the therapeutic groups within the scheme the savings were as follows:

	£000's
Analgesics for mild to moderate pain	2,400
Antacids	465
Benzodiazepine tranquillisers and sedatives	1,995
Cough and cold remedies	2,301
Laxatives	105
Tonics and bitters	35
Vitamins	772

By redirecting the savings achieved towards other forms of patient care this represents a valuable contribution towards the continuing growth of the National Health Service in Scotland.

Community Programme

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a detailed breakdown of the number of full-time and part-time places, respectively, on the community programme in each of the local government regions in Scotland; if he will state the total expenditure on the community programme in each local government region in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 16 March 1987, c. 383]: The information is not available in the precise form requested.

At the end of February 1987 the numbers of full-time and part-time places on the community programme, in each of the Manpower Services Commission's community programme office areas in Scotland, were as shown in the table.

Community programme filled places in Scotland February 1987

Community programme office area	Full-time	Part-time	Total
Glasgow	1,383	5,793	7,176
Lanarkshire	1,061	2,575	3,636

Highlands and Islands	157	927	1,084
SCOTLAND	7,149	24,119	31,268

In the current financial year, expenditure up to 6 March 1987 was £129·4 million. Expenditure by region is not available.

The community programme continues to be successful in meeting its principal objective of providing up to a year's work experience for as many long-term unemployed people as possible within the available resources.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Soviet Union (Visitors Visas)

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens have been refused visitors visas to the Soviet Union during each of the last 24 months for which records are available; how many of those refused were hon. Members or Members of the House of Lords, respectively; how many were spouses of such Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We do not have records of the number of visas refused to British citizens. As far as hon. Members and their spouses are concerned, the only cases of which I am aware in the past two years are those I referred to in my reply to the hon. Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn), on 18 March.

Argentina

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent threats by the Peronist National Council to British property in Argentina.

Mr. Eggar: We have noted the demands of the Justicialist (Peronist) Party for expropriation of British property in Argentina. These demands have been made before. We have no reason to believe they carry any weight with the Argentine Government.

ENERGY

New Mine, Asfordby

Mr. Orme asked the Secretary of State for Energy what progress is being made in the construction of a new mine at Asfordby; what are the projections for employment at the new mine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I am advised by the British Coal Corporation that good progress is being made with the development of the Asfordby mine. Discussions are taking place on manning arrangements.

Pressurised Water Reactors

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether he will place in the Library a copy of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's report of work carried out at the United States Oak Ridge National Laboratories into risk of damage to the core of pressurised water reactors;

(2) whether he will ask the British ambassador in Washington to secure from the Library of Congress under freedom of information legislation a copy of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's report of work carried out at the United States Oak Ridge National Laboratories into risk of damage to the core of pressurised water reactors for use by Government Departments in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 5 March 1987, c. 659]: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the draft report prepared on a commercial basis by the systems reliability service of the UKAEA for the US Nuclear Regulatory Commission reviewing certain aspects of an Oak Ridge National Laboratory study entitled "Precursors to Potential Core Accidents 1969-79 A Status Report". It was not a complete review of the precursor work and was not taken beyond the draft stage because USNRC was satisfied with the information contained in the draft report.

Although it is not UKAEA policy to publish work undertaken on a commercial basis for a customer, it sought and obtained permision from USNRC for its wider release in response to a specific request from Friends of the Earth and made it available to it at the Sizewell inquiry.

There is no need for me to ask the British ambassador in Washington to secure a copy of the UKAEA's report from the Library of Congress.

WALES

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the hospital in-patient waiting list for each health district at the end of September 1986, and also the out-patient waiting lists.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The required information is given in the following table:

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Raffan asked the Secretary of State for Wales when he will be laying the 1987-88 Welsh rate support grant report.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I am today laying the 1987-88 Welsh rate support grant report, together with the 1986-87 supplementary report, before the House of Commons. I gave full details of the 1987-88 RSG settlement for Wales in my statement to the House on 16 December; no changes have subsequently been made to the settlement since my statement. There will be a full debate on the reports in due course.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Vosper Shiprepairers Ltd.

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when British Shipbuilders sold Vosper Shiprepairers Ltd. to the company's management; and if there were any other bids for the company.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Yes.

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the price received by British Shipbuilders when it sold Vosper Shiprepairers Ltd. to the management of the company in a management buyout;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the conditions of sale when British Shipbuilders sold Vosper Shiprepairers Ltd.;

(3) what was his Department's estimated value of Vosper Shiprepairers at the time of the sale to the management;

(4) what financial assistance British Shipbuilders provided to the management of Vosper Shiprepairers Ltd. to buy out their company.

Mr. Giles Shaw: British Shipbuilders sold Vosper Shiprepairers Ltd. on the best terms available and at a cost less than the option of closure. The terms and conditions of sale are commercially confidential.

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the involvement of British Shipbuilders in Vosper Shiprepairers Ltd. since VSL was privatised.

Mr. Giles Shaw: All dealings between British Shipbuilders and Vosper Shiprepairers Ltd. since privatisation have been on strictly commercial terms.

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money is still owed by the management and shareholders of Vosper Shiprepairers Ltd. to British Shipbuilders.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Any loan from British Shipbuilders to Vosper Shiprepairers Ltd. was secured and on commercial terms.

Industrial Training Boards

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce legislation to oblige companies in their annual returns to disclose sums paid to industrial training boards.

Mr. Howard: No.

Far East (Imports)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to control imports from South Korea and Taiwan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government's aim is to obtain real and lasting access to the markets of these countries rather than to restrict access to our own. However, my Department will continue to monitor closely all aspects of our commercial relations including the trend in imports. The Community will be pursuing these matters in the Uruguay round of trade negotiations and has the right to take remedial action under the provisions of the general agreement on tariffs and trade where appropriate.

Textiles and Clothing (Education)

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the centres of textile and clothing education which have benefited from the textile and clothing education equipment scheme, the amount of cash support requested by each establishment and the amount of money awarded to each establishment.

Rolls-Royce

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a further statement on the capital structure of Rolls-Royce.

Mr. Pattie: As stated by my right hon. Friend in his reply to his hon. Friend the Member for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Warren) on 18 December 1986, at columns 607-8, as part of the arrangements for and at the time of the offer for sale the Government intend to subscribe an amount of new shares which will give net proceeds to the company equal to the net borrowings of the company and its subsidiaries (including obligations under finance leases) as recorded in the consolidated audited balance sheet at 31 December 1986.

The directors of Rolls-Royce plc have today approved their accounts for 1986. These show that as on 31 December 1986 the net borrowings were £283 million, made up as follows:

	£ million	£ million
Bank loans, overdrafts and other borrowings
falling due within one year	171
falling due after more than one year	79
		250

The new ordinary shares which will be subscribed by the Government in line with the arrangements described (and which will be subscribed conditional on the offer for sale being completed) will form part of the shares made available under the offer for sale.

Director General of Telecommunications

Mrs. Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whom he intends to appoint as Director General of Telecommunications when the term of appointment of Professor Bryan Carsberg expires on 30 June.

Mr. Channon: I am reappointing Professor Carsberg as Director General of Telecommunications for a further period of five years. The new period of appointment will run from 1 July 1987, when his current term expires.

Since his initial appointment in 1984, Professor Carsberg has demonstrated his qualities as a very successful Director General. He has carried out his wide-ranging duties with professionalism and great ability. I am sure that his authority and wide experience in the telecommunications sector will continue to be appreciated by the operators, service providers and users in the next five years.

Budget

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what effect he estimates the Budget proposals will have on the manufacturing industries in the north-west region during the remainder of the current year.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend's budget proposals are of substantial benefit to manufacturing industry in the north-west, by reinforcing economic and financial stability; by making possible a further reduction in interest rates; by giving individual taxpayers an added incentive to make the most of their skills and abilities at all levels in industry; and by further improving the fiscal treatment of small businesses.

Steel Industry

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the implications for Ravenscraig of the Eurofer negotiations.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As I said in the House of Commons on Monday 16 March, at column 698, in answer to the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith), no capacity reductions from the British Steel Corporation were included in the Eurofer proposals; the Government are fully committed to the five integrated plants strategy as agreed in August 1985.

Lonrho plc

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received any representations in relation to a possible breach by Lonrho plc of sections 204 to 206 of the Companies Act 1985 in relation to share dealings in House of Fraser plc during the period from the date of the inpector's interim report into share dealings in House of Fraser to the date of its acquisition by Al Fayed Investment and Trust (UK) Limited.

Mr. Howard: Yes. Representations have been received and are under consideration.

Motor Cars (Advertisements)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek powers to instruct car manufacturers to take road safety and national speed limits into consideration when advertising their products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I see no need for new powers. There are already controls over the way that motor cars can be advertised which include safeguards against undue emphasis on top speed and fast driving. The Independent Broadcasting Authority vets all advertisements before they are broadcast on independent television. The authority refuses any advertisement which might encourage illegal or unsafe driving practices. It also controls radio advertising. Advertisements in other media are subject to the British code of advertising practice which is administered by the Advertising Standards Authority. Among other things, the code requires that advertisements should not contain anything which is likely to bring the law into disrepute or incite anti-social behaviour; nor should they show or advocate dangerous or unsafe practices, except in the context of the promotion of safety.

The ASA is prepared to deal with complaints that the code is not being followed and will take action to deal with any breaches of it.

ECGD (Losses)

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what losses were sustained by the Export Credits Guarantee Department in covering commercial risks in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: ECGD provided £54·9 million for private buyer risks in the 1985-86 accounts. This represented ECGD's best estimate of the eventual loss on business insured in 1985-86. This provision will be adjusted in future years in the light of the most up-to-date information. ECGD paid claims of £90·3 million and recovered £21·7 million in 1985-86 in respect of private buyer causes of loss although most of these amounts relates to business insured in earlier years.

Regional Aid

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a table showing at 1986 prices how much has been spent on regional aid to industry in each financial year since 1978-79, to each of the English regions, Wales and Scotland, indicating through which agencies this finance was spent.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is as follows:

[5] Certain TTWAs in the west midlands were designated as assisted areas on 29 November 1984.

The items included in the expenditure are regional development grants and regional selective assistance, expenditure on land and factories by the English Industrial Estates Corporation, the Scottish and Welsh Development Agencies, the Development Board for Rural Wales, and the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

The agencies through which this expenditure was incurred are as follows:

English regions:
The Department of Trade and Industry and the English Industrial Estates Corporation.

Scotland:

Rover Group

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his statement about the Rover Group on 15 December 1986, Official Report, column 348, what progress has been made in the discussions with the European Community Commission.

Mr. Channon: My hon. Friend the Minister of State Department of Trade and Industry informed the House on 13 January at column 140, that the sale of Leyland Bus to a management-led consortium has been completed. I informed the House on 19 February at columns 1059-60 that the Government had accepted Rover Group's recommendation that Leyland Trucks, DAF Trucks and Freight Rover should combine to form a new Anglo-Dutch joint venture; that the Government had notified the EC Commission of our intention to fund the write-off of the accumulated debts from Leyland Bus and Leyland Trucks left in Rover Group and the restructuring costs resulting from their sale; and that normal procedures were in train. On 6 March I advised the House that the total costs were calculated at £680 million. I am now pleased to confirm to the House that these procedures have reached a satisfactory conclusion. It is intended that the Government will subscribe for £680 million of new shares in Rover Group shortly.

Textiles

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will give the volume of imported wool textile products into the United Kingdom for each of the last 20 years expressed as a percentage of the total trade in such products;

(2) what percentage of United Kingdom exports was contributed by the wool textile industry in each of the last 10 years;

(3) what, in constant value prices, has been the level of (a) wool textile production of the United Kingdom and (b) imports of wool textile products in each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 16 March 1987, c. 364]: Information requested on United Kingdom wool textile production beyond 1973 and imports of wool textile products beyond 1970 are not available.

Import figures are available on current value prices only. The available information is as follows:

NATIONAL FINANCE

Liverpool (Rates)

Mr. Wareing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount of payments in respect of contributions in lieu of rates on Crown property withheld by the Treasury valuer from the Liverpool city council during the period 1 April to 14 June 1985 when the local authority delayed setting a rate; and what amount of interest accrued to his Department on the sum withheld.

Mr. MacGregor: Main payments in respect of contributions in lieu of rates are normally made bi-annually, on 29 May and 29 October; with the first payment equal to half the amount claimed by the local authority for the year as a whole. In 1985, Liverpool city council did not submit a claim until 20 June and payment of £1,663,703 was made on 1 July. It is not possible to give a fixture for the amount of interest involved since the calculation would depend on hypothetical assumptions about how central Government's financing would have been carried out in other circumstances.

Russell David Construction Ltd.

Mr. Ashton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will investigate the loss of the 714C tax exemption certificate awarded to Russell David Construction Ltd. of Crabtree Park, Worksop, by the Retford tax office which was sent but lost in the post; if he will issue another certificate forthwith.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Excise Duties

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the consultation exercise on the structure of the wine and made-wine duties carried out by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Brooke: The extensive consultation established that all the options for restructuring the wine and made-wine duties have drawbacks. In view of this, and with the drinks trade benefiting from a second successive duty standstill, my right hon. Friend decided that it would not be appropriate to alter the existing structure and relativities this year.

Industrial and Commercial Statistics

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for table 14.3 of the "Annual Abstract of Statistics 1987" the division between oil companies, financial companies, and so on and industrial and commercial companies.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 13 March 1987, c. 318]: Separate figures for oil companies are not available. A subdivision of the corporate sector between financial and industrial and commercial (including oil) is given in the tables.

Current Account Statistics

Mr. Shore asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on what the surplus or deficit on current account of the United States of America, Germany, Japan, France, Italy and the United Kingdom has been in each year since 1973; and what is the forecast for 1987.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Madden asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total capital allocation made to local authorities in England and Wales in each year since 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 18 March 1987]: The present control system under which capital allocations have been distributed was introduced in 1981-82. The figures for capital allocations on the main local authority cash limits in England (DOE/LA1 and DOE/UA1) and Wales are provided in the table. Over this same period spending power from receipts has built up to around £2,700 million a year in England and £135 million a year in Wales. As a result gross capital spending has grown 33 per cent in England and 46 per cent. in Wales.

NORTHERN IRELAND

St. Thomas and Lady Edith Dixon Hospital

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if any restrictive covenants exist which affect the proposal to sell the Sir Thomas and Lady Edith Dixon hospital, Cairndhu, Larne, Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: There are no such restrictive covenants.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to transfer the Sir Thomas and Lady Edith Dixon hospital, Cairndhu, Larne, Northern Ireland outright to Larne borough council.

Mr. Needham: No action can be taken on the disposal of this property until a ruling of the Chancery Court in Northern Ireland is known.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the implications of the recital in the introductory part of the conveyance for the disposal of the Sir Thomas and Lady Edith Dixon hospital, Cairndhu, Larne, Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: No assessment has been made pending the ruling by the Chancery Court in Northern Ireland.

Adopted Persons

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what facilities exist for adopted persons to identify and locate their natural parents; if he proposes any new legislation in this respect; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Each adopted person is listed in the adopted children register and the register of births, linked by a further record. Section 23 of the Adoption Act (NI) 1967 prohibits the disclosure of information from this record which would enable an adopted person to link his entry in the adopted children register with the corresponding entry in the register of births except by authority of a court order. However, an adopted person with sufficient independent information to identify the entry in the register of births may obtain his original birth record which identifies his natural parents. The question of locating his natural parents is a matter for the person himself to pursue.

A proposal for a draft Adoption (NI) Order, which was published for consultation on 20 October 1986, includes provision to give all adopted adults full access to their original birth records.

Driving Licences

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will accept colour photographs with applications for new driving licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: No. Technical tests carried out by the Department of Environment for Northern Ireland as licensing authority indicate that the engraving equipment used in reproducing the appliant's photograph on to the driving licence offers a clearer image from a black and white photograph. The Department will continue to explore with the photographic industry the suitability of colour photographs.

Elderly Mentally Infirm Persons

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many beds are available for the elderly mentally infirm in Ards district; what are their locations; how many elderly mentally infirm patients from Ards district are in Downshire hospital, Downspatrick; and what proposals he has to increase the number of beds for the elderly mentally infirm in Ards district.

Mr. Needham: There ar no beds specifically designated for the elderly mentally infirm in the Ards district. The number of such patients in the Downshire hospital is not known but the latest available figures show that there were 361 in-patients aged 65 or over in the hospital at 31 December 1986.

The eastern health and social services boards area strategic plan for the period 1987-92 contains a number of proposals for the development of new facilities including a 45-place residential home for the mentally confused elderly in the North Down and Ards area. It is a matter for the board to determine the priority to be accorded to each proposal.

Political Meeting, Bambridge

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he authorised a civil servant to address a recent meeting held in Bambridge, County Down, by the Social Democratic and Labour party; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: No member of the Northern Ireland Office or of a Northern Ireland Department addressed such a meeting.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Oils and Fats

10. Mr. Parry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received concerning the proposed EEC tax on oils and fats.

Mr. Jopling: I have received many expressions of opposition to the European Commission's proposal for an oils and fats tax from representatives of our food industry and consumers, and from the Governments of certain of our trading partners. I have assured those concerned of the British Government's opposition to the Commission's proposal.

56. Mr. Alton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact upon producers, processors and consumers of the introduction of an oils and fats tax.

Mr. Gummer: The Commission proposals for a flat-rate levy would increase prices, particularly of the cheaper oils and the products made from them, and would distort competition between different oils and fats and between products. At the rate currently envisaged, it could lead to an increase of about three quarters of 1 per cent. in average retail food prices.

Freezer Trawlers

15. Mr. Wareing asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many freezer vessel licences he anticipates issuing during 1987.

Mr. Gummer: As I made clear in my written answer of 15 January to my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, South (Mr. Powley), the Fisheries Ministers have decided to make available a total of five new licences for freezer trawlers for the pelagic fisheries, of which two have been assigned to the vessels already operating on the fisheries on a provisional basis.

Mr. Wallace asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North, 17 February, Official Report, columns 601-2, he will state the factors which he treats as relevant in determining the allocation of the additional licences for freezer trawlers for the pelagic fisheries.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Food Prices

16. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for each year from 1983 to 1986 what was the rise in (a) the price of food and (b) the retail prices index.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The annual average increase in retail prices in percentage terms for each year from 1983 to 1986 for food was 3·2, 5·6, 3·1 and 3·3. For all items the figures were 4·6, 5·0, 6·1 and 3·4. As my hon. Friend will see, food prices have remained stable over this period.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will show the average price to the consumer of (a) a pint of milk, (b) a 2lb loaf of bread and (c) a pint of beer in 1960, 1970, 1980 and 1986; and if he will also show the percentage increase between 1980 and 1986 in each case.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 13 March 1987 c. 339]: The readily available information is set out in the table. An index of prices is given for beer because national average prices are not calculated for this item.

Land Use

17. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met the president of the National Farmers' Union to discuss alternative land use.

Mr. Jopling: I continue to keep in touch with the NFU on a wide range of subjects, including alternative land use.

23. Mr. Terlezki asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is now in a position to announce his detailed proposals on alternative land usage.

Mr. Jopling: As already announced, the Government have published a set of documents entitled "Farming and Rural Enterprise" which include details of my proposals on alternative land use. Copies are available from the Vote Office.

34. Mr. Jackson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further steps he is taking to encourage diversification in the use of land.

Mr. Jopling: I announced on 9 February a package of measures, worth £25 million a year when fully operational, to encourage the alternative use of agricultural land and to assist diversification. These are described in the set of documents published by the Government on 10 March and entitled "Farming and Rural Enterprise". Copies are available from the Vote Office.

Food Aid

18. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the scheme to give free European Community food to the needy.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn).

24. Mr. Dixon asked the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to ensure that United Kingdom charities do not lose financially as a result of the EEC food aid scheme.

Mr. Jopling: The Government made clear to the charitable organisations concerned from the outset of the scheme that the Community arrangements would not provide for financial support to charities for distribution of the foodstuffs from their own distribution points. I am not prepared to make further provisions from national funds.

42. Mr. Conway asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress made by charities in distributing free food to the needy.

59. Mr. Baldry asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the latest amounts of food products authorised for release under the European Economic Community food aid scheme.

62. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will report on the progress made by charities in distributing free food from the European Economic Community.

Mr. Jopling: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Spencer).

70. Mr. Litherland asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the latest amounts of beef distributed in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other European Economic Community member states under the European Economic Community food aid scheme.

Mr. Jopling: No fully comparable date are readily available, but the following tonnages of releases in individual member states were reported to the Beef Management Committee by the Commission on 3 March.

	Number
Belgium	49
Denmark	5
Germany	182
Greece	61
Spain	Nil
France	1,501

	Number
Ireland	662
Italy	87
Netherlands	10
United Kingdom	318

The most recent figure for authorised releases in the United Kingdom is 962 tonnes, but I do not have the more up-to-date figures for other member states.

Mr. Corbett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list those organisations in Birmingham, by each parliamentary constituency, responsible for the distribution of surplus European Economic Community butter, cheese and beef; and on what dates distribution of each commodity began in each constituency.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the distribution of free EEC butter to the needy in Waltham Forest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 16 March 1987, c. 421]: As I explained in my reply earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn), a large number of letters have been received. I have no breakdown of these by particular geographical area: the cost of preparing such a breakdown would be disproportionate.

Rural Diversification

19. Mr. Lofthouse asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in how many cases proposals for rural diversification on agricultural land, over which his Department has been consulted, have been refused.

Mr. Jopling: I regret that this information is not available. But it is, of course, Government policy to foster diversification in rural areas.

57. Mr. Soames asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is in a position to announce his detailed plans for aiding rural diversification by giving help and encouragement to farmers to market more of their own produce.

Mr. Jopling: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. Friend the Minister of State gave to my hon. Friend the Member for the New Forest (Mr. McNair-Wilson) on 19 February. I propose to issue a consultation document in the next few weeks which will set out in greater detail our proposals for assisting rural diversification.

EC (Cereals Land-diversion Scheme)

20. Mr. Leigh asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress he has made in introducing a cereals land-diversion scheme in the European Economic Community.

Mr. Gummer: The socio-structures regulation recently agreed by the Agriculture Council requires member states to introduce schemes to encourage producers to reduce output of certain surplus commodities, including cereals, by 20 per cent. This will provide an opportunity for member states to encourage cereals land diversion.

Agriculture Policy

21. Mr. Favell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish a detailed policy document for agriculture.

54. Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will publish a detailed policy document for agriculture.

Mr. Jopling: "Farming UK" was published on 10 March. It is available separately, or as part of the package "Farming and Rural Enterprise", of which copies are obtainable from the Vote Office.

Wheat

22. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much he estimates wheat yields will increase over the next decade as a result of scientific progress.

Mr. Gummer: Future trends in yields are always difficult to predict, but varietal improvements and the uptake of new husbandry techniques could contribute to a 2 per cent. per annum increase in wheat yields over the next decade.

28. Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food upon what evidence with regard to recent trends in wheat prices and production he bases his policy of reducing prices in real terms as a means of curbing surpluses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Since the mid-1970s the real producer price per tonne of wheat in the Community has declined on average by more than 2·5 per cent. a year. However, due to productivity improvements and rising yields, the real return per hectare actually increased. Not surprisingly, the long-term trend in the area of the crop shows little change. Price reductions sufficient to reduce returns per hectare will therefore be needed to achieve a better market balance.

Farm Forestry

25. Mr. Lord asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to assist farmers with the establishment and management of broadleaved woodland, and with the marketing of the timber produced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government have taken a number of steps to encourage broadleaved woodland.

As well as continuing the higher rates of forestry grant for the broadleaf content in mixed woodland, we introduced the broadleaved woodland grant scheme in 1985 which provides for even greater incentives for the planting and regeneration of broadleaved trees on their own. Our farm woodland scheme, put out to consultation last week, will also give special encouragement to broadleaved trees.

In addition, we are contributing funds to experimental projects designed to encourage farmers to develop a self-financing woodland management cycle, in some cases by bringing existing broadleaved woodland back into productive use and by co-ordinating marketing of the timber produced.

63. Mr. Colvin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is now in a position to give further details of his proposals to provide for annual payments for farm forestry schemes.

Mr. Jopling: A consultation document on the farm woodland scheme was included in the "Farming and Rural Enterprise" package we published last week. Copies are available in the Vote Office.

30. Mr. Pollock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is now in a position to announce his detailed plans on farm forestry.

Mr. Jopling: A consulation document on the farm woodland scheme as included in the "Farming and Rural Enterprise" package we published last week. Copies are available in the Vote Office.

Common Agricultural Policy

26. Mr. Deakins asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further steps are being taken by the EEC Agriculture Council to reduce the cost of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Jopling: The Agriculture Council will start its consideration of the Commission's proposals for the 1987-88 CAP price fixing at its meeting on 30-31 March. If eventually adopted, the Commission estimates that these proposals would result in savings to the CAP of 1·1 billion ecu (£692 million) in 1987 and 3·7 billion ecu (£2,647 million) in 1988.

Fisheries Stock Management

27. Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current system of fisheries stock management.

Mr. Gummer: The current system of fish stock management under the common fisheries policy, which is based on total allowable catches and quotas allocated between the member states, supplemented by appropriate technical conservation measures, represents a major achievement of the present Government and has laid the foundations for a healthy and viable fishing industry.

Fishing Licences (Falkland Islands)

29. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with the Falkland Islands Government concerning the allocation of fishing licences.

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend and I have had no such discussions.

EC (Butter Exports)

31. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration has been given by the Council of Ministers to the Commission proposal that member states should finance the export rebates on butter exports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Commission has proposed a programme for disposal of butter stocks, including exports, in 1987 and 1988, with reimbursement to member states in four instalments from 1989 to 1992. The EAGGF will contribute to the interest costs borne by member states as a result of the delay in reimbursement. This proposal was agreed in principle by the Council of Agricultue Ministers on 9-10 February and, following further discussion in the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers on 9 March, is expected to be adopted shortly.

Cereals

32. Mr. Thurnham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further representations he has received relating to compulsory quotas on cereals.

Mr. Gummer: I continue to receive representations for and against compulsory quotas on cereals from many different sources. I continue to believe that such quotas would be damaging to the United Kingdom and impossible to police in the Community.

49. Mr. Hardy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total volume of cereal consumption and production within (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the Economic Community as a whole during the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Gummer: The most recent information available is for the 1985-86 season and is as follows:

Million tonnes

	Cereal production in 1985	Cereal consumption[1]
United Kingdom	22·5	19·1
European Community (EC10)	139·0	115·1

[1] Includes imported cereals.

Animal Diseases

33. Mr. Key asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he proposes to take to seek to reduce outbreaks of classical and African swine fever, foot and mouth disease and swine vesicular disease through the control of household scraps.

48. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he proposes to take to seek to reduce outbreaks of classical and African swine fever, foot and mouth disease and swine vesicular disease through the control of household scraps.

Mr. Donald Thompson: An order came into force on 10 March banning the feeding to livestock or poultry of household scraps which contain or have been in contact with meat. The new legislation means that it is now illegal to feed any waste food unless it has been processed by a licensed waste food operator. This measure is designed to reduce the risk of disease outbreaks like the outbreaks of classical swine fever last year (the first since 1971) which were linked with the feeding of unprocessed scraps of pigmeat products.

Rhizomania

35. Mr. Forth asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer of 2 March, Official Report, column 525, what consultations he has had with interested bodies on measures to control rhizomania.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Following some preliminary discussions, we are now arranging a consultative meeting with the interests affected by the proposals announced in my previous statement. There has, of course, been a series of consultations with trade and producer organisations since we first began to develop measures against rhizomania in 1983.

Pigmeats

36. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the way in which the sale of pigmeats is promoted in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: It is important to promote sales of our pigmeat if we are to increase competitiveness in home and overseas markets. I have been impressed by the activities of, amongst others, the Meat and Livestock Commission, Food From Britain and the Bacon and Meat Manufacturers Association. But there will be a constant need on the part of all concerned to review and improve their efforts to ensure continuing effectiveness.

Fishing Industry

37. Mr. George Howarth asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had regarding the impact on the fishing industry, of the introduction of light dues.

Mr. Gummer: My Department and other Fisheries Departments have been closely involved with the Department of Transport in its consideration of the use which fishing vessels make of coastal navigation aids, and the impact which an extension of light dues liability to fishing vessels might have on the industry. On 12 March my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport announced in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. McQuarrie) that he would be consulting the fishing industry about the scale of charges and appropriate administrative arrangements.

38. Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he proposes to compensate the Grimsby fishing fleet for the loss of fishing opportunities and income consequent on the reduced North sea quotas for 1987.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave him to a similar question on 19 February.

Radiation

39. Mr. Wood asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to publish a comprehensive analysis of the results of radionuclide levels of food, animals and agricultural products following the Chernobyl accident.

58. Mrs. McCurley asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to publish a comprehensive analysis of the results of radionuclide levels in foods, animals and agricultural products following the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friends to the publication "Radionuclide Levels in Food, Animals and Agricultural Products: Post Chernobyl Monitoring in England and Wales", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. This gives the result of sampling from May to the beginning of December 1986. The purpose of this report is to make results available in a manageable format for researchers and others who wish to have the raw data. We do not propose to publish a comprehensive analysis of these results but, as the introduction to the report makes clear, they show that, with the exception of sheepmeat in certain areas for which special action has been taken, radionuclide levels in food, animals and agricultural products were below those upon which intervention to protect public health would have been necessary.

Milk Quotas

40. Mr. Knox asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement about the operation of milk quotas.

Mr. Gummer: I again refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave him on 22 January. I have nothing further to add at present.

44. Sir John Farr asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the operation of milk quotas in other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Gummer: The EC Commission is responsible for ensuring compliance with Community regulations, but we take a keen interest in the operation of milk quotas in other EC member states in order to see that they are being properly applied throughout the Community.

61. Mr. McLoughlin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what impact he estimates the temporary suspension of quota with compensation scheme will have on the income of the average United Kingdom dairy producer with (a) 40 cows and (b) 80 cows.

Mr. Gummer: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the member for Bexhill and Battle (Mr. Wardle).

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

41. Sir Hector Monro asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, further to his answer of 19 February, Official Report, column 791, he has made any assessment of the number of environmentally sensitive areas likely to result from the increased funding of £7 million announced on 9 February.

Mr. Jopling: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given on 17 February 1987, at column 603, to my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson).

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what meetings have been held between his staff and representatives of the internal drainage boards, water authorities and local authorities in environmentally sensitive areas, to discuss the management of water levels in such areas; and whether he will enter into agreements with the relevant bodies to ensure that their activities meet the management objectives of environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We are in close and regular contact with water and drainage authorities about the operation of environmentally sensitive areas. Where these bodies own land which is agriculturally managed, ESA agreements will be available to them or their tenants. In all cases such bodies are required under section 22 of the Water Act 1973 as amended by section 48 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 to further conservation by adhering to guidelines jointly published by my Department and the Department of the Environment. These guidelines are being revised to include, inter alia, provisions specifically relating to the protection of environmentally sensitive areas. A draft of the new guidelines was circulated to all interested parties, including voluntary conservation bodies, last year and no substantive amendments to the sections on environmentally sensitive areas were received.

Farmers (Incomes)

43. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to protect the real level of income of small farmers.

Mr. Gummer: The Government's policy of reducing agricultural surpluses and their associated budgetary costs, and bringing supply and demand into better balance, offers the best prospect for the long-term viability of all those involved in the agriculture industry.

Agricultural Land (Rating)

45. Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received seeking the rating of agricultural land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has received one letter over the past year advocating the rating of agricultural land.

Sea Fish Industry Authority

46. Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to extend the role and increase the staffing of the Sea Fish Industry Authority.

Mr. Gummer: No.

72. Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what changes to the Sea Fish Industry Authority grant scheme he is considering.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I have today given to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Duffy).

Milk Outgoers Scheme

47. Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest information on the take-up of the milk outgoers scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The closing date for submission of applications under the Community outgoers scheme was 15 February 1987. By this date 425 applications for 76·9 million litres had been submitted. Of these, 24 worth 3·9 million litres had been withdrawn and a further 40 worth 14·7 million litres were awaiting landlord's consent. The final uptake under the scheme is not yet known because these figures are subject to adjustment in the light of withdrawals and landlords' consents which may be received after the closing date.

Farm Grants

50. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farm grants have been made under section 22 of the Agriculture Act 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None so far since section 22 does not become operative until orders have been made under it. We hope to lay these later this year.

Green Pound

51. Mr. Cash asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received calling for a green pound devaluation.

60. Mr. Andrew Stewart asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received calling for a green pound devaluation.

65. Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the present value of the green pound; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I have received a number of such representations. I am considering what action to take in the context of the forthcoming price fixing but am concerned that the outcome on green currencies generally should be equitable to our farmers and traders who are adversely affected by the current disparities.

Farmers (Liabilities)

52. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers had liabilities between 50 and 100 per cent. of assets in 1979; and how this figure compares with that for the latest available period.

Mr. Donald Thompson: From the farm business survey it is estimated that the percentages of farms in England with total external liabilities equal to or exceeding 50 per cent. of total assets, 1979 and 1986, according to tenure were:

All Farm Types (excluding Horticulture)	Owner Occupied		Tenanted		Mixed-Tenure		All Types of Tenure
	1979	1986	1979	1986	1979	1986	1979	1986

Note: Figures relate to closing valuations of farm accounting years ending average in February.

Exchange Rate

53. Mr. Temple-Morris asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications for the United Kingdom's agriculture industry of the current level of exchange rate fluctuations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: Because fixed green rates are used to convert CAP prices from ecu into national currencies, agricultural producers benefit from CAP support prices which are not generally affected by exchange rate fluctuations. In order to ensure that the relative terms of trade in agricultural products are also not affected by exchange rate fluctuations, movements in the value of sterling (and other EC currencies) are reflected in changes in the monetary compensatory amounts (mca). In the United Kingdom, these are currently charged on exports and paid on imports and are recalculated weekly.

Council of Ministers

55. Mr. Livsey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline the achievements of the Council of Ministers' since the beginning of 1987.

Mr. Gummer: In 1987, the Council of Agriculture Ministers has successfully completed the implementing arrangements for the reforms of the milk and beef regimes, as well as the package of socio-structural measures, all of which were agreed in principle in the December 1986 Agriculture Council under the presidency of my right hon. Friend the Minister. The Council has also reached agreement on monetary compensatory amounts for pigmeat, eggs and poultry following the 12 January EMS realignment; and on the use of intervention stores to provide food for the needy, who were suffering from the effects of exceptionally cold weather in January.

Dairy Industry

64. Mr. Latham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on the latest state of trade in the dairy sector.

Mr. Gummer: Detailed information on United Kingdom and EC trade in dairy products is given in Overseas Trade Statistics in the United Kingdom and Eurostat External Trade — Analytical Tables, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. However, the following tables give details of the United Kingdom's and EC's total trade in dairy products in each of the years 1980 to 1986.

Horticulture Industry

66. Mrs. Roe asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the performance of the vegetable sector of the horticulture industry in 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan).

"Home Defence and the Farmer"

67. Mr. Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response has been received from the farming community to the publications of his Department's advisory leaflet "Home Defence and the Farmer."

Mr. Donald Thompson: The advisory leaflet "Civil Defence and the Farmer" was published by my Department in June 1985. To date 3,750 copies at £1·50 each have been sold to the public.

EC (Two-tier Pricing)

68. Mr. Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what futher representations he has received on the implications of adopting a policy in the European Economic Community of two-tier pricing.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Scarborough (Sir Michael Shaw).

Hill Farmers

69. Mr. Kennedy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he wil give the latest estimates of the prospects for hill farmers' incomes in 1987.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to my earlier reply today to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace).

Milk Producers (Inspections)

71. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further representations he has received on the proposals to require milk producers to pay £90 per visit for inspections associated with public health.

Mr. Gummer: Detailed proposals for regulations on charges for work in connection with milk and dairies regulations were issued to interested organisations for comments on 4 December 1986. A number responded, including the National Farmers Union, the Farmers Union of Wales and the Milk Marketing Board. We also received representations from, and on behalf of, a number of individual milk producers. The regulations were made and laid before Parliament in February and a prayer against them was defeated on 2 March.

Sugar Consumption

73. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the decision made by his Department to withdraw from the Health Education Council's new healthy eating guide a warning to cut sugar consumption.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has not imposed any amendment on any publication issued by the Health Education Council relating to sugar. A publication on healthy eating which is being sponsored jointly by the Government and the Health Education Council will contain an agreed section on the consumption of sugar which is in line with current medical and scientific opinion as regards the effect of this substance on diet and health.

Cow Subsidies

Mr. Best asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the amount of subsidy per cow that is provided by the Governments of (a) France, (b) Germany and (c) Italy.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested is not available. The Commission of the European Community is responsible for monitoring such national subsidies and ensuring that they are compatible with the treaty of Rome.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the average level of financial support per cow in each of the other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 10 March 1987, c. 146]: Member states' shares of Community expenditure in the milk sector in 1985, on a per cow basis, are set out in the following table. These do not, however, give any indication of the relative levels of total support enjoyed by dairy farmers in different member states arising from the operation of the Community price support arrangements for milk. The variations in Community expenditure result from differences in the patterns of production, marketing and consumption of milk and milk products and in the technical support arrangements operated by individual member states—for example, some member states do not implement certain support measures, while others are reimbursed for intervention purchases or receive export refunds in respect of products produced elsewhere and transhipped.

Quick Frozen Foods

Mr. Foulkes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the cost to the United Kingdom retail trade of the investment in capital equipment necessary to comply with the provisions of the European Community draft directive on quick frozen foods.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I am not in a position to make such an estimate since, on the one hand, I do not have details of the number, age and type of retail cabinets currently in use in the United Kingdom and, on the other, the retail provisions of the draft directive has not yet been agreed. I am, however, aware that if the directive were adopted in its present form there could be significant capital costs for retailers who had to purchase equipment more powerful than commercial considerations would demand.

Broads

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether farmers in the Broads, who are at present receiving payments under the Broads grazing marshes scheme, will be able to enter into management agreements under the environmentally sensitive areas scheme in the current year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Participants in the Broads grazing marshes scheme may now enter an environmentally sensitive area agreement on any land which they chose not to put into the grazing marshes scheme. All land which they have put into that scheme will become eligible for environmentally sensitive area agreements next year. The grazing marshes scheme is a three-year experiment which is being closely monitored and assessed. To allow farmers to transfer land from that scheme before its completion would be to undermine the value of the experiment and its lessons for future Government policy.

Conservation Guidance

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, if he is now able to announce when he will issue the revised land drainage and conservation guidance notes on procedures for water authorities, internal drainage boards, the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission; and what action he will take to ensure that drainage authorities comply with the guidance notes.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We are currently considering the points raised by the organisations we consulted on a revised version of the guidelines in September 1986. We hope to be able to issue a final version in the summer. My Department will be closely monitoring drainage authorities' compliance with the guidelines.

Surplus Food (Quality)

Mr. Pike asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many instances have occurred where supplies of surplus European Economic Community food have been withdrawn after distribution due to doubts regarding its quality.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Fishing Fleet

Mr. Duffy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, what plans he has for accelerating the modernisation of the United Kingdom fishing fleet.

Mr. Gummer: Consideration is currently being given to a possible new grant scheme, in the light of views expressed by representatives of the fishing industry. I hope to be able to make a further announcement shortly.

Food Subsidies

Mr. Hicks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state the quantities of whole milk, semi-skimmed milk, whole milk yoghurt, semi-skimmed milk yoghurts, buttermilk, natural cheese and processed cheese, supplied to each local education authority in Great Britain on which an EEC subsidy was claimed for the 1984-85 and 1985-86 school years.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

SOCIAL SERVICES

NHS (Staff)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give figures for the years 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 for the average cost of a National Health Service employee; and if he will break down the average cost into pay, national insurance, superannuation, and other costs such as office space, heating, lighting, car allowance and so on.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 3 March at columns 579-580.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings have been achieved through the competitive tendering programme in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: Health authorities continue to make very substantial progress in testing the cost effectiveness of their domestic cleaning, catering and laundry services. By 31 December 1986, almost three quarters of these services had been tested. Our latest estimates show that annual savings of £86 million have been generated. This is an increase of £13 million over the figure reached at 30 September 1986. These figures come in part from the use of private contractors who have secured a total of 187 contracts saving £25.7 million a year. In-house organisations have demonstrated their own cost effectiveness in a total of 936 tendering exercises saving £60.3 million a year.

Table A summarises the progress of and savings made by each Health Authority.

Table B lists the results of tendering exercises where decisions have been made in the quarter October—December 1986.

Nurses (Community Care)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total number of nurses involved only in community care for each of the years from 1980 to 1986, inclusive.

Mr. Newton: The table shows all nursing and midwifery staff recorded as working in the Primary Health Care area of work, for each year from 1980 to 1985.

I regret that figures for 1986 are not yet available to this level of detail.

Primary Health Care Nursing & Midwifery Staff[1]

At 30 September	England
Years	Whole-Time Equivalent[2]
1980	36,600
1981	39,700
1982	40,700
1983	41,200
1984	41,400
1985	43,100

Source: DHSS Annual Census of NHS Non-Medical Manpower

[1] Includes agency staff.

[2] All figures are independently rounded to the nearest 100 whole-time equivalents.

Trent RHA

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many ancillary jobs have been lost in the Trent regional health authority since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The information sought is not available centrally in the precise form requested. The following table shows the change in the number of ancillary whole-time equivalent staff in post directly employed by health authorities in the Trent region in 1979 and 1986.

NHS Ancillary Staff in Post at 30 September	Trent Regional Health Authority Whole Time Equivalent[1,2]
1979	16,450
[3]1986	12,970

[1] Figures are rounded to the nearest ten (10) whole-time equivalents.
[2] On the 1 April 1984 some 330 (wtes) Operating Department Assistants were re-classified from the Ancillary to the Professional and Technical staff group. The figures have not been adjusted for this re-classification.
[3] Provisional.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have been on hospital waiting lists in the Trent regional health authority area for (a) more than two years and (b) more than four years.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks in precisely the form requested. At 30 September 1986, the latest date for which information is available centrally, the number of cases on the list for more than one year for admission to National Health Service hospitals in Trent region was 16,111. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Trent regional health authority for further information.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are currently on hospital waiting lists for operations that do not require overnight stays throughout the Trent regional health authority area.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. Statistical information on cases awaiting day surgery will be collected centrally from 1 April 1987 when the recommendations of the steering group on health services information are implemented. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Trent regional health authority for current information.

Health Education Council

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services with what organisations he consulted before he decided the membership of the Health Education Authority.

Mr. Newton: Representations from a wide variety of sources were taken into account in determining the membership of the new authority.

Abortions

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 27 February to the hon. Member for Epping Forest, Official Report, column 449, he will require information to be collected concerning cases in which parental consent (a) is and (b) is not obtained for general anaesthetics to be given to minors seeking abortion; and if he will give details of the manner in which the practice in such cases has been monitored hitherto.

Mr. Newton: No information is collected either from the NHS or private sector indicating whether a general anaesthetic or abortion was carried out on the basis of a girl's consent alone or with the involvement of her parents and there are no plans to do so. The General Medical Council has issued guidance to doctors about the considerations to which a doctor should have regard before offering advice or treatment to a child below the age of 16 who consults him and is not accompanied by a parent or person in loco parentis. The principles set out in that guidance apply equally to all forms of treatment, including where a general anaesthetic forms part of the treatment. The Department does not routinely monitor the operation of these procedures.

AIDS

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on the subject of compensation for haemophiliacs infected with the human immunodeficiency virus.

Mr. Newton: The Department has received 15 letters from hon. Members and two letters from haemophilia reference centre directors.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 716, whether he will cite the precise epidemiological research which shows that the HIV (AIDS virus) is transmitted during sexual intercourse;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 716, whether he will cite the precise epidemiological research which shows that HIV (AIDS virus) is transmitted in semen.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to the letter in the British Medical Journal of 14th February from the Director of the Public Health Laboratory Service written on behalf of the Government's expert advisory group on AIDS. There is overwhelming evidence that the majority of those who are infected with HIV in the USA and Europe have been engaged in penetrative sexual intercourse with men who were either subsequently found to be themselves infected or were thought to be so infected. Several studies have shown that the partner who receives semen from another is at particular risk and there is also evidence that wearing a condom provides some protection. I am sending the hon. Member a list of references to the relevant literature and placing a copy in the Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 716, whether he will explain why his Department gave advice to dentists that masks should be worn during dental surgery to reduce the risk of transmission of the human immunodeficiency virus.

Mr. Newton: There is no evidence that HIV has ever been transmitted to or from a dentist in the course of his or her work. The Department recommended the wearing of face masks as a precaution for dentists when using high speed drills or ultrasonic scalers because aerosol spray or splashing and splattering of blood or blood-stained saliva is likely. It is not known if blood containing HIV is infectious when inhaled, but as it can transmit infection following other parenteral routes, wearing of face masks by dentists appears a sensible precaution. It should also provide protection against commoner infections that are transmitted through saliva.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many young persons held in community homes have been tested for HIV; how many of these were consulted before the tests were carried out; how many agreed and refused; how many were HIV positive; and, in the case of this latter group, what consequent decisions have been taken concerning their treatment or detention;

(2) how many young persons he estimates have been, or are, currently held in secure units in community homes under care orders who have the AIDS virus; under what Act and section they are held; and how long they have been held.

Mr. Fowler: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply tomorrow.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his practice to (a) gather and (b) publish information relating to treatment facilities for AIDS sufferers by (i) region and (ii) district.

Mr. Newton: Regions and districts submit to the Department their plans for dealing with AIDS in their area. The AIDS (Control) Bill, currently before the House, makes provision for publishing detailed information about the facilities and services available in each health authority for the treatment and care of people with AIDS.

NHS (Theft and Fraud)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of cases of theft or fraud (a) which were reported to management, (b) which were reported to the police and (c) in which prosecutions took place in the National Health Service in England in each year from 1980 to 1986, inclusive.

Mrs. Currie: The number of cases of theft, fraud and arson and so on reported to the Department was as follows:

	Number
1979-80	3,540
1980-81	3,923
1981-82	4,049
1982-83	4,289
1983-84	4,181
1984-85	5,316
1985-86	5,213

We do not collect centrally the other information requested.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes in the payment of the higher rate of attendance allowance he plans in view of the Court of Appeal judgment in the case of Mrs. Dorothy Moran; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The wider application of the Appeal Court judgment in Mrs. Moran's case, and in particular the court's interpretation of the "continual supervision" test, is a matter for the Independent Attendance Allowance Board. We shall be considering the judgment in the light of advice from the board.

Liverpool (Rates)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total amount of payments in respect of the rate rebates element of housing benefit subsidy which were withheld from the Liverpool city council during the period 1 April to 14 June 1985 when that local authority delayed setting a rate; and what amount of interest accrued to his Department on the payments withheld.

Mr. Lyell: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to whether Calderdale health authority is operating a full computerised call and recall scheme for screening all women at risk of cervical cancer covering all the family doctor practices in the district.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 18 March 1987, c. 506]: Calderdale health authority has had a fully computerised call and recall capacity since November 1986. A rolling programme commenced at that time designed to achieve call arrangements covering all women aged 20 and over in the district by March 1988. To date some 50 per cent. of all family doctor practices in the district have already been asked to participate in the scheme with the remainder to be included as the programme develops.

The authority already has a well established district-wide recall system and between 1964 and December 1986 provided a sub regional cervical cytology service for adjacent districts.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members of Parliament (Retirement Pension)

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Lord Privy Seal, if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing what payments a Member of Parliament will receive on retirement in October 1987, assuming he has given 20, 30 and 35 years' service, respectively, and that his age on retirement is, respectively, 63, 65, 68 and 70 years.

Mr. Biffen: The following are the pensions Members of Parliament would receive if they retired on 1 October 1987:

Age: 63 years	Service years
	20	30	35
Retirement during lifetime of a Parliament:
Actuarially reduced pension[1]
Male £ a year	5,467	8,090	9,401
Female £ a year	5,594	8,278	9,620
Ill-health retirement pension[2] £ a year	7,088	10,139	11,664
At a General Election[3] £ a year	6,357	9,407	10,932

[1] Payable immediately — Pensions are not normally payable before age 65. However, Members who retire during the lifetime of a Parliament and are aged 50 years or more can choose to take their pension earlier at a reduced rate and thus receive an immediate pension.

[2] Payable immediately—Members who retire under the age of 65 years and who qualify for an ill-health pension are entitled to an immediate pension at a higher level, compensating for the loss in years of service.

[3] Payable immediately—A resettlement grant of up to £18,500 is also payable to any Member retiring at a general election who has not attained age 65 at the time of the Dissolution of Parliament (Resolution of the House of 19 July 1983).

Additionally:

1. All Members have the option to commute a proportion of their pension in return for a tax-free lump sum in accordance with the provisions of the Parliamentary Pensions (Maximum and Abated Pensions and Pension Commutation) Order 1984 (S.I. 1984 No. 1909). The option to commute must be exercised either before the pension comes into payment, or no later than one month thereafter.

2. All Members leaving the House are entitled to claim for the reimbursement of expenses incurred in winding up their parliamentary duties, subject to a limit of one-sixth of the annual amount of the office, secretarial and research allowance currently in force.

Members aged 65 years or over at the time of retirement (on 1 October 1987) would, whether they retired at a general election or during the lifetime of a Parliament, receive the same immediate pension as follows:

Age 65, 68, 70 years

Service years	£ a year
20	6,357
30	9,407
35	10,932

Friday 20 March 1987

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Cervical Cancer Screening

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Lord Privy Seal what consideration has been given to providing cervical cancer screening facilities in the Palace of Westminster for women employed there or alternatively paid release for those in public employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: I refer the right hon. Member to the Second Report of the Services Committee, Session 1985-86 (HC266). The recommendations made in that report have been implemented by the House authorities; and in particular the management of House Departments have reaffirmed that staff will be granted reasonable time off work for health screening purposes.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Whooping Cough Vaccine

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research there has been in the United Kingdom into the efficacy and safety of acellular whooping cough vaccines.

Mr. Walden: The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid through the Department, is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical research in the United Kingdom.

Grants have been awarded by the MRC to the Centre for Applied Microbiology and Research, Porton, and by the Department of Health and Social Security to St. George's hospital medical school, for collaborative studies of the immunology of whooping cough infection and the response to the currently used whole cell vaccine. These studies were a necessary preliminary to studies of acellular whooping cough vaccines. A comparative study of the safety and immunogenicity of whole cell and acellular vaccines in infants has now been planned and will be funded by the MRC.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consultation there has been with the World Health Organisation regarding trials into the safety and efficiency of acellular whooping cough vaccines.

Mr. Walden: I understand that Professor D. L. Miller of St. Mary's hospital medical school, who acts as a consultant to the World Health Organisation on respiratory infections, has been involved with WHO co-ordination of an acellular whooping cough vaccine trial in Sweden. Professor Miller also provides a link between WHO and United Kingdom research effort through his membership of the Medical Research Council's committee on the development of vaccines and immunisation procedures and its whooping cough vaccines subcommittee.

Her Majesty's Inspectors

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil on 9 March, Official Report, column 22, concerning a review by management consultants of Her Majesty's inspectors' procedures, if he will undertake to announce the findings of the review in due course; and if he will make a further statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The review is of Her Majesty's inspectorate's internal procedures for writing, clearing, printing and distributing its inspection reports. It will be for Her Majesty's inspectorate to respond to the findings of the review as it sees fit. My right hon. Friend will announce in general terms what, if any, changes in procedure are introduced in due course.

Swann Report

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft) on 12 March, Official Report, column 260, in what month he expects to issue the draft circular on recommendations of the Swann report mentioned in his reply to the hon. Member for Yeovil on 24 February, Official Report, column 152; whether there have been any delays in preparing this draft circular; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I expect that the draft circular on the collection of ethnically based educational statistics will be issued for consultation during the summer. I regret that this information was inadvertently omitted from my reply of 12 March to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft) at column 760.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Police (Training)

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to which countries Britain has provided training for police and special force personnel during 1986 (a) in Britain and (b) overseas; which of these arrangements were financed by the British Government; and which of those were financed by the aid programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: Britain provided police training for the following countries in 1986:

(a) in Britain

Anguilla
Bahamas
Bangladesh
Barbados
Belgium
Belize
Botswana
British Virgin Islands
Brunei
Cook Islands
Cyprus
Denmark
Dominica

St. Helena
St. Lucia
St. Vincent

(b) Overseas

Bahamas
Barbados
Belize
Botswana
Falkland Islands

The training was arranged by a number of Government Departments, principally the Overseas Development Administration and the Home Office. The bulk of this training was financed under the aid programme, but precise details of the financing arrangements for individual countries are not readily available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

It is not our practice to provide details of training for special force personnel.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk

Mr. Strang asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect on the total number of jobs in the United Kingdom of a cut of 6 per cent. in milk production.

Mr. Gummer: Changes to the numbers of jobs in agriculture, the agricultural supplying industries and in milk processing and distribution will depend on many factors, of which the quota cut is but one. Dairy farmers, facing a cut in their milk output, will strive to substitute or expand other enterprises. Even with reduced quotas milk output would still be above the level of the mid-1970s although numbers employed will be less reflecting the productivity improvements achieved.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Political Asylum

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish the number, and breakdown by nationality, of those persons seeking political asylum in the United Kingdom who were detained on 1 February, or the nearest convenient date;

(2) if he will provide a table indicating the period of time spent in detention by persons seeking asylum in the United Kingdom, who were detained on 1 February, or nearest convenient date showing numbers detained for not more than (a) one, (b) two, (c) three, (d) four, (e) five, (f) six months and (g) for six months or more, respectively.

Mr. Waddington: Information is readily available only in respect of persons claiming asylum on arrival in the United Kingdom. On 1 March there were 160 such persons in detention. Their nationalities were as follows:

	Number
Sri Lankan	101
Iranian	33
Ethiopian	12
Indian	4
Somalian	3
Afghani	1
Chilean	1
Ghanaian	1
Pakistani	1
Turkish	1
Stateless	2

The periods in detention were:

	Number
Not more than 1 month	68
Over 1 month but not more than 2	30
Over 2 months but not more than 3	29
Over 3 months but not more than 4	16
Over 4 months but not more than 5	6
Over 5 months but not more than 6	2
Over 6 months	9

DEFENCE

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make available the public safety schemes for Holy Loch, Chatham, Faslane, Rosyth and for landside research and training reactors.

Mr. Stanley: The Holy Loch and Faslane areas are covered by the Clyde area public safety scheme. My Department is directly responsible for public safety schemes relating to two landside research and training reactors; these are maintained by the department of nuclear science and technology, royal naval college, Greenwich, and the atomic weapon research establishment, Aldermaston. Safety arrangements for the reactor at Greenwich are covered in its emergency procedures (RNC/NS/SC205). I have arranged for a copy of this document, together with a copy of the Clyde area public safety scheme, to be placed in the Library, where a copy of the Rosyth area public safety scheme is already held. There are detailed safety arrangements for AWRE Aldermaston, but for security reasons these cannot be made public. Since Chatham ceased to be a royal naval base my Department has not conducted any activities there requiring such arrangements; therefore, no public safety scheme is maintained for that area.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will provide the total activity and fissile inventory of a source term release from British submarine reactors in which (a) the fuel is new and (b) the fuel has been used for 90 days.

Mr. Stanley: The total activity and fission product inventory that might form the source term for release to the environment following an accident to the reactor of a royal naval submarine depends upon the operating history of the reactor, the type and severity of the accident and the performance of the containment system. The maximum design accident, the probability of which is assessed to be no greater than 1 in 10,000 years, may result in a slow release from the primary to the secondary containment of up to 40TBq (1,000 Curies) of Iodine 131, together with up to 4 PBq (100,000 Curies) of other volatile and gaseous fission products. Secondary containment procedures ensure that only a small proportion of this release will reach the atmosphere. A more serious accident, the probability of which is estimated to be no greater than 1 in 1,000,000 years, is one in which the primary containment is breached. It may result in a more rapid release of up to 4 PBq (1,000,000 Curies) of Iodine 131, together with 400PBq (10,000,000 Curies) of other volatile and gaseous fission products.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are public safety schemes for the event in which a release of radioactivity occurs from a nuclear warhead on a nuclear-powered submarine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: My Department maintains detailed contingency plans to deal with the protection of the public in the extremely unlikely event of an accident resulting in a release of radioactive material from a nuclear warhead on a nuclear-powered submarine. For security reasons, I cannot go into detail.

Hardware Sales

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the balance of reciprocal sales of defence hardware between the United Kingdom and the United States of America, giving figures for the latest year for which statistics are available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the member for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Warren) on 19 February 1987 at column 778. The figure for 1985-86 is 1·5:1 which represents a further improvement in our defence sales programme in the United States.

Boarding Schools (Fees)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current range of costs per annum for children of service personnel who are attending boarding schools in the United Kingdom and in respect of whom the fees are met wholly or partly by his Department; what is the average cost per pupil; and whether he will identify the costs separately for (a) independent and (b) maintained schools.

Mr. Freeman: Fees of boarding schools attended by the children of service personnel drawing boarding school allowance range between £1,800 and more than £6,000 per annum, based on the figures which I gave to my hon. Friend on 18 February, Official Report at column 686, and before allowing for taxation, the current average annual cost of boarding school allowance is some £4,300 per pupil. Separate average costs for pupils in independent and maintained schools are not available.

TRANSPORT

Rillington Bypass

Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans for the establishment of a bypass around the village of Rillington in north Yorkshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A review of the road programme is under way. The results will be published in the spring. I cannot comment before then.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Westland plc

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney General if the Director of Public Prosecutions will request the police to investigate allegations of offences under the Companies Act in relation to allegations of a concert party involving dealings in shares of Westland plc in 1985-86.

The Attorney-General: No.

Zeebrugge Disaster

Mr. Greenway asked the Attorney General whether he will introduce legislation to prohibit contracts between potential litigants and insurance claims assessors in relation to a personal injury or bereavement arising from disasters; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 13 March in reply to the right hon. and learned Member for Aberavon (Mr. Morris) at column 344.

Police Officers (Prosecution)

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General why charges against two police officers based at Golders Green police station alleging breaches of the Official Secrets Act were not proceeded with at Hendon magistrates' court in February; what was the nature of the charges brought against the officers; whether alleged abuse of the police national computer was involved; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The criminal proceedings against two police officers based at Golders Green police station were reconsidered in the light of representations made on behalf of the two men, as a result of which it was decided that the public interest did not require the continuation of those proceedings. The police officers were charged under section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911. The allegations against the police officers related to abuse of the police national computer.

WALES

Labour Statistics

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will say how many people are employed in the following institutions at the present time and how many were employed in the same institutions in 1979 (a) university college of Wales Aberystwyth, (b) the national library of Wales, (c) the college of librarianship, (d) The agricultural college of Wales, (e) St. David's university college, Lampeter, (f) college of further education in Ceredigion and (g) all secondary schools in Ceredigion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information for all persons employed is not centrally available. The available figures, for teaching or research staff only, are given in the following table:

	1979-80	1985-86
University College, Aberystwyth[1]	439	374
St. David's College, Lampeter[1]	69	69
College of Librarianship, Wales[2]	—	37
Welsh Agricultural College[2]	—	19
Ceredigion College of Further Education[2]	—	67
Maintained Secondary Schools in Ceredigion[3]	377	387

[1] Full-time teaching and research staff, as at December each year.
[2] Teaching staff in full-time equivalent terms (average for academic year). Figures for 1979-80 are not available.
[3] Full-time and part-time teachers in September 1979 and September 1986 respectively.

The numbers of industrial and non-industrial staff at the national library of Wales in October 1979 and October 1986 were148 and 142 respectively.

"A Growing Health Service for a Healthier Wales"

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost to his Department both in manpower and material of producing the leaflet "A Growing Health Service for a Healthier Wales"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The final cost to the Department of design and photographic work, printing, publication and distribution of the leaflet is just over £9,000. In addition, the estimated cost of time spent on the project by a small number of Welsh Office staff in the normal course of their duties is £4,000. I regard it as a perfectly proper function of my Department to provide factual information about the Health Service to those who use it and that is what we have done.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Visas (India and Pakistan)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the operation of the visa requirements for visitors from India and Pakistan, giving numbers of applications, refusals, and appeal results since the new arrangements began.

Mr. Eggar The visit visa-issuing operation in India and Pakistan continues to run smoothly. The vast majority of applications are processed within 24 hours. For the very small number of cases requiring a further interview, the waiting time is nowhere longer than 10 days.

In the first three months of the visa regime for which full statistics are available, the figures are:

	Applications received	Visas issued	Visas refused
India	14,286	13,075	647
Pakistan	10,014	9,698	863

No visit visa appeals have yet been decided. In the first three full months of operation 97 visits visa appeals were lodged in India and 112 in Pakistan.

Boarding Schools (Fees)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current range of costs per annum for children of his Department's staff serving overseas who are attending boarding schools in the United Kingdom and in respect of whom the fees are met wholly or partly by his Department; and what is the average cost per pupil.

Mr. Eggar Current costs of fees range from £2,247 per annum up to £5, 085.57 per annum, which is the maximum allowance payable for a boy at senior school. Costs over and above this maximum are met by individual officers. The estimated average annual cost per pupil for the 1986-87 financial year is £4,222.30.

FCO costs also include those of concessionary journeys (normally at Apex rates) to enable children to rejoin their parents during school holidays. Cost in respect of such journeys are expected to total £906,000 in the 1986-87 financial year, that is, an average of £1,192 per pupil.

Western European Union

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of his speech of 16 March relating to the Western European Union to the Royal Institute of International Relations, Brussels.

Mr. Renton: Copies of my right hon. and learned Friend's speech of 16 March on European security have been placed in the Library of the House.

UAR (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Alan Williams asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of the United Arab Emirates as to why it has not replied to correspondence from the right hon. Member for Swansea West, a copy of which has been sent to his Department, concerning a constituent of the right hon. Member; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The right hon. Member was informed in my letter of 9 March 1987 of the position regarding his constituent and also in earlier correspondence of the limitations which I regret apply in this case.

Timeshare

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are being taken by British missions abroad to advise British citizens holidaying in Spain, Portugal and elsewhere in Europe about soliciting by timeshare touts.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's missions abroad advise inquirers to seek legal advice if they consider taking up timeshare offers. Copies of the Department of Trade and Industry leaflet "Your Place in the Sun" are held by Her Majesty's missions in Spain, Portugal, Greece, France, Malta and Cyprus.

South Pacific

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government to the convention for the protection and development of the natural resources and environment of the south Pacific region, and to the protocols to the south Pacific nuclear free zone treaty.

Mr. Renton: The United Kingdom welcomes the extension of the regional seas programme of the United Nations environment programme to the south Pacific, with the convention for the protection and development of the natural resources and environment of the south Pacific region. Such a convention in which all states in the region can participate will be of considerable value. Arrangements are in hand to enable the United Kingdom to sign this convention in respect of Pitcairn, our sole remaining dependent territory in the region. This is a further indication of our continued strong interest in the affairs of a region with whose members we have close ties.

We have also given careful consideration to the protocols to the south Pacific nuclear-free zone treaty (the treaty of Rarotonga). We have taken full account of our security interests in the region and more widely, the views of our allies and the regional states themselves, the texts of the treaty and protocols and the announced policy of the Soviet Union.

Against this background we have concluded that it would not serve our national interest to become party to the protocols to the treaty.

At the same time, we remain ready as a matter of policy to respect the intentions of the regional states as set out in protocol I. In other words, we have no intention of testing, manufacturing or basing nuclear weapons on Pitcairn, the only territory under our jurisdiction within the area covered by the treaty. Further, with respect to protocol II, we reaffirm the British undertaking given in 1978 to non-nuclear weapon states which are parties to the NPT or equivalent commitments, not to use nuclear weapons against such states except in the case of an attack upon the United Kingdom, its dependent territories, its armed forces or its allies by such a state in association or alliance with a nuclear weapon state. Third, in respect of protocol III, we note that we have no intention of conducting nuclear tests in the south Pacific.

We intend to keep our attitude to the treaty and the protocols under review. Any decision on a new approach would need to take account inter alia, of the following factors:

(i) Signature and ratification of the treaty by all states elegible to become parties to it;

(ii) Certain issues arising from the text of the treaty and the protocols, which have already been the subject of confidential discussion with the regional states;

(iii) The status and implications of the Soviet declaration on signing the protocols, that it regards transit of nuclear weapons and visits by nuclear ships and aircraft as inconsistent with the nuclear-free status of the zone established by the treaty;

(iv) The outcome of discussion of nuclear weapon-free zones at the third UN special session on disarmament; and the implications of this discussion and of any future extension of such zones to other regions for the security interests of the United Kingdom and our allies.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC (Aid)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications have been made by member states under article 93(2) of the treaty of Rome seeking a decision from the Council of Ministers that an aid which that state is granting, or intends to grant, shall be considered to be compatible with the Common Market in derogation from the provisions of article 92 of the treaty, by year from 1983 and in 1987 to date; and if he will list them in the Official Report, together with the Councils decision in each case.

Mr. Alan Clark: No information is available on applications made by Member states to the Council under article 93(2) but the European Commission has provided the following list of state aids authorised by the Council from 1983 to 1986:

(1) 86/648/EEC: Council Decision of 16 December 1986, on the grant of a national aid in the form of a payment on account of the premium for ewes in the sheepmeat sector in France.
Official Journal No. L382 of 31.12.86 page 0003

(2) 86/603/EEC: Council Decision of 8 December 1986, on the granting of national aid in the wine sector in Italy following the serious crisis affecting that sector as a result of the 'methanol-adulterated wine' affair.
Official Journal No. L352 of 13.12.86 page 0043

(3) 86/196/EEC: Council Decision of 23 May 1986, on the granting by certain Member States of an aid for the short-term private storage of table wine and must.
Official Journal No. L139 of 24.09.86 page 0049

AE Takeover (Share Buying)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the nature of the information which his Department received from the Bank of England about the alleged activities of Cazenove and Hill Samuel in setting up with the aid of Barclays and Midland Banks a share buying mechanism in connection with the bid by Turner and Newall for AE, in respect of which the two banks were subsequently indemnified against any loss; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The information provided to me by the Bank of England is subject to section 19 of the Banking Act 1979. That section forbids the disclosure of information provided under the Act except in certain specified circumstances.

Communications (Competition)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to promote competition in the field of communications.

Mr. Pattie: Among the duties set on both my right hon. Friend and the Director General of Telecommunications by the Telecommunications Act 1984 is one to maintain and promote effective competition. As part of this continuing process, the Government announced on 25 February two major new licences to liberalise business use of telecommunications and the provision of value added and data services. New licences will also shortly be issued to two competing operators of nationwide private mobile radio networks, as well as to regional and London pmr network operators and to new operators of national radiopaging networks. We shall also be publishing shortly for public comment an independent consultant's report on the scope for applying market forces and the price mechanism to the management of the radio spectrum.

Product Liability

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has had concerning the adequacy of the provisions relating to product liability in the Consumer Protection Bill as they relate to the entitlement of injured parties to receive compensation where the defect is latent.

Mr. Howard: My Department has received some comments about the provisions of schedule 1 to the Consumer Protection Bill, which implement in particular the three year limitation period under article 10 of the EC directive on product liability. These provisions were amended in certain respects when the Bill was at Report stage in another place and are reflected in the draft of the Bill which has been introduced into this House.

Timeshare Operators

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he plans to take any further steps to issue guidance to British holidaymakers in Europe during the summer of 1987 about the high sales techniques of timeshare operators.

Mr. Howard: The Government's consumer advice leaflet continues to be freely available at many information centres (including some airports). Larger supplies may be obtained direct from my Department. The leaflet has had considerable coverage in the media. I expect this to continue as my Department maintains contact with travel and consumer correspondents.

Mr. Michael Cocks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many complaints he has received about the selling methods employed by timeshare operators;

(2) how many representatives he has received calling for greater protection for consumers against the selling practices of timeshare operators.

Mr. Howard: My Department has received over 40 written complaints and representations about the selling methods employed by timeshare developers and a substantial number of complaints by telephone.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretry of State for Trade and Industry when he last met representatives of companies engaged in selling timeshare properties.

Mr. Howard: I met representatives of some major timeshare developers on 18 March.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate how many companies in the United Kingdom are engaged in the timeshare business within the United Kingdom; and what information he has about the situation elsewhere in Europe.

Mr. Howard: The three major timeshare trade associations have some 20 United Kingdom-based developers among their membership. It is not possible to give accurate information about the number of United Kingdom developers outside these trade associations.

About 30 European-based developers belong to the United Kingdom trade associations and several United Kingdom companies are undertaking developments in Europe. I have no information about other locally based developers in Europe.

Shipbuilding

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many ships have been built in shipbuilding yards of each EEC member state with the assistance of funds from the European shipbuilding intervention fund with engines supplied from non-EEC member states in each of the past five years; what has been the total value of EEC aid given in such cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 12 March 1987, c. 276]: There is no support for merchant shipbuilding paid to member states from European Community funds. Each member state administers a regime of aid which is agreed with the European Commission within the framework of successive Council directives on shipbuilding aids. The number of vessels built with non-EEC engines, which received shipbuilding intervention fund support from Her Majesty's Government since 1982 is as follows:

	Number
1982	2
1983	—
1984	1
1985	6
1986	3

EMPLOYMENT

Skillcentres

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will list the skillcentres (a) open in June 1979 and (b) closed since 1979, and what was the unemployment rate in the local travel-to-work area for each skillcentre (i) in June 1979 and (ii) at the latest date for which figures are available;

(2) for each skillcentre closed since 1979, what was the local unemployment rate (a) in June 1979, (b) in the month of closure and (c) at the latest date for which figures are available;

(3) for each skillcentre what was (a) the number of trainees completing courses and (b) the total training hours offered (i) in 1979 and (ii) in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: The available information is contained in the table:

[1] The unemployment rate is the number of unemployed expressed as a percentage of employees in employment plus the unemployed.
[2] The comparison of unemployment rates is affected by seasonal factors and changes in the collection and compilation of data, furthermore unemployment statistics are not available for travel-to-work areas in 1979 on the same basis as 1987 because of major revisions to the boundaries in 1984. Statistics for travel-to-work areas as defined in 1978 are available in the Library.
[3] Figures no longer available.
[4] Numbers of trainees completing courses and training weeks offered are not available in 1979.
[5] STA no longer keeps statistics of trainee hours available the number of training weeks offered is used instead.
[6] The Blaenau, Gwent Skillcentre closed in February 1983. The unemployment rate in that month in the Ebbw Vale travel-to-work area was 24·3 per cent. This area is now covered by the Blaenau, Gwent and Abvergavenny travel-to-work area, and an unemployment rate for this area for February 1983 is not available.

Pensions

Mr. Speller asked the Paymaster General if he will take steps to aid men made redundant below the age of 60 years who have pensions frozen until they are 65 years but are now employed in work which requires a retiring age of 60 years.

Mr. Trippier: The Government have no proposals for special measures to help this particular group of employees as opposed to other employees whose pension provision may be effected by a change of jobs. However, recent social security legislation means that, in future, employees in this situation will have more flexibility to adapt their pension arrangements to their own particular circumstances. People changing jobs from 1 January 1986, for whatever reason, will often be able to transfer their pension rights from the former employers' scheme to the new employers' scheme and those changing jobs from 1988 will also have the option of transferring to their own personal pension scheme.

Labour Statistics

Ms. Harman asked the Paymaster General if he will give the number of people unemployed in the constituencies of Peckham, Bermondsey and Dulwich for each year since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: Following is the available information, which is also in the Library. The table shows the numbers of unemployed claimants in the parliamentary constituencies of Peckham, Southwark and Bermondsey and Dulwich in February of each year since 1984. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of the unemployment statistics in March 1986. Statistics of unemployment for parliamentary constituencies are derived from the ward-based system and are available only from June 1983.

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Commission (Finances)

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the European Commission's latest cash position and the implications for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Brooke: The European Commission estimates that its spending obligations this month will exceed available revenues under the budget for 1987.

The Commission has therefore requested member states to advance from April into March the payment of own resources other than VAT in accordance with article 10(2) of Council regulation 2891/77: a similar advance was made last month. The Government are satisfied that this request is within the vires of article 10(2) and accordingly will today make an advance payment of some £148 million from the Consolidated Fund under section 2(3) of the European Communities Act, 1972. The payment of levies and duties on 20 April will be reduced by the amount of the advance.

The Commission has informed us that it expects in addition to have to overdraw its accounts with member states this month in accordance with article 12(2) of Council regulation 2891/77. The amount involved for the United Kingdom is expected to be of the order of £95 million. The Government propose to meet this obligation too from the Consolidated Fund in accordance with section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972. Repayment of any drawing under this facility will be made by deduction from our April own resources payments. The amount drawn by the Commission in February under this provision, some £24·2 million, was recovered from the VAT payment made on 2 March.

Neither of these facilities will involve increasing the total amounts which the Community is authorised to spend during 1987. There will therefore be no net additions to public expenditure.

Shareholders

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list, region by region, including Scotland and Wales, the numbers and proportions of shareholders identified in his survey; and if he will list shareholders by income groups.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

EC Butter Surplus (Expenditure)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response the Council of Ministers has had from the Court of Auditors following the decision of the Council of 9 March to approve an expenditure of 3·2 billion ecu on the disposal of the butter mountain, in light of the published opinion of the Court of Auditors prior to the meeting that such expenditure was unlawful; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Court of Auditors has made no further response to the Council's proposal to delay reimbursement to member states for butter stock disposals. This measure was formally adopted by the Council on 16 March. The Council considered the Court of Auditor's opinion, but decided that delayed reimbursement was justified as an exceptional measure, since it was agreed as part of a package producing genuine and substantial CAP savings.

ENERGY

Welsh Anthracite

Mr. Woodcock asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what was the total production by the National Coal Board of Welsh anthracite in 1984, 1985 and 1986, respectively; and what is the anticipated production in 1987;

(2) what tonnages of Welsh anthracite were allocated for disposal to each National Coal Board region in 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987, respectively;

(3) what tonnage of Welsh anthracite was shipped to Northern Ireland in 1984, 1985 and 1986, respectively; and what is proposed to be shipped in 1987;

(4) what tonnage of Welsh anthracite was exported in 1984, 1985 and 1986, respectively; and what exports are planned for 1987.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not immediately available. I shall give my hon. Friend a fuller reply as soon as possible.

Private Coal Businesses

Mr. Woodcock asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy not to sanction further expenditure by the National Coal Board on the acquisition of private sector coal merchanting businesses.

Mr. David Hunt: My policy is to agree to the acquisition of businesses by British Coal where my approval is required, only if I consider there are good grounds for the aquisitions to be made.

Concessionary Coal

Mr. Woodcock asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to ensure that competitive tendering is introduced for the delivery of concessionary fuel to mineworkers.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation or the appropriate trade union responsible for arranging the delivery of concessionary fuel.

Mr. Woodcock asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the average consumption of house coal and smokeless fuel per household in the United Kingdom; and if he will publish details of the supply of concessionary fuel to mineworkers in each National Coal Board area.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested on average consumption of solid fuel per household is not immediately available. I shall give my hon. Friend a fuller reply as soon as possible. The provision of concessionary coal is a matter for the British Coal Corporation, and governed by agreements between them and the mining unions. I have asked the chairman to write to my hon. Friend.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the minimum requirement for modern nuclear power station design in terms of ability to withstand earthquake shock; and what size shock the latest tests show that Hinkley Point could withstand.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 12 March 1987, c. 281]: New nuclear stations are designed to be safely shut down following a seismic event that has a frequency of occurrence of about once in 10,000 years.

The CEGB has a continuing programme of extensive seismic assessment of its existing installations; and the indications are that magnox stations such as that at Hinkley Point have substantial resistance to earthquakes.

The NII is actively discussing these matters with the CEGB and findings will be published when the long-term reviews of magnox stations are concluded.

ENVIRONMENT

Play Schemes

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much each local authority has spent on children's play in each of the last five years.

Mr. Tracey: The information is not available centrally.

Homelessness

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out for the London borough of Tower Hamlets, Southwark and Newham, respectively, for each of the years 1981 to 1986 in terms of the number of person days and family days, the number of families placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation for the homeless and numbers of applicants on the housing lists of each borough, respectively, together with respective totals for the three boroughs.

Mr. Tracey: Local authorities' reported figures of household days provided in bed and breakfast accommodation for those accepted as homeless, are included in the CIPFA publications "Homelessness Statistics" for each financial year. The issues from 1983-84 to 1985-86 also include figures of homeless households accommodated during each year allocated to the type of accommodation in which they spent most time. Copies of these publications are available in the Library

The numbers of households on the housing lists at 1 April 1986 are contained in section B of the boroughs' housing investment programme returns, but were not collected in earlier years. Copies of the returns are also available in the Library.

Local Authority Housebuilding

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total expenditure on local authority housebuilding for each year since and including 1979 to 1986 in terms of (i) current prices, (ii) 1986 prices and (iii) share of gross domestic product.

Mr. Tracey: The available estimates of capital expenditure on house-building by English local authorities are as follows:

	Current prices £ million	1985-86 prices £ million	Percentage share of gross domestic product
1978-79	1,096	2,076	0·63
1979-80	1,065	1,726	0·52
1980-81	965	1,317	0·41
1981-82	720	893	0·28
1982-83	685	795	0·24
1983-84	682	758	0·22
1984-85	730	778	0·22
1985-86	568	568	0·16

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the share respectively of (a) public direct labour schemes and (b) private contractors' schemes in local authority housebuilding for the years 1985 and 1986, respectively, in (i) England and Wales and (ii) Greater London.

Mr. Tracey: I shall answer this question shortly.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the final rate support grant settlement for 1987-88.

Mr. Ridley: I have today laid before the House the rate support grant report for 1987-88. Individual authorities' entitlements to grant will be in line with the proposals I issued on 5 March. I have also laid the first rate support grant supplementary report for 1986-87, and the rate support grant supplementary report (No. 3) 1985-86.

I have also today formally notified the 20 authorities selected for rate limitation in 1987-88 of their rate limits for next year. There are no changes from those notified earlier this month. My right hon. Friends the Home Secretary, the Secretary of State for Education and Science and the Secretary of State for Transport have notified precept-limited authorities in similar terms.

Copies of the reports have been placed in the Vote Office and Libraries of the House.

Compulsory Purchase

Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to extend the terms of compulsory purchase orders to include adequate compensation for any inconvenience experienced by the owner of a property.

Mr. Tracey: I shall answer this question shortly.

Inner Urban Areas

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those local authorities in England and Wales which are designated or include areas that are designated under the Inner Urban Areas Act 1978; and in respect of which of these authorities arrangements have been made with him under section 7 of the Act.

Mr. Tracey: I shall answer this question shortly.

Local Acts

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to which local authority areas still have local acts in force.

Mr. Chope: By virtue of section 262 of the Local Government Act 1972 almost all pre-1 April 1974 local legislation will have been automatically repealed, in general, at the end of 1986 unless specifically replaced by new local or general legislation.

There are certain exceptions. Greater London is excluded because its local legislation was reviewed under the London Government Act 1963; such powers as protective provisions and provisions relating to statutory undertakers are also excluded from the effect of section 262; and some individual local Act provisions have been preserved by order (S.I. 1986, No. 1133). The 1986 deadline has also been extended by order (S.I. 1986, No. 2106) for one year to preserve pre-1 April 1974 local legislation from repeal for eight local authority areas in England and Wales to enable their replacement local legislation to complete its passage through Parliament.

The following local authority areas in England have promoted local legislation by virtue of section 262:

The metropolitan counties of Greater Manchester, Merseyside, South Yorkshire, Tyne and Wear, West Midlands and West Yorkshire.

The counties of Avon, Berkshire, Cheshire, Cleveland, Cornwall, Cumbria, Derbyshire, East Sussex, Essex (Bill in Parliament), Hampshire, Humberside, Isle of Wight, Kent, Lancashire, Leicestershire, Nottinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Staffordshire and Surrey.

The districts of Bournemouth, Cambridge, Durham, Epsom and Ewell, Exeter (Bill in Parliament), Harrogate, Hereford, Kingston upon Hull, Lincoln, Luton, Norwich, Plymouth, Poole, Scarborough, Warwick, Worcester and York (Bill in Parliament).

Apart from section 262 local legislation, the following local authority areas in addition to Greater London have obtained local powers for various purposes since 1 April 1974:

The metropolitan counties of Greater Manchester, South Yorkshire and West Yorkshire.

The metropolitan districts of Barnsley, Birmingham, Sheffield and Solihull.

The counties of Cleveland, Cumbria, Devon, East Sussex, Essex, Isle of Wight and Nottinghamshire.

The districts of Aylesbury Vale, Bath, Castle Morpeth, East Lindsey, Gosport, Great Yarmouth, Hove, Nottingham, Plymouth, Preston, Shrewsbury and Atcham, South Lakeland, South Cambridgeshire, Suffolk Coastal, Thurrock, Torbay, Vale of White Horse, and Weymouth and Portland.

Washington Development Corporation.

West Yorkshire Metropolitan County Council

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the current state of the superannuation fund of the former West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The local government superannuation funds are valued at five-yearly intervals. The date of the most recent valuation was 31 March 1984. In the case of the fund then administered by the former West Yorkshire metropolitan county council, this produced a reduction in the contributions required from employers in the area of about 2 per cent. of payroll. I have no more up to date information about the fund now administered by Bradford metropolitan district council.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many properties have been sold by the West Yorkshire residuary body to the private sector which previously belonged to the former West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; if he is able to provide any breakdown by location of the total receipts from those sales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The information available to the Department is that the West Yorkshire residuary body had sold 89 properties to the private and public sectors by the end of February 1987. Receipts were some £2·8 million.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many employees of the West Yorkshire metropolitan county council were declared redundant in the abolition of that council on 31 March 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on Monday 16 February at column 420.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to the current state of the revenue account of the personnel committee of the former West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has as to the current financial state of the county fund balance sheet of the former West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what information he has as to the current state of the revenue account and analysis of capital expenditure of the public transport committee of the former West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what information he has as to the current state of the revenue and analysis of capital expenditure of the technical services and traffic and highways committees of the former West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what information he has as to the current state of the revenue and analysis of capital expenditure of the recreation and arts committee of the former West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what information he has as to the current state of the revenue account and capital expenditure of the police committee of the former West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; and if he will make a statement;

(7) what information he has as to the current state of the revenue account of the environment committee of the former West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; and if he will make a statement;

(8) what information he has as to the current state of the revenue account of the consumer protection committee of the former West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; and if he will make a statement;

(9) what information he has as to the current state of the financial statement of the finance and general purposes committee of the former West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; and if he will make a statement;

(10) what information he has as to the current state of the revenue account of the fire committee of the former West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The final accounts of the West Yorkshire county council as prepared by the West Yorkshire residuary body were published in December 1986. These set out the financial position of the county council and its various committees as at the date of abolition. Copies of the abstract of accounts are available from the West Yorkshire residuary body.

Mortgages

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he is giving to reform of the present law of mortgages in the light of proposals of the Law Commission working paper No. 99 of 1986, with a view to simplification of the law and provision of greater protection for home owners.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

This working paper was published as recently as October 1986 and has been circulated by the Commission as a consultation paper for comment and criticism only. The paper contains a number of proposals but these do not represent the final views of the Commission. Consideration will be given to the final recommendations once they have been produced as a report.

SCOTLAND

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he intends to lay before Parliament the statutory orders designating the Breadalbane and Loch Lomond environmentally sensitive areas;

(2) what sites he will consider for designation as environmentally sensitive areas in 1988 in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Police (Establishments)

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the currently authorised police manpower establishment for each police authority in Scotland;

(2) what is the latest information on police numbers in post for each police authority in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: The information, as at 31 December 1986, is as follows:

Police Authority	Authorised Establishment	Actual Strength[1]
Central	556	549 (12)
Dumfries and Galloway	333	338 (5)
Fife	732	725 (9)

Tayside	1,001	1,000 (11)
Total: Scotland	13,575	13,428 (142)

[1] Including officers on central service or with the Scottish Crime Squad as indicated in parenthesis.

Strathclyde and Lothian Regional Councils (Budgets)

Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from industrial and commercial interests requesting action against Strathclyde and Lothian regional councils in respect of their proposed budgets for 1987-88; and when he expects to reply.

Mr. Rifkind: I have received 17 such representations from industrial or commercial interests or from their representative bodies in the last few weeks. I have also received numerous letters from members of the public. I shall shortly be assessing all local authorities' budgets in detail and expect to announce any decisions on selective action around the end of April.

Medicine (Training Opportunities)

Sir Alex Fletcher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review the arrangement for training opportunities in general medicine as part of the vocational training for doctors wishing to enter general practice, in the light of the reduction in the number of senior house officer posts in general medicine in the Lothian health board area.

Mr. Rifkind: In Scotland the number of doctors undertaking vocational training for general practice is more than sufficient compared to the number of vacancies. The detailed arrangements for allocation of training posts within overall hospital establishments in Lothian is a matter for the health board.

Local Authority Housebuilding

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the share respectively of (a) public direct labour schemes and (b) private contractors' schemes in local authority housebuilding for the years 1985 and 1986, respectively, in Scotland.

Mr. Ancram: Complete information is not available centrally. However schemes covered by returns made by local authorities to the Scottish Development Department for the years 1985 and 1986, covering approximately 70 per cent. of all new-build dwellings in tenders accepted for those years, were all by private contractors.

Drugs

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many offences under the Misuse of Drugs Act have been dealt with by Glasgow district court in each of the last five years, and in the most recent period for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: The information requested is set out in the table:

Drugs Offences Dealt with by Glasgow District Court

[2] Provisional.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prosecutions for (a) supply and (b) possession of controlled drugs have taken place in Scotland in each of the last five years; and how many have resulted in conviction.

Mr. Rifkind: The available information on persons proceeded against for offences under Drugs legislation and other offences where controlled drugs are involved, and on persons found guilty, is as follows. Figures for 1986 are not yet available.

Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland in how many cases a fine has been imposed in terms of section 193B of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975; and how many of these fines have been (a) less than £10,000, (b) more than £10,000 but not exceeding £20,000, (c) exceeding £20,000 but not exceeding £50,000 and (d) exceeding £50,000.

Mr. Rifkind: Section 193B of the 1975 Act came into force on 30 December 1985. Provisional figures for January to September 1986 show that seven persons were fined by Scottish courts for offences under sections 4(2), 4(3) or 5(3) of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, in addition to sentences of imprisonment following proceedings on indictment. Of these, six were fined less than £10,000 and one was fined between £10,000 and £20,000. Information on the fines imposed for other offences mentioned in section 193B is not available.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland in how many cases a fine imposed under section 193B of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975 has been paid in full; and in how many cases an additional term of imprisonment has been imposed as a result of non-payment.

Mr. Rifkind: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Drug Offences

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the numbers of people who have appeared in the High Court charged with drug offences in the most recent year for which records are available and the percentage which that number represents of the total number of appearances in the High Court for all offences.

Mr. Rifkind: In 1985, the most recent year for which figures are available, 310 people were proceeded against for drugs offences in the High Court in Scotland. This represented 26 per cent. of all persons proceeded against in the High Court. These figures include persons remitted to the High Court for sentence.

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names of the members of the Scottish legal aid board, their qualifications for appointment, and their period of appointment.

Out-of-Town Shopping Developments

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines he has issued to local authorities in Scotland regarding planning applications for out-of-town shopping developments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: In recognition of the significant changes which have taken place in recent years in shopping facilities and shopping patterns, my Department initiated consultations early last year on a revision of the national planning guidelines on the location of major retail developments. This led to the issue of new guidelines in December 1986. The guidelines were issued under cover of Scottish development circular No. 38/1986, and I am arranging for a copy to be sent to the right hon. Member.

Redundancies

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many companies have reported redundancies to him, and how many have closed down, in Fife since June 1979.

Mr. Ian Lang: There are no comprehensive statistics on redundancies. The following information relates to the numbers of redundancies and closures affecting 10 or more workers notified to the Manpower Services Commission as due to occur in Fife during the period July 1979 to December 1986. During this period there were 411 reports of confirmed redundancies of which 125 related to closures.

Scottish Development Agency (Expenditure)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent by the Scottish Development Agency in (a) Fife, (b) Dunfermline district and (c) Kirkcaldy district in each year since 1975, and as a proportion of rural expenditure on (i) environmental improvement, (ii) industrial investment and (iii) all Scottish Development Agency expenditure.

Mr. Lang: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Sir Thomas and Lady Edith Dixon Hospital

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report the recital in the introductory part of the conveyance under which the Department of Health and Social Services holds the Sir Thomas and Lady Edith Dixon hospital, Cairndhu, Larne, Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The recital is as follows:

"And whereas the Donors have agreed to convey to the Ministry [now the Department of Health and Social Services] the lands hereditaments and premises known as "Cairndhu" hereinafter more particularly described for use as a Convalescent Home or Hospital said Convalescent Home or Hospital to be known as 'The Sir Thomas and Lady Edith Dixon Hospital'".

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is aware of any express declaration of trust inhibiting the sale of St. Thomas and Lady Edith Dixon hospital, Cairndhu, Larne; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The conveyance under which the Department of Health and Social Services holds the Sir Thomas and Lady Edith Dixon hospital does not contain a declaration of trust in express terms. However, doubts have arisen as to the effect of the introductory recital and the matter is being referred to the Chancery court in Northern Ireland for a ruling.

Ballyharry Primary School

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects work to commence on site for the new Ballyharry primary school, Newtownards; what plans he has to improve the Donaghadee road near the junction with Cronstown road in anticipation of increased traffic going to Ballyharry school; and how many road accidents there were between Cronstown road junction and the access to the new Ballyharry school in the last three months of 1986.

Mr. Needham: I understand that the South Eastern education and library board has scheduled work to start on site in August 1987.

The Department of the Environment has a proposal to improve a section of route A48 Newtownards to Donaghadee road near its junction with Cronstown. This scheme is at detailed preparation stage and its implementation will be dependent on the completion of the statutory processes and finance. The scheme is not considered to be related to the provision of the new Ballyharry primary school, which is to be accessed from the recently reconstructed Movilla road.

The only personal injury accident, during the last quarter of 1986, in the general area between the proposed school site and Cronstown road occurred within the estate road system, at the junction of Abbeydale avenue and Abbeydale park.

Calf Subsidy Payments

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many calf subsidy payments are still outstanding for calves which were punched in September, October and November 1986; to what factors he attributes such delays; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: Only 71 out of a total of 16,437 claims submitted under the calf premium scheme in the autumn 1986 period are still outstanding. These claims required further investigation. Computer programming difficulties and a shortage of funds prior to 31 December 1986, the end of the EC financial year, contributed to delays.

Comber

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the planned population growth for Comber over the next 15 years; what plans there are to reduce traffic congestion in the town during the same period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The North Down and Ards area plan covers the period 1984 to 1995 and allows for a population increase of the order of 1,500 people in Comber; the development of Comber beyond 1995 would be considered in the context of a review of the Plan at the appropriate time.

During 1987-88 the Department of the Environment's roads service will be reviewing the proposed scheme for a southern bypass of Comber which would direct through traffic away from the centre of Comber.

At this stage it is not possible to give an indication of when the scheme will start.

Adult Education

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration has been given to the establishment of a comprehensive review of adult education in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government have no such plans at present. However, it will keep the need for a review under consideration, especially in light of any recommendation which might be made to it by the Northern Ireland Council for continuing education.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Government have any plans for the formation of an umbrella body to oversee and co-ordinate adult education in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Convicted Terrorists

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will initiate a review of the policy of remission for convicted terrorists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Like all aspects of the prison regime in Northern Ireland, the current arrangements for remission of sentences and the accompanying conditional release scheme are kept under regular review. It is Government policy that as far as possible there is no distinction made between the treatment of prisoners convicted of scheduled offences and those convicted of non-scheduled offences.

Landlords

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement regarding the enforcement of articles 54 and 56 of the Rent (Northern Ireland) Order 1978, indicating what responsibility the Department of the Environment or the Royal Ulster Constabulary exercise in the prosecution of landlords who illegally evict or harass tenants; and if he will detail any record of involvement by his Department or the police in such prosecutions or other aspects of enforcement of these articles.

Mr. Needham: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Border Security

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland why it is found necessary to bring to the attention of the relevant authorities occasions when the forces of the United Kingdom or of the Irish Republic, acting against terrorists, cross or over-fly the Irish border; and if he will endeavour to improve co-operation and understanding with the security forces of the Republic.

Mr. Tom King: I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Waiting Lists

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures for the number of people on hospital in-patient waiting lists at 30 September 1986 in each health district and health region for which figures are now available.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friends the Members for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) and Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) on 13 March at column 333.

National Insurance Contributions

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many individuals paid self-employed national insurance contributions for each year from 1957 to 1979.

Mr. Major: The information is as follows. The two tables are not directly comparable because of the changes in the system which took effect in 1975.

Cows' Milk (Hormones)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures he has taken to determine whether there are health risks associated with the human consumption of milk products derived from the milk of cows which have been treated with the hormone bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Newton: No product licence for any preparation of bovine somatotropin has been granted under the Medicines Act 1968. Animal trials are in progress under the terms of animal test certificates issued by the licensing authority, which consists of Health and Agriculture Ministers acting jointly. Before issuing these certificates, the licensing authority obtained the advice of the Veterinary Products Committee, an independent expert body established under the provisions of the Medicines Act. The committee scrutinised thoroughly evidence of safety and other matters, including the safety of consumers receiving milk or other produce from treated animals. No health risks were identified at any stage.

Nurses

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the numbers of nurses employed by the National Health Service for each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is shown in the table.

Spectacles

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence he has of restrictive trading practices being operated by opticians in the retail sale of spectacles.

Mr. Newton: The retail sale of spectacles is now conducted entirely through the private market and we have no information on restrictive practices relating to such sales. The Department is however considering allegations that opticians in one area are not providing patients with prescriptions following the National Health Service sight test.

Benefits

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Walthamstow and in the London borough of Waltham Forest, respectively, have been in receipt of (a) supplementary benefit and (b) housing benefit in each year since 1980.

Mr. Lyell: Walthamstow is covered by the Department's local office at Walthamstow. The London borough of Waltham Forest is covered by the Department's local offices at Walthamstow, Leytonstone, Woodgrange Park and Edmonton but their boundaries are not conterminous with those of the borough. The table shows the number of people receiving supplementary benefit from these offices on 10 February 1987 — the latest information available — and on comparable dates since 1980.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how many claims for (a) death grant and (b) maternity grant were made at (i) Cowdenbeath, (ii) Dunfermline and (iii) Kirkcaldy social security offices during 1986 or the last full year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lyell: The information requested is as follows:

	(a) Death grant	(b) Maternity grant
Cowdenbeath	529	556
Dunfermline	880	1,226
Kirkcaldy	1,560	459

The figures quoted are for the 1986 calendar year.

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply of 16 March 1987, at column 413 about the income of a 15 year-old child, in what circumstances the amount would be less or more than the £15·60 given in his reply.

Mr. Major: The figure of £15·60 represents the normal supplementary benefit requirements of a dependent child aged over 11 but under 16 where the person claiming benefit in respect of that child is either a householder or a member of someone else's household. Those requirements can be modified as follows:

Circumstances	Amount of child's requirements
1. Family resident in board and lodging accommodation.	An amount for the board and lodging charge plus any meals not included in the charge (subject to certain limits) plus £5·15 for personal expenses.
2. Child in hospital over 12 weeks.	£7·90
3. Family receiving benefit under the urgent cases provisions during the first 14 days of a claim.	£10·40

If the child suffers from an illness or disability which gives rise to necessary extra expenditure, for example, for heating, special diet, laundry, wear and tear on clothing, additional benefit may be paid.

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 16 March 1987, at column 413 about the income of a 15 year-old child, if the amount of £15·60 quoted in his reply includes child benefit.

Mr. Major: Yes.

Diet and Behaviour

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what experiments are being carried out at Aycliffe school under the auspices of the British Society for Nutritional Medicine concerning the inter-relationship between diet and behaviour; whether this is with the consent of those involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I am advised that the British Society for Nutritional Medicine has had two preliminary meetings with staff of the Aycliffe community home with a view to providing a number of children with meals which have less sugar, salt and saturated fats but a higher fibre content than the meals traditionally provided. After a trial period comparisons could be made between those who had kept to the traditional meals and those who had been provided with the new meals. The meetings with the BSNM took place with the approval of the management board of Aycliffe, which is a controlled community home with education. The controlling authority is Durham county council.

Board and Lodging Charges

Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether special consideration is being given, in connection with proposed changes in legislation for helping people on low incomes with board and lodging charges, to the position of women and children who because of violence in the family home are forced to seek accommodation at women's aid refuges.

Mr. Major: A wide range of interested organisations have responded to the consultative paper on proposals for help with board and lodging charges under the reformed social security scheme. We are giving close consideration to the points that have been raised, including the position of people living in women's aid refuges.

Breast and Cervical Cancer

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women have died from cancer (a) of the cervix and (b) of the breast in the London borough of Waltham Forest in 1970, 1980 and the latest year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table.

Dental Charges

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will extend the existing regulations to allow appeals in respect of financial assistance with dental charges, under the current low income grounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have no plans to amend the regulations in the way suggested. If the hon. Member has evidence of a problem in a particular case perhaps he will write to me.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the proposed work of the new Health Education Authority in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Newton: The prime responsibility of the new authority will be health education in England, although it will take the lead for the United Kingdom as a whole in respect of the AIDS campaign. The Department of Health and Social Services (Northern Ireland) has arranged for the authority to provide it with health educational services and materials for a period on an agency basis.

Whooping Cough Vaccine

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether the Committee on Safety of Medicines has assessed the similarities and differences between the Japanese acellular whooping cough vaccine and the development in vaccines made but not exploited by United States compaines in the 1960s;

(2) whether the Committee on Safety of Medicines has taken any steps to evaluate the difference in safety and efficacy between the whole whooping cough vaccine used by the National Health Service and the acellular vaccine used in other countries;

(3) if he will request the Committee on Safety of Medicines to examine the relevance to current research of the evidence that has recently been produced in courts in the United States regarding attempts by American companies in the 1960s to produce a safe whooping cough vaccine; and if he will make a statement;

(4) whether the Committee of Safety on Medicines is liaising with the Swedish health authorities in their assessment of the efficacy and safety of the Japanese acellular whooping cough vaccine following tests with the vaccine on very young Swedish children; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if he will ensure that the Committee on Safety of Medicines, after the Swedish tests on the Japanese whooping cough vaccine are completed, will immediately assess whether there should be a British test with a view to using the vaccine in Britain, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Consideration by the Committee on Safety of Medicines of data relating to acellular pertussis vaccines will take place only in the context of applications for clinical trial certificates under Section 31 of the medicines Act 1968. The Committee will take account of all the evidence available to it in deciding what advice to tender to the licensing authority.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if there is any mechanism whereby the Committee on Safety of Medicines is kept informed of the evidence given in American whooping cough court cases which are won by the plaintiff or are settled out of court in favour of the plaintiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: No. The Committee on Safety of Medicines would, however, consider any scientific evidence affecting the safety, quality or efficacy of a medicinal product currently on the market or in connection with an application for a product licence.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) which companies have provided whooping cough vaccine for the National Health Service;

(2) if he will list the American manufacturers of whooping cough vaccine which have supplied any such vaccine to the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Whooping cough vaccine for use in the National Health Service is purchased, under central supply arrangements, from the Wellcome Foundation Ltd. No American manufactured vaccine has been used in the NHS.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultation there has been with the Japanese health authorities regarding their use of the acellular whooping cough vaccine.

Mr. Newton: The Department has not been in direct touch with the Japanese health authorities, but officials have attended international meetings and noted papers published in English language journals. The United States Public Health Service arranged a tour of Japan to monitor vaccine development, production and usage. The report on that visit was made freely available to the Medical Research Council's subcommittee on whooping cough vaccines, which is part of the Committee on the Development of Vaccines and Immunisation Procedures.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether there have been any discussions between the manufacturers of the whooping cough vaccine used in Britain and his Department regarding the court cases that families of vaccine-damaged children are bringing to seek compensation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: In 1985 Wellcome discussed with officials the role of the Department in legal proceedings relating to whooping cough vaccines. Discussions have since been held with the solicitors acting for the manufacturer about the use to be made in the Loveday case currently before the High Court of documents obtained by the manufacturer from the Committee on Safety of Medicines and the Department as a result of an application for discovery of documents in the earlier Kinnear case.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the Committee on Safety of Medicines has made any study of the incidence of whooping cough, and, in particular, hospitalisation and deaths resulting from whooping cough, in those countries which have stopped advising parents to have their children vaccinated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: No. However, in considering an application for a licence for whooping cough vaccine, the Committee on Safety of Medicines would take account of all available scientific evidence on the incidence and effects of whooping cough.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to whether the nature of the whole cell whooping cough vaccine used in Britain differs significantly from the whole cell vaccines used in the United States; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The only significant difference between the whole cell vaccines used in the United Kingdom and in the United States of America is that the latter has a higher potency than the former. The vaccine used in this country conforms to the World Health Organisation standard.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what criticisms have been made to his Department of the conclusions of the National Childhood Encephalopathy Study about the statistical chances of a child suffering brain damage following whooping cough vaccination; who made the criticisms; and what alternative probabilities they suggested.

Mr. Newton: The principal criticisms of the Study's conclusions have been made by Professor G. C. Stewart in the British Medical Journal and at a World Health Organisation conference in Geneva in 1984. Professor Stewart's conclusion was that the estimated risk from vaccination was greater than the 1 in 100,000 three dose courses reached by the study.

The joint committee on vaccination and immunisation has studied these criticisms and does not accept Professor Stewart's calculations on the risks from whooping cough vaccination or from the disease itself. The joint committee remains firmly convinced that the benefits of whooping cough vaccination far outweigh the risks, and that, with due attention to contra-indications, whopping cough vaccination should continue to be recommended as part of the basic course for childhood immunisation.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the numbers in Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy district social security offices who have received exceptionally severe weather allowances in the current year.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Doctors and Dentists (Hampstead)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many doctors and dentists were employed in the Hampstead health authority or its predecessor in 1979, 1983 and the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Newton: Information for the years 1983 and 1986 is as follows. I regret that information is not available on a comparable basis for 1979, due to the effects of boundary changes following the National Health Service re-organisation in 1982.

NHS Medical and Dental Staff Employed in Hampstead Health Authority (Teaching)

Nurses (Hampstead)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nurses were employed by the Hampstead health authority, or its predecessor in (a) 1979, (b) 1983 and (c) the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Newton: Information for the years 1983 and 1985 (the latest available to this level of detail), is as follows. I regret that information for the former North Camden district health authority is not available on a comparable basis for 1979, due to the effects of boundary changes following the National Health Service reorganisation in 1982.

Camden Family Practitioner Service

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the expenditure of the Camden family practitioner service or its predecessor in (a) 1979, (b) 1983 and (c) the latest date for which information is available; and what was the average size of patient list on each of those dates.

Mr. Newton: The information available in relation to the Camden and Islington family practitioner committee is as follows:

(a) Expenditure on the family practitioner services

Financial year	£ million
1979-80	13,123,470
1983-84	22,960,975
1985-86	26,753,570

Housing Benefit

Mr. Gorst asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to raise the capital cut-off of £6,000 provided for in section 22(6) of the new housing benefit reform Act as it affects owner-occupiers currently in receipt of rebate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lyell: Section 22(6) of the Social Security Act contains a general power to prescribe a capital cut-off. The actual figure will be in regulations to be laid before Parliament. The White Paper "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9691) proposed for illustrative purposes that in all income-related benefits capital up to £3,000 should be ignored but a cut-off should be applied at £6,000. This is considerably higher than the £3,000 cut-off currently applied in supplementary benefit.

Pensions

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase pensions in the light of the £6 million windfall in Government revenue.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend announced on 22 October 1986 that pensions would be increased by 2·1 per cent. from 6 April 1987, in line with the rise in prices over the appropriate period.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will have been the fall in the real value of the basic retirement pension rate to be paid from 6 April as a result of pensions and other long-term benefits, including the long-term rate of supplementary benefit, not having been increased in line with the percentage rise in average earnings since November 1978; and what would be the cost in 1987-88 of using the rise in average earnings as the yardstick for pension increases rather than the retail price index.

Mr. Major: If the basic retirement pension and linked long-term benefits had been increased in line with the movement in average earnings (whole economy, seasonally adjusted) between November 1978 and September 1986, the end of the calculation period for the uprating taking place in April 1987, the pension at April would be £43·70 for a single person and £69·90 for a married couple. It is not possible to calculate changes in the real value at April until April retail price index figures are available. Prior to 1980, the long-term rate of supplementary benefit was not increased in relation to earnings, but by the same cash amount as the increase in retirement pension.

If pensions and linked long-term benefits were increased to these amounts in April 1987, and if supplementary pensions and the long-term rate of supplementary allowance for recipients of long-term contributory benefits were increased by the same cash amount, the additional cost in 1987-88 would be about £2 billion above that already provided for. No change in the level of housing benefit needs allowances has been assumed.

Maternity and Funeral Payments

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will announce the arrangements for the introduction of maternity and funeral payments under the social fund following enactment on 17 March of the Social Fund (Maternity and Funeral Expenses) Act 1987.

Mr. Major: Regulations were laid before Parliament for this purpose yesterday.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much was paid in supplementary benefit to single people under the age of 18 years in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 10 February 1987, c. 196]: Based on the number of single claimants aged under 18 and the average weekly payment to them on a particular day in December each year, the annual equivalent expenditure was as follows:

Year	Expenditure £ million
1982	188
1983	163
1984	191

These figures cannot be regarded as a complete or precise estimate of total expenditure on supplementary benefit to this group of claimants because—

(a) They take no account of the seasonal variations in the numbers in this group which are likely to arise because of the patterns in school leaving; and

(b) Only regular weekly payments are covered and not other payments such as single payments for exceptional needs.

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report lists showing (a) those long-stay mental hospitals currently approved for closure, (b) those long-stay mental hospitals listed in regional strategic plans as proposed for closure before 1995 and (c) those long-stay mental hospitals that have been indicated by regional health authorities as possibilities for closure outside the strategic planning period listing in each instance the present number of in-patients.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 21 January 1987, c. 619-20]: The primary objective of policy on services for people who are mentally ill is the development of a range of high quality local facilities so that people can use the services they need with the minimum of formality and delay, and without losing touch with their everyday lives. The reduction in size of some hospitals, and the closure of others, will be a consequence of achieving that aim, and accompanied by the development of psychiatric services in each district which now lacks them. These will provide in-patient facilities for people who need admission for assessment, acute treatment, or longer term care, together with a comprehensive range of community facilities.

Almost all mental illness hospitals care for both long-stay and short-stay patients, but I have obtained information on the one hundred or so large traditional mental illness hospitals (that is, those which had over 200 beds in 1975), which care for most long-stay patients. Of these hospitals, table 1 indicates those where public consultation has been completed and closure approved, in both cases with the support of the local community health council. It indicates when closure was approved, and the number of in-patients on 31 December 1985.

Table 2 lists those hospitals which regional health authorities have indicated they plan to close by about 1995, subject to the results of the public consultation, which has yet to take place or is now under way, and the provision of appropriate alternative accommodation and services. Some of the in-patient care provided by these hospitals will still be needed and some parts of hospitals, for example wards providing acute care and psychogeriatric care, will move with their patients to new locations meeting the aims set out in the first paragraph above. Regional health authorities' plans must also meet the needs of those long-stay patients who need continuing in-patient care. And plans must provide too for the identification of other suitable accommodation and support (which will need to be tailored to the needs of individual patients) for those who no longer need to remain in in-patient care.

Most of these closure proposals were included in regional strategic plans, but the list takes account of changes since then. Circumstances do not enable regional health authorities to indicate systematically any plans for the period after 1995 or so.

University Research Staff (Pay)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what provision he has made in his Department's research budget to allow for the pay settlement for university research staff which has just been agreed with the Association of University Teachers.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 3 March 1987 c. 587]: We are considering the implications of the pay settlement for non-clinical academic staff for the Department's research programme.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish details of the progress being made by health authorities in putting their services out to tender in the manner of the answer of 25 November 1986, Official Report column 214.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 9 March 1987, c. 73]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) on 19 March.

Liverpool (Rates)

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total amount of payments in respect of the rate rebates element of housing benefit subsidy which were withheld from the Liverpool city council during the period 1 April to 14 June 1985 when that local authority delayed setting a rate; and what amount of interest accrued to his Department on the payments withheld.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 19 March 1987,]: As a result of its delay in setting a rate, advance payments on account of rate rebate subsidy totalling £4,705,838 were not made to Liverpool city council during the period 1 April 1985 to 14 June 1985. It is not possible to give a figure for the amount of interest since the calculation would depend on hypothetical assumptions about how central Government's financing would have been carried out in other circumstances.

AIDS

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many young persons he estimates have been, or are, currently held in secure units in community homes under care orders who have the AIDS virus; under what Act and section they are held; and how long they have been held;

(2) how many young persons held in community homes have been tested for HIV; how many of these were consulted before the tests were carried out, how many agreed and refused; how many were HIV positive; and, in the case of this latter group, what consequent decisions have been taken concerning their treatment or detention.

Mr. Fowler [pursuant to his reply, 19 March 1987]: Following statements made by the hon. Member earlier this week, officials from my Department spoke to the officers in charge of each of the country's 40 secure units. Information from that check and from our two youth treatment centres shows that no child is being held because he or she has the AIDS virus.

Criteria for admission to secure accommodation are strict and are laid down by law. They are administered by the juvenile courts. I do not believe that a juvenile court would issue a secure accommodation order simply because a child has the AIDS virus and it would be wrong to do so.

Medical records of children in secure accommodation are confidential and are not held centrally.

I hope the hon. Member will now withdraw his allegation that children are being locked away in secure accommodation because they have the AIDS virus.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 112

SESSION 1986–87

9th March—20 March 1987

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.

Oral Answers to Questions

WALES

Labour Statistics

2. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest unadjusted figures for unemployment in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales; and if he will give the equivalent figures for 1979 on the most nearly comparable basis.

The Secretary of State for Wales (Mr. Nicholas Edwards): On 12 February 1987 the total numbers of unemployed claimants in Newport district, Gwent and Wales were 9,758, 27,708 and 171,393 respectively. Unadjusted figures for 1979 are not available on a basis which enables a valid comparison to be made.

Mr. Hughes: Are these figures not critically high, despite the 19 changes in the method by which they are compiled? Is not the claim that unemployment is coming down a bit of a fantasy? Will the Secretary of State confirm that manufacturing output and investment are down on 1979 levels? Is this not a tragic legacy to leave after eight continuous years of office?

Mr. Edwards: It is not a fantasy that unemployment is coming down. The legacy is that unemployment, seasonally adjusted, is down by 15,000 from its peak in March 1986. It has fallen for nine consecutive months and for 10 out of the last 11 months. The fall over the last 12 months of 1·1 per cent. is the largest drop of all the regions of the United Kingdom, as was the fall this month. This is good news for Wales, as I hope that the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) will agree.

Sir Raymond Gower: As notified vacancies are sometimes a better guide to the progress of the economy, will my right hon. Friend tell us about the changes in the number of notified vacancies for each of those months?

Mr. Edwards: Not only are the unemployment figures down, but vacancies are up 2,390 on February 1986. Indeed, all the indicators point in the same direction—the number of regional selective assistance applications in the first two months of 1987, and the sharp reduction in redundancies over the last 12 months. Almost any set of indicators shows a strong recovery of economic activity in Wales and a great improvement in unemployment.

Mr. Foot: Everyone welcomes any fall in the unemployment figures, but will the right hon. Gentleman tell us how long, at this pace of reduction, it would be before the unemployment total was back to the still serious level of 1979?

Mr. Edwards: If we go on at this pace of reduction, on the policies that we are pursuing, we will meet the Labour party's stated objective of reducing unemployment over the next two years. We have a policy that is working. The results show that it works. The Labour party does not have a policy, except to increase inflation and increase costs on employment generally, and almost certainly, therefore, to destroy the prospects that it seeks to create.

Mr. Raffan: Will my right hon. Friend join me in welcoming the collaboration agreement that was signed this morning between British Coal and Ruhrkohle Oil and Gas which brings Ruhrkohle into the Point of Ayr coal-to-oil liquefaction project? Will he also welcome the simultaneous announcement by the Department of Energy that the £2·5 million worth of support for the project, which was conditional on acceptable private sector participation, will now be made available?

Mr. Edwards: That project is relevant and will create jobs in north Wales. I can confirm that my right hon. Friend has made £2·5 million worth of support available, and that will cover the period of construction, commissioning and operation of the plant.

Mr. Geraint Howells: Does the Secretary of State have any further plans to reduce unemployment in mid-Wales, and in Teifi valley in particular?

Mr. Edwards: There has been an improvement in the unemployment figures over the last 12 months in all Welsh travel-to-work areas. We recently announced a package of measures for the rural areas, including a series of special encouragements and incentives for the creation of new firms. I am sure that that will make a strong contribution to job creation in areas such as the hon. Gentleman represents.

Primary Schools (Expenditure)

3. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Wales how much was spent per pupil in primary schools in Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure for 1978-79, at constant prices.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales (Mr. Wyn Roberts): In 1985-86 the amount spent per pupil in primary schools in Wales was £825. The equivalent figure for 1978-79 was £724.

Mr. Knox: Do those figures not make nonsense of allegations that primary schools in Wales are short of cash?

Mr. Roberts: My hon. Friend is right, in that total expenditure has remained broadly constant in real terms. At the same time, pupil numbers have been falling. We now have the best pupil-teacher ratio, but I must admit that there are about 56,000 surplus places in primary schools. If we were able to eliminate the surplus places we would have more resources for primary schools.

Mr. Coleman: Is the Minister aware of the lobby of Parliament tomorrow by parent-teacher associations to complain about education in Wales, and in particular about primary education? In view of the experience of parents and teachers, who are much closer to what is going on in our schools than we here are, how can the Minister justify the answer that he has just given?

Mr. Roberts: I am aware of the intended lobby, but I understand that the parents are more than likely to complain about the disgraceful disruption in our schools. I hope that they will condemn Mr. Smithies, the general secretary of the NAS/UWT who says that the half-day strikes will continue until the election. That is a clear sign that he is trying to turn our schools into political battle grounds.

Mr. Wigley: Will the Minister confirm that since the hon. Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox) last asked this question — which is becoming a little tedious — the position in our schools has worsened considerably in terms of the reality for pupils, in terms of the text books and materials that they need and in terms of the maintenance of the buildings that they attend? Is it not high time that adequate resources were allocated to ensure that the schools are worthy of the pupils?

Mr. Roberts: It is clear from my answer that we are spending more per pupil in Wales. On materials we have made additional funds available, particularly for secondary school pupils involved in the general certificate of secondary education. However, it is up to the local education authorities to concentrate resources into capitation fees.

Mr. Barry Jones: That was an evasive reply. Why is it that many schools in Wales, in spite of careful spending of capitation cash, have to apply it to basic items such as text books and stationery? Does the Minister agree that parents want smaller classes, more teachers, more nurseries and more books and equipment? Is it not shameful that our schools go begging while the Budget can assist, say, the Duke of Westminster's estate by about £600 million in inheritence tax?

Mr. Roberts: Not only are there 56,000 surplus places in primary schools, but, taken overall, there are about 150,000 of them in primary and secondary schools in Wales. That means wasted expenditure of about £18 million per annum. That money could be spent on more worthy causes within education. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made available extra money for education in the coming year.

Fluoridation

4. Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales which health authorities in Wales permit fluoridation of water supplies.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales (Mr. Mark Robinson): The powers to permit fluoridation of water supplies rest with water authorities acting on requests from district health authorities. Certain areas within the Gwynedd and Powys district health authorities' areas currently receive fluoridated water supplies.

Mr. Wardell: Can the Minister confirm, first, that when some foods are cooked in water that has been fluoridated — especially acidic foods — and possibly cooked in aluminium utensils, there is a large ingestion of aluminium into the human body? Secondly, will he confirm that there is some research to show that Alzheimer's disease is linked to the ingestion of large quantities of aluminium? If those two statements are confirmed, will the hon. Gentleman ban the use of fluoride in water in Wales?

Mr. Robinson: The hypothesis that aluminium may be relevant to the cause of Alzheimer's disease is one of many under investigation. I am aware that the Medical Research Council is researching such a hypothesis, and I can assure the hon. Gentleman that the Government will give full consideration to any recommendations that may emerge.

Mr. Grist: Is my right hon. Friend aware that the incidence of dental caries has been falling considerably in recent years and that therefore there is no excuse to force fluoridation on to those many people who do not want it?

Mr. Robinson: I am aware of improvements in dental care, but, at the same time, my hon. Friend should be aware that many parents are in favour of fluoridation.

Dr. Roger Thomas: Does the Minister agree that the reduction in dental caries on the island of Anglesey by over 50 per cent. over a period of 40 years is a glowing example of interventionist medicine?

Mr. Robinson: I certainly agree with the hon. Gentleman. Those findings have been borne out by recently conducted opinion research.

Mr. Best: Is my hon. Friend aware that the majority of people in Anglesey are against the artificial fluoridation of water supplies? Is my hon. Friend further aware that a recent survey conducted by the Ynys Môn and Isle of Anglesey borough council showed conclusively that the vast majority were against such fluoridation? Is he also aware that Gwynedd health authority continues artificially to fluoridate the water of Anglesey against the wishes of the people? Is it not about time that a non-elected health authority took some cognisance of the democratic wishes of the people?

Mr. Robinson: My hon. Friend is aware that fluoridation of the water in Anglesey has been a continuing policy for some time, certainly before the Bill that the Government recently piloted through the House of Commons.

Beef Production

5. Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from farmers organisations on the future of beef production in Wales.

Mr. Edwards: I have received representations about the future of the beef industry in Wales both from farmers' organisations and from individuals. These representations covered a very wide range of issues concerning the beef regime and the impact of measures taken by the European Commission in the dairy sector.

Mr. Livsey: Will the Secretary of State urge his colleagues, who are involved in the Brussels price negotiations, to have a major devaluation of the green pound, of at least 12 per cent.? It is practically impossible at the present time—I am sure the right hon. Gentleman will agree—for Welsh beef producers to make a profit out of that enterprise. We shall have little beef enterprise left if the present position is allowed to drift.

Mr. Edwards: I am sure the hon. Gentleman will agree that the December reforms represented a considerable step forward in improving the beef regime in general and reducing the dependence on intervention. I certainly agree that the relative green pound discrepancies and valuations will be a matter that will be in the forefront of the negotiations that will take place in the coming weeks in Brussels.

Sir Raymond Gower: Will my right hon. Friend take account of the fact that, while many of our farmers are alive to the problems of over-production in many types of farming, they are deeply concerned at the possibility that, having been driven out of milk production, and having moved into beef production, they may now be driven out of beef production? This seems to be a never-ending tendency and the farmers are extremely worried. I hope that my right hon. Friend will consider this problem extremely carefully.

Mr. Edwards: I understand the concern of farmers about this matter and their anxiety about knock-on consequences of the various changes in the CAP support system. I believe that we made remarkable progress in December, especially with the protection of the beef premium scheme, for which we have fought so hard and consistently over recent years. Having said that, I also understand that there is a great deal of anxiety about the green pound discrepancies and, clearly, that matter will be a part of the negotiations that are now under way.

Mr. Roy Hughes: Is it not a fact that farmers are now a thoroughly dissatisfied body, as witness their recent vote of no confidence in a Conservative Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food? Farmers are asking why they should cut their production when Britain is far from self-sufficient in its production of food.

Mr. Edwards: The hon. Gentleman should not try to give the impression that the Labour party would avoid substantial changes in the CAP and a reduction of the huge European surpluses. The Opposition spokesman on agriculture is much too straightforward and honest to pretend anything of the sort. It does not help if the hon. Member for Newport (Mr. Hughes) pretends at the Opposition Dispatch Box that the Labour party supports policies that would not involve a substantial reduction in the heavy overspending that is going on in Europe to produce surpluses.

House Building

6. Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many housing starts were made in (a) the public sector and (b) the private sector in Wales during 1986.

Mr. Mark Robinson: In 1986, 1,276 dwellings were started in the public sector and 7,136 in the private sector.

Mr. Wigley: Is the Minister aware that that figure represents a total build in the public sector in the past seven years in Wales of only 14,000 houses, when there would have been 36,000 had the level that prevailed in 1978 continued? That means a loss of 22,000 houses in the public sector. At the same time, the Government have arranged the selling off of 50,000 council houses. Therefore, there has been a loss of council housing for rent in Wales of over 70,000 units. Is it any wonder that people in Wales are having difficulty in finding houses in which to live, because of the public sector sales policy and the lack of building that has taken place under the Government?

Mr. Robinson: I am not entirely sure to which figures the hon. Gentleman is referring. I have given figures for one year, and it is worth stating that during that year the number of private sector completions rose to over 7,000 houses. That is the first time that that has been achieved for a number of years. There has been a rise in the number of houses completed in the private sector in every year for the past five years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Does my hon. Friend accept that Cardiff is being especially innovative with the announcement last week of a partnership of the city council, two housing associations and two building societies to build 600 new homes for rent in St. Mellons? Does my hon. Friend agree that there is the opportunity for many other developers to follow Cardiff's lead?

Mr. Robinson: I agree entirely with my hon. Friend. There is scope for an increase in the number of housing units that are available in the private rented sector. I predict with considerable confidence that 1987-88 will mark the start of a significantly rising trend in the provision of homes to rent in Wales.

Mr. Barry Jones: Is the Minister aware that there is a lack of conviction in his answers? May I remind the Minister that the Library research figure reveals plummeting investment in housing between 1983 and 1987 of some £61 million? As our housing problems have reached a crisis, why did the Budget neglect Wales? The contrast between the sleek south and Wales is painful. Is it not true that the Welsh economy is at the crossroads and that we needed from the Budget a cash boost for houses and cash for the Health Service? The Budget betrayed Wales.

Mr. Robinson: I remind the hon. Gentleman that in the current financial year there has been a substantial boost for housing in Wales——

Mr. Barry Jones: Downwards?

Mr. Robinson: No, upwards. It has been the Government's policy to encourage renovation in both the private and public sectors, and I shall remind the hon. Gentleman of the figures. The Conservative Government have spend £333 million repairing private stock, compared with the Labour Government's spending of £57 million. We have spent £259 million repairing public sector housing stock, compared with the Labour Government's £86 million. What sort of record is that?

Fire and Public Health Regulations

7. Sir Anthony Meyer asked the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with local authorities about enforcement of the fire and public health regulations in houses in multi-occupation in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I have asked my officials to undertake consultations with all local authorities and other relevant bodies in Wales with a view to bringing about improved safety and other standards in houses in multiple occupation. Those consultations are now under way.

Sir Anthony Meyer: I am grateful for that answer and somewhat reassured by it. Is my hon. Friend aware that the fall in standards accompanied by the increase in the number of houses in multiple occupation suggest that it is not just the resources that are made available to local authorities that are important, but that powers of entry are important, as landlords, are not always willing to allow inspections to take place to determine whether safety precautions are adequate.

Mr. Robinson: I am very much aware of my hon. Friend's point. There is indeed a far wider range of considerations, and that is why my officials are today discussing some of these problems with the Rhuddlan borough council.

Mr. Anderson: Does the Minister agree that it is not belated consultations that are needed, but action? The facts are well known to those who want to hear them, and were addressed in my HMO Bill. Does the Minister realise that more than £25 million is now spent by the DHSS in Wales on supplementary benefit claimants in bed-and-breakfast accommodation? Does he realise that that expenditure and the failure to monitor the quality of the accommodation for those claimants, have come about because the Government do not wish their woefully inadequate programme for young single people to be exposed?

Mr. Robinson: I am aware of the hon. Gentleman's interest in the matter. However, it is for local authorities and fire authorities to decide how they will use their existing powers. It is disappointing that only Swansea and Cardiff have so far taken advantage of the registration schemes available to them.

Mr. Rowlands: Is the Minister aware of the serious fire in Merthyr Tydfil only yesterday, in a property owned by a Mr. Elwyn Morgan? Eleven people were taken to hospital and four are still being detained. Is he further aware that the property had no valid planning permission and that Merthyr borough council, supported by the Welsh Office, had been trying to enforce orders for the best part of 15 months? Will the Minister investigate the particular circumstances of the fire? Does it not prove the need for better regulations and their more effective enforcement?

Mr. Robinson: I join the hon. Gentleman in expressing sympathy for those injured in the fire. The Welsh Office has supported the local authority in refusing planning permission for this house to be used for multiple occupation. The local authority had issued a statutory enforcement notice giving the landlord two months to stop using the house for that purpose. It is unfortunate that the accident occurred during that two-month period.

Swndwr Farm, Northop

8. Mr. Raffan asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy not to sell Swndwr farm, Northop, to British Coal for opencast mining; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. My right hon. Friend's general policy is to dispose of land surplus to highway requirements on the open market, subject to the advice of the district valuer. No land at Swndwr farm is yet available for disposal.

Mr. Raffan: Does my hon. Friend agree that the sale of any part of Swndwr land to British Coal would prejudice my right hon. Friend's position in relation to British Coal's forthcoming planning application for opencast coal extraction at Pont Einion? Will he assure the House that when it has been established what part of Swndwr farm is surplus to highway requirements, that surplus land will not be sold to British Coal?

Mr. Roberts: I cannot give my hon. Friend that assurance. The Department is not negotiating the sale of any part of Swndwr farm to British Coal, so his request is superfluous.

Mr. Roy Hughes: Does the Minister recall that, some time ago, we accused the Secretary of State of allowing opencast mining to take place anywhere other than in Pembroke? In view of the question asked by the hon. Member for Delyn (Mr. Raffan), I wonder whether Delyn is also to be in the exclusion zone, and whether the hon. Gentleman is seeking another election bribe.

Mr. Roberts: I do not think that that question is worthy of answer. My hon. Friend's question related specifically to Swndwr farm near Northop.

Anglesey (Public Funds)

9. Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to increase the amount of public funds provided through his Department or its agencies to Anglesey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The provision of total expenditure within my responsibility in 1987-88 represents an increase of 10 per cent. comparable provision for 1986-87. Anglesey will benefit from this along with the rest of Wales.

Mr. Best: I welcome my right hon. Friend's statement. Is he aware that there are a number of projects on Anglesey which are helping its regeneration and which are pump-primed by Welsh Office cash, such as the scheme at Llanfairpwll station and the generation of a fishing industry in Holyhead? How does this massive injection of Welsh Office cash into my constituency compare with the amounts available under the last Labour Administration?

Mr. Edwards: In general terms, the last Labour Administration cut capital expenditure hard, having got into a considerable mess, and having been directed to do so by the IMF. Since then there has been strong growth in the economy. We are increasing public expenditure at the same time as reducing taxation and borrowing. My hon. Friend is right. Holyhead has benefited particularly. There has also been a significant increase in spending on tourism on the island. My hon. Friend has rightly drawn attention to the rural package which has helped Pringle to produce its very exciting scheme at Llanfair PG.

Mr. Barry Jones: I remind the right hon. Gentleman that every fourth man in Holyhead is jobless, that nearly 5,000 people on the island are out of work and that the county has the worst unemployment record in Wales—all those statistics being a consequence of his policies. Why did the right hon. Gentleman accept in Cabinet a Budget that denies Wales a strategy for jobs? The Budget did nothing for Wales. Wales is forgotten by the right hon. Gentleman in this instance. We need a stronger regional policy, including discriminatory measures favouring Wales and the regions. Why did the Budget not help Wales?

Mr. Edwards: The hon. Gentleman is asking a question about the Budget and Wales, and particularly Anglesey. I cannot help noticing that unemployment in Holyhead fell by 3 per cent. in the 12 months until February, which is a larger fall than in almost any travel-to-work area in the whole of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Wigley: Why is the Secretary of State so coy about giving figures? Will he now come clean and admit that his Department's expenditure in the last financial year was, in real terms, 34 per cent. lower than it was 10 years before? Does that not reflect what the Government have done to Anglesey?

Mr. Edwards: I notice that the hon. Gentleman is now changing direction and using a point of expenditure before the IMF cuts. In recent years, as a result of economic growth, we have increased public expenditure substantially. There has been a 10 per cent. increase in public expenditure in Wales, while inflation has been about 4·5 per cent. That is the result of the economic policies which are producing extra expenditure, reduced taxes, lower unemployment and lower interest rates.

Job Training Schemes

10. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has about the progress to date of the job training scheme in the Welsh pilot area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Progress with the pilot in Neath and Port Talbot, which has provided places for over 300 entrants, has shown that the job training scheme offers unemployed people valuable training and work experience and the opportunity of a worthwhile vocational qualification.

Mr. Davies: I hope the Minister is not suggesting that the scheme is a success. If he is, can he explain why only 50 per cent. of the available places have been taken up and 50 per cent. of the people who have accepted a vacancy are over 25, when the scheme is intended for those under 25? Can he explain why only 18 per cent. of the vacancies have been taken up by women, when 40 per cent. of those who are unemployed and are eligible to be entrants are women?

Mr. Roberts: The hon. Gentleman has got his facts wrong. It is intended to extend the scheme nationwide as from the end of this month. There will be some 6,020 places available in Wales for this scheme by the autumn of 1987. Therefore, all the hon. Gentleman's comments on the scheme are limited to the pilot in Neath and Port Talbot. My overall impression of the pilot is that it has been successful. Because of that success, it is being extended nationwide.

Mr. Coleman: While I appreciate the value of the training carried out in the Port Talbot centre, may I ask the Minister to say where — these people having completed their training — are the jobs in Neath and Port Talbot for them to go to?

Mr. Roberts: Obviously the 18 to 25-year-olds at whom this scheme is particularly directed will be considerably better equipped for jobs. The evidence is that people are going into jobs after training.

Outgoers Scheme

11. Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the response within the Principality to the most recently announced outgoers scheme for the dairy farming industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The first phase of the milk community outgoers scheme, which sought to buy up 2 per cent. of our national reference quantity to offset the 2 per cent. reduction in quotas, which is due to take effect on 1 April 1987, closed in 15 February 1987. Twenty-eight applications were received from producers in Wales, 12 of which were subsequently withdrawn, giving a total litreage offered under the scheme of 1·7 million litres.

Dr. Thomas: Does the Minister agree that, with an outgoers scheme, which is really a redundancy payment scheme, it would be much better to pay three or four years' payments immediately an outgoer leaves dairy farming? He would then have much more cash to develop some alternative diversification.

Mr. Edwards: The hon. Gentleman will be aware that we shall now have to introduce across-the-board compulsory reductions in quotas to producers in England and Wales under the scheme that has been agreed by the European Community. He will also be aware that compensation from EC funds has been increased from 18·3 to 27·5 per litre for seven years under the outgoers scheme, which is designed to effect permanent cuts. We must now wait to see how such new arrangements, which have been agreed by the Commission, operate.

Mr. Best: Is my right hon. Friend aware that many dairy producers in my constituency are trying to eke out a living on a net income of £3,000 or less? Does he not consider that there needs to be positive discrimination in favour of the smaller farmer to ensure that the rural life of Wales and Cefn Gwlad is not inhibited? Does he accept that the £90 dairy inspection charge was just about the last straw that broke the dairy cow's back for many of my constituents?

Mr. Edwards: I happen to believe that the campaign against the charge has been rather exaggerated. I do not believe that the impact of about 50p a cow will break any backs. I agree that the smaller producer is important. That is one of the reasons why we made special arrangements, when we introduced the quota scheme, to bring smaller producers up to a minimum level. I am sure that the increased compensation arrangements under the outgoers scheme will also be welcomed by such producers.

Mr. Geraint Howells: Will the Secretary of State inform the House why the many dairy farmers who have left the industry have turned their backs on the outgoers scheme during the past two years?

Mr. Edwards: Clearly, those who did not take up the outgoers schemes did not believe that it would be good value for money and made a judgment on the available alternatives. Of course, sale and leasing arrangements have also been taken into account. We are now moving into a new situation with a compulsory reduction in quotas, and the compensation arrangements will therefore be quite different in the period ahead.

Severn Barrage

12. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has carried out a study of the economic impact on South Wales if the Severn barrage were constructed.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: A study of the potential regional effects of a Severn barrage is being undertaken as part of the £4·2 million programme of advanced investigations and site studies announced last July by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

Mr. Colvin: I am sure that all hon. Members are pleased to hear that news. I believe that the House will agree with me that the sooner the studies are completed and the barrage is built, the better. Is my right hon. Friend aware that there is a threat to an economic and social asset in Wales if the barrage and the seven other smaller barrages on estuaries and rivers are built? That threat relates to fishing. What provision has my right hon. Friend made for migratory fish stocks to be catered for if the Severn barrage and the other smaller barrages for electricity generation are constructed?

Mr. Edwards: It is quite a good idea to carry out the studies before we decide whether the the barrage should be built. Certainly, the studies will address important conservation matters, including fish stocks. In much smaller schemes elsewhere in Wales we have made provision for salmon passes. They can sometimes be a matter of controversy, as we discovered in north Wales, where such a scheme has been criticised on environmental grounds. Therefore, the proper way to proceed is through the inquiries that my right hon. Friend has launched.

Mr. Terlezki: Is my right hon. Friend able to tell me what the financial impact on the barrage would be if a road were to be built over it?

Mr. Edwards: Clearly that is one of the possibilities, but the consideration of this proposition is at a very preliminary stage, and we had better decide whether to go ahead with the barrage before we decide whether there is to be a road on it. As my hon. Friend is fully aware, we are committed to proceeding with the work on a second Severn crossing, irrespective of any decision about a barrage.

Mr. Ron Davies: Does the Secretary of State acknowledge that not only fish stocks but other wild life are likely to be threatened by the proposed barrage? Will he confirm that his Department is aware that the Severn estuary is a site of international importance for nature conservation, and will he give a guarantee that any proposed development of the barrage will at least ensure that environmental considerations are given full weight?

Mr. Edwards: I am aware of the facts to which the hon. Gentleman refers, and I have no doubt that the studies that I have mentioned will take those facts very fully into account.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Historic Buildings

18. Mr. Greenway asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, how much was spent in the past year by the commissioners on historic buildings under their control; what were the comparable figures 10 years ago; if he will give details of this expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Patrick Mayhew (A Church Commissioner): I have been asked to reply.

The commissioners have a large number of listed historic buildings under their control but do not keep a separate record of expenditure for this category. I regret that to calculate the information which my hon. Friend requires would cause disproportionate expense.

Mr. Greenway: May I say how splendid it is to see my right hon. and learned Friend acting in this important capacity? May I ask him whether the Church Commissioners have any plans to charge for entry to cathedrals—as recommended by the Select Committee on the Environment—during certain periods of the day, provided that parts of the cathedrals are always left for prayer? If so, will there be a standard charge for all cathedrals, or will some be more expensive than others?

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for his kind remarks. I am always grateful for anything that is passed my way.

The Church Commissioners have no responsibility for the upkeep of cathedrals or, indeed, for the upkeep of churches.

VAT (Buildings)

19. Mr. Chapman asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, if he will make a statement on the effect of value added tax on repairs on those buildings for whose upkeep the commissioners have responsibility.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have been asked to reply.

In 1986 the commissioners paid over £500,000 in respect of VAT arising from the repair of buildings.

Mr. Chapman: As the Church of England is a major owner of listed buildings, as instanced by the fact that nearly half the grade I listed buildings are Church of England churches, and as it is generally accepted that the zero rating of VAT on building repairs to such buildings would provide the greatest boost to conservation, would my right hon. and learned Friend, as a commissioner, be prepared to encourage the other commissioners to lead a campaign in Europe to get the European Community rules changed so that the other major owners of buildings, the Government, bring forward proposals to this House to zero rate for VAT purposes the repairs to listed buildings?

Sir Patrick Mayhew: All hon. Members will have sympathy with my hon. Friend's objective. Versatile though I am, I do not think that I will undertake to encourage the commissioners, but I will undertake to see to it that they take careful note of my hon. Friend's point.

Mr. Cormack: Is my right hon. and learned Friend aware that the commissioners and others, particularly the Historic Churches Preservation Trust, have repeatedly lobbied the Chancellor to reduce or eliminate VAT on such buildings? Will he talk to his colleagues in the Government — and how glad we are to see that he is answering this particular question today — and urge them to make this change?

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am grateful for what my hon. Friend has said. I certainly undertake to draw the attention of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to my hon. Friend's point.

Mr. Gow: Does my right hon. and learned Friend agree that, though many evils flow from Brussels, there is no responsibility on Brussels for the imposition of VAT on repairs to buildings of this kind? Will my right hon. and learned Friend confirm that it would be open to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to include in this year's Finance Bill a measure giving relief from VAT for repairs on this kind?

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I understand that there are difficulties in introducing a new zero rate. That is a matter to which the Select Committee gave its attention in its admirable report. I shall draw the attention of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to all points of this nature.

Compensation Payments

20. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the hon. Member for Wokingham, as representing the Church Commissioners, what measures the Church Commissioners propose to take to enable the payment of compensation to those clergymen who have announced their intention to leave the Church of England once the legislation admitting women to the ordained Ministry has been passed.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have been asked to reply.

The commissioners have no jurisdiction to make proposals in a matter of this kind. It would be for the General Synod to decide, in the first instance, the form of any financial provision.

Mr. Bruinvels: I thank my right hon. and learned Friend for his answer, realising that you, Mr. Speaker, could have answered it as well. My right hon. and learned Friend, who is a Church Commissioner, will know that 2,000 Anglican clergy might leave the Church of England if women are ordained. The report by the House of Bishops on the ordination of women to the priesthood makes it clear that it wants unity rather division. The assessment so far undertaken in the study shows that a number of clergy would lose office and promotion. There would certainly be a starvation of promotion for those opposed to the ordination of women——

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is not a debate.

Mr. Bruinvels: Will my right hon. and learned Friend prepare the costings for that move, recognising that 1991 is not far away?

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I know — indeed the whole House knows — that my hon. Friend takes a close interest in this matter, as in so many others.

Whereas I recognise the importance of financial provision in the event that women were able to be ordained as priests, that is perhaps not fundamental to what is an extremely difficult issue. It is not a matter upon which the commissioners have jurisdiction to initiate proposals.

Mr. Frank Field: Is the right hon. and learned Gentleman aware that many of the 2,000 priests who are threatening to leave the Church are doing so under the assumption that, should they leave, they would take a substantial part of the historic resources of the Church of England with them? Will the right hon. and learned Gentleman advise us that if such a division were contemplated, legislation would have to be passed by the House to approve it. Will he offer his own opinion on the chances of getting such legislation through the House?

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I am sure that the hon. Gentleman is right about legislation. To go any further into this issue on what is necessarily an ephemeral outing on my part would be unwise.

Mr. Stokes: Is my right hon. and learned Friend aware that we are glad to see him on that outing today? I hope that he makes the best of it. Is he aware that, as has been pointed out already, the Synod does not have the power to ordain women as priests? That will have to be done by this House, and that step must never be taken for granted.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: No one speaks with greater personal knowledge of these matters than my hon. Friend, who is, of course, a member for the General Synod. He will recall that in February the General Synod passed a resolution requiring the standing committee to bring forward two Measures for consideration.

What my hon. Friend says about the outcome is constitutionally correct. It has to be passed by the necessary majorities in all three Houses of the Synod and then come to this House.

Mr. Winnick: I also congratulate the right hon. and learned Gentleman on his promotion, which, no doubt, is a welcome relief from his various other duties. Will he give a guarantee that any letter that he writes on this sensitive subject will not be leaked, wholly or partly?

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The first of the hon. Gentleman's observations was more welcome than the second.

Mr. Cormack: Will my right hon. and learned Friend give a firm indication that any legislation along the lines that he has discussed will have to be discussed pretty carefully with the Law Officers?

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Voluminous though our jurisdiction is, I am not sure whether it extends to that. Naturally, as we are both commissioners, we shall take a careful interest in this matter.

WALES

Teachers (Shortage Subjects)

13. Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretay of State for Wales what action he has taken to overcome the lack of teachers in shortage subjects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Government have introduced various measures to increase the supply of teachers in the shortage subjects. These include a new bursary scheme to attract graduates to teacher training courses, increased expenditure on course development, increased grant-aid for in-service training, tax concessions for firms willing to second employees to schools and colleges and the establishment of the teaching as a career unit.

Mr. Jones: I am pleased to hear my hon. Friend's answer. However, are there any signs yet that the measures he describes are proving successful?

Mr. Roberts: I am pleased to tell my hon. Friend that recruitment to postgraduate teacher training courses in Wales in the shortage subjects—mathematics, physics, craft design and technology — in 1986 showed a significant increase as compared with the previous year. I am sure that he will agree that that is encouraging and is due largely, I am sure, to the new bursary scheme of £1,200 per annum which the Government have introduced to attract graduates to teacher training courses in those subjects.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Opposition Parties (Finance)

21. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Lord Privy Seal what recent representations he has received concerning the requirement that financial assistance provided to Opposition parties should be expended solely in support of the parliamentary business of those parties; and if he will make a statement.

The Lord Privy Seal and Leader of the House of Commons (Mr. John Biffen): As I told my hon. Friend in answer to his question on 2 March, each Opposition party qualifying for financial assistance has to certify that any reimbursement claimed is in respect of expenses incurred exclusively in relation to that party's parliamentary business.

Mr. Bruinvels: Is my right hon. Friend able to tell the House when the next review will be undertaken? When that review is undertaken, will the assessment be made of how the £630,000 which was allocated in 1986 is spent? Will it be an undertaking that the assistance is given to a particular party for carrying out its "parliamentary work here at Westminster," as Lord Glenamara said on 20 March 1975, or for "activities at Westminster," as my right hon. Friend the Leader of the House said on 23 January 1985?

Mr. Biffen: As I have already said to the House, I thought that we were now sufficiently close to a general election to ensure that the next review would be in the next Parliament. The point raised by my hon. Friend about the whole question of monitoring spending is one that could be considered at the time of the review and, of course, it would be done in respect of all political parties.

Mr. Beith: Does the right hon. Gentleman not recall that when his party was in opposition those sums were disbursed largely to the Conservative research department? Could it be the temporary absence of those funds that has led that organisation to become so slipshod and inaccurate in its work; such as, for example not knowing that during the Lib-Lab pact inflation went down from 20 to 7 per cent. and that Labour's nationalisation measures were stopped? Is he looking forward to the return of those funds to his party?

Mr. Biffen: The hon. Gentleman has raised a facile point. I assure him that if we are to quarry for the ineptitudes of research activities on behalf of the respective parties, the Liberal aspect of the Liberal-Social Democratic alliance would come out top of the league.

I shall now turn to the more serious point, which is what I am sure the hon. Gentleman intended. I thank him for pointing out the great importance of research in sustaining a party in opposition. That was never more evident than now.

Palace of Westminster

22. Mr. Greenway asked the Lord Privy Seal what representations he has received about progress with the cleaning and restoring of the external stonework of the Palace of Westminster; and if he will make a statement.

23. Mr. Chapman asked the Lord Privy Seal what representations he has received about progress with the cleaning and restoring of the external stonework of the Palace of Westminster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: I have not received any recent representations on this topic, but I am aware of a general wish among hon. Members that the stone restoration work should be completed as soon as possible.

Mr. Greenway: Will my right hon. Friend accept the wide admiration of the House and the country for the beauty of the parliamentary building as it is revealed by the restoration, and will he accept from me and many people that it would be extremely sad if the Victoria Tower was not fully restored, as it has been rumoured it may not be? Would it not be tragic if it stuck out like an elegant sore thumb?

Mr. Biffen: I agree with my hon. Friend. The restoration work that has been undertaken for the Palace of Westminster has had admirable consequences and I hope that in due course the Victoria Tower can be similarly restored. My hon. Friend will understand that I am in no position to say when that work will be undertaken.

Mr. Chapman: While commending the work that has been done, which is surely an example of how Parliament and the Government should lead the country in the proper care of architectural conservation, may I ask my right hon. Friend whether there are any plans to try to improve some of the internal courtyards of the Palace, which are very untidy and a disgrace to the splendid architectural heritage that has been passed on to us?

Mr. Biffen: I cannot answer that specific point without notice. However, if my hon. Friend would like to get in touch with me, I will ensure that he receives an answer.

Mr. Marlow: I wonder whether my right hon. Friend would see to it that a gargoyle is constructed of the Boy David, which apparently is the new title of the leader of the Liberal party, as described by the leader of the Social Democratic party.

Mr. Biffen: I thought that that description was so striking that it could stand on its own.

Mr. Cormack: Would my right hon. Friend pass on the thanks of the House to all those responsible for what is, by any standards, superb work?

Mr. Biffen: I am most happy to undertake that request.

Catering (Curried Cornish Pasties)

24. Mr. Harris asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will take steps to secure the withdrawal of curried Cornish pasties from the cafeterias of the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Irving (The Chairman of the Catering Sub-Committee): I have been asked to reply.

I unreservedly apologise to my hon. Friend for the human error that occurred when his delectable cornish pasty, whose name and fame is worldwide, was attributed to another of lesser renown; and the Catering Sub-Committee, through the General Manager, has taken immediate corrective action.

Mr. Harris: Does my hon. Friend realise that I am completely disarmed by that helpful reply? Does he also appreciate that if such action had not been taken his own very fine reputation as the best Chairman of the Catering Sub-Committee that the House has ever seen might well have been in jeopardy? While on the subject of pasties, may I go a little further? Does he realise that this insult against the culinary traditions of Cornwall has been further intensified by the fact that a more conventional type of pasty, sold as a Cornish pasty in the House, has a giveaway tag on its cellophane wrapper which reads "Made in Kent"? Will he, therefore, after these exchanges, taste a real genuine Cornish pasty that has been kindly made for him by a constituent of mine?

Mr. Irving: I am very grateful to my hon. Friend, who is a great defender of Cornish traditions. I think that he may be able to help me by sending me a note to tell me the sort of name that he would give to this Cornish patsie—I am sorry, pasty.

Miss Fookes: May I invite my hon Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) to send my hon. Friend the Chairman of the Catering Sub-Committee an authentic Cornish recipe, if he could do so without engendering further controversy?

Mr. Irving: That is a most admirable suggestion.

Mr. Key: In order to make amends to the people of Cornwall, and in recognition of the fact that they have just elected another Liberal hon. Member to this honourable House, will my hon. Friend consider the introduction to the menus of this House of that very fishy dish Stargazy Pie?

Mr. Irving: I should be very happy to give that matter careful consideration. However, I am afraid that pasties or patsies are non-political.

WALES

Schools (Peace Studies)

14. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the extent of the teaching of peace studies in Wales and as to the local education authorities involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I am not aware of any Welsh local education authority promoting peace studies as a distinct item in the curriculum.

Mr. Terlezki: I am most grateful to my hon. Friend for that answer. However, should peace studies be introduced in our schools, would he provide the finances for that subject?

Mr. Roberts: The financing of education is a matter for local education authorities. However, I would feel obliged to stress that any attempt to smuggle in politically biased teaching would breach the requirements of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986. Local education authorities, governing bodies and head teachers are required by that Act to forbid the promotion of partisan political views in the teaching of any subject in the school.

Mr. Wigley: Does the Minister accept that implicit in this question is the suggestion that there should be greater centralisation of curricula — something that is causing considerable concern in Wales — and will he give an undertaking that if the responsibility for financing these or any other studies in schools is a matter for local authorities, curricula should remain a matter for local decision?

Mr. Roberts: I do not agree with the hon. Gentleman. There has been considerable discussion of the curriculum, and the general opinion among teachers, parents and all concerned with the education of children is that there should be more central direction of the curriculum than there is now.

Job Clubs

15. Mr. Grist asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many jobs have been gained in Wales by those attending job clubs since the scheme began.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Since August 1985, 1,355 people in Wales have attended a job club, and 828—or 62 per cent.—have obtained employment as a result.

Mr. Grist: In view of that success, what plans does my hon. Friend have to extend job clubs throughout Wales?

Mr. Roberts: My hon. Friend knows that there are 24 job clubs in Wales, and we hope to extend the total to 60 by the end of this month. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has visited a job club in Haverfordwest and I have visited one on Deeside, and there is no doubt that they do an

Hospital Services (Ealing)

3.31 pm

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): I beg to ask leave to move the Adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter that should have urgent consideration, namely,

"the deterioration of hospital services in Ealing as a result of the industrial dispute involving Ealing council employees."

The dispute has arisen because, before the elections last May, the Labour party promised council employees a review of the non-payment of the London weighting allowance, but, gaining control, the new Labour council has refused to pay London weighting.

Hospital services have been seriously affected. Ealing hospital cannot send people out into the community because no back-up services are available for them. The hospital is slowly coming to a standstill because there can be no discharges into the community and admissions cannot be accepted because hospital beds are full. People cannot have urgent operations and treatment. One side effect of the damage caused to Ealing hospital is that welfare officers are not operating in schools. About 32 schools in Ealing are closed today, including special schools for disabled children, some of whom are severely handicapped.

The matter is serious and urgent. It is also specific and important. Ealing hospital is central to the welfare of the people of Ealing and must be kept going. The dispute between Ealing council and its employees must be ended urgently.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Member asks leave to move the Adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter that he believes should have urgent consideration. namely,

"the deterioration of hospital services in Ealing as a result of the industrial dispute involving Ealing council employees."

I have listened with care to what the hon. Gentleman has said, but I regret that I do not consider the matter that he has raised as appropriate for discussion under Standing Order No. 20 and I cannot, therefore, submit his application to the House.

Ministerial Answers

3.33 pm

Mr. A. J. Beith (Berwick-upon-Tweed): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Although it is clearly not for you to become involved in the answers which Ministers give to the House—you would have a very difficulty task if you were—nevertheless, is it not right that from time to time we should draw it to your attention when hon. Members feel that Ministers have persistently misled the House or persistently failed to give the House the information for which hon. Members were asking——

Mr. Speaker: Order. Ministers do not persistently mislead. They may give information with which the hon. Gentleman disagrees.

Mr. Beith: In the hope that we might dispel any impression that they could have done, and with the Leader of the House present and perhaps in a position to use his good offices, may I draw to your attention the fact that, on many occasions, hon. Members on both sides of the House, including several of my hon. Friends, have raised with Ministers the question whether battlefield nuclear weapons in the British Army of the Rhine were or were not being updated, and on every occasion——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that this would adequately come into Defence Questions tomorrow. It is not a matter of order or a matter for me.

Mr. Beith rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot help the hon. Gentleman. I am genuinely sorry, but I think that we can deal with this tomorrow.

Mr. Beith: Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not a point of order for me.

Personal Statement

3.34 pm

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton (Fife, Central): In last Friday's debate on law and order I made remarks which reflected upon the personal conduct of certain hon. Members and which must have caused them offence. I wish now to apologise to the House and to those Members and to withdraw unreservedly the comments that I made.

Budget Resolutions and Economic Situation

[Relevant documents: European Community Document No. 10155/86, Annual Economic Report 1986-87 and the unnumbered document, Annual Economic Report 1986-87 (final version as adopted by the Council).]

3.36 pm

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and President of the Board of Trade (Mr. Paul Channon): We shall be concentrating today, as frequently is the case, on the implications for industry and commerce of the Budget of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. On the last day of the debate on the Budget it is clear that it is a difficult one to criticise, because there are only 10 Labour Back-Bench Members present to hear the debate. They are right to think that there is nothing to criticise, because I am glad to be able to report to the House that the outlook for industry today is extremely promising.

Mr. Frank Haynes (Ashfield): Is the Secretary of State aware that there is a lobby of this place from the construction industry and that that is where our colleagues are? The right hon. Gentleman should follow them there.

Mr. Channon: That may be deemed to be more important than the Budget to the future of the country. It is for hon. Members to decide their priorities.

It is hard to remember a time when the economic climate for business was as favourable as it is now. The economy as a whole grew by 2·5 per cent. in 1986, and in 1987 it is expected to grow by a further 3 per cent. Manufacturing output, in which the whole House is interested, has grown by 14 per cent. over the past six years and will grow by a further 4 per cent. in 1987. This is a remarkable reversal of the downward drift in manufacturing output from its peak in 1973 and is a striking testimony to industry's revival.

The level of investment in the economy is also buoyant. Total fixed investment is expected to increase by 4 per cent. in 1987.

Mr. John Smith (Monklands, East): If the Secretary of State is correct and manufacturing output increases by 4 per cent. in the coming year, is it not the case that even after that it will still be below the level of 1979? On that basis, why should the Government be entitled to any credit?

Mr. Channon: I do not think that the right hon. and learned Gentleman is right in that assumption. If my forecast is correct, we shall be at about the level of 1979. Whether or not it is, I must point out, as there seems to be a great deal of debate about the 1979 figures, that they were lower than the 1973 figures because of five years of Labour Government, during which they consistently went down. The idea that there is some miracle Labour party potion that cures everything is sheer nonsense. What is important when we look at the future is to see what will happen, and output will grow by a further 4 per cent. in 1987, and the outlook for output is extremely good. That is why Labour Members are so distressed to hear the news.

The figures that I am quoting are from my right hon. Friend's Budget, but outside forecasters, including a number by no means sympathetic to the Government—I can quote them if the House wants me to—make similar predictions. The figures announced last week confirm that unemployment is firmly set on a downward trend. It is particularly encouraging that some of the sharpest falls were recorded in areas of highest unemployment. The House spent last Thursday debating employment and my right hon. and learned Friend the Paymaster General convincingly showed that that trend will continue.

The prospects for our exporters are also excellent. In 1986 our non-oil exports were 3 per cent. higher than in 1985, and they are forecast to be 5 per cent. higher again in 1987 than in 1986. The volume of our manufactured exports is at an all-time record, after six years of steady growth. A further healthy increase in growth from that all-time record is expected in 1987. In recent months the growth in the volume of our manufactured exports has been running ahead of that of our manufactured imports. The combination of a competitive exchange rate and a world economy that is responding to lower oil prices means that, as the Financial Times pointed out a week ago, "the opportunities to rebuild the UK's share of export markets have rarely been better."

The Labour party tries hard to conjure up the spectre of a sterling crisis. Perhaps the loss of £5 billion in oil exports would have produced a sterling crisis if that party had been in office. However, after a cumulative balance of payments surplus of £20 billion over the seven years to 1985 we face the prospect of a deficit this year equivalent to one half of 1 per cent. of GDP. That this figure is so small is a tribute to the resilience of the economy in the face of a massive adjustment that was imposed so quickly by the falling oil price. It also illustrates the contribution to the balance of payments of our earnings from overseas assets, now running at £4 billion a year.

A relatively rapid rise in import volume is to be expected while the economy expands. About three quarters of manufactured imports are bought by business and commerce as essential inputs to their production. The full benefits of improved competitiveness have yet to come through. However, I expect the growth in imports to slow by the end of the year.

British industry is well placed to make the most of its opportunities. Productivity in British manufacturing, which was the despair of our friends in the 1970s, has improved by no less than 40 per cent. in the last six years. This puts us right at the top of the international league for productivity growth, ahead of Japan, Germany, the United States, Italy and France. Productivity has grown more than three times faster than when the Labour party was in power. During that time our productivity growth was lower than that of all our major competitors, yet Opposition Members have the cheek to argue about the prospects for British industry.

In recent months, unit costs in British industry have risen no faster than those in Germany and Japan, although I still see scope for improvement. The latest figures of the profitability of the non-North seas sector are the highest since 1973, and I am confident that this improvement is continuing. For the benefit of Opposition Members, I should emphasise the vital importance of profits, which are the source of three quarters of the funds needed by industry for capital investment.

It is not only in those aspects that can be quantified that British industry has now recovered. Our reputation for quality is being gradually and painstakingly restored. The industrial relations climate has been transformed. The number of industrial disputes last year was down to the level of 1935. Multinational companies are not only saying that the United Kingdom is once more a logical location for manufacturing operations; they are acting on the belief.

In today's Financial Times, the American chairman of British Oxygen stated:

> "In the last half dozen years Britain has done a pretty good job. If I was a company having to set up in Europe, it is Britain I would choose".

It must be said that 1986 was another excellent year for foreign direct investment in Britain.

Sir Peter Emery (Honiton): While one in no way wishes to carp at an excellent speech and superlative Budget, may I ask my right hon. Friend whether he accepts that hon. Members on both sides of the House are worried about the level of research and development in manufacturing industry? If we are to stay in the position that we have attained, research and development in the new technologies to keep us ahead of the world are of the greatest importance. If there is any way in which my right hon. Friend can help companies to further research and development, it would be worth undertaking.

Mr. Channon: There is a great deal in what my hon. Friend says. In my Department's budget there has been a massive switch of resources to research and development during the Conservative Government's period of office. We are considering a range of matters and in due course we will have to reply to the Select Committee in another place on this important aspect.

On foreign direct investment, I should tell the House that more than 300 foreign companies have shown their confidence in the strength, stability and future of the British economy by deciding to invest here.

Mr. Roger Stott (Wigan): Will the Secretary of State give way?

Mr. Channon: I must continue; I have given way three times already.

New investment projects in manufacturing included those announced by Compaq Computers from the United States at Erskine; NEC at Telford; and Orion Electric at Port Talbot. Substantial expansion projects included those announced by Ford at Dagenham and Halewood; Peugeot Talbot at Ryton; Sharp at Wrexham; and Sony at Bridgend. These decisions confirm the positive experience of those companies already operating here. Since 1980 foreign direct investment in the United Kingdom has created or safeguarded over 200,000 jobs.

The list of our industrial successes is lengthening all the time. Jaguar, with the stimulus of a return to the private sector, has re-established a reputation for quality and turned a £30 million loss in 1981 into a profit of more than £120 million in 1986, creating 1,500 new jobs in the process. In 1978-79 it took British Steel nearly 14·3 man hours to produce a tonne of liquid steel. By 1985-86 it took 6·3 man hours and BSC's productivity had caught up with the best in Europe. J. C. Bamford, a family business, has taken on the American giants of the construction equipment world. It has remained profitable, while its competitors have been in retreat. It has quadrupled its turnover to £220 million in 10 years, and half of it is exported. Vickers, a company rooted in traditional heavy industry, has diversified, so that in addition to its long-standing activities it now has 40 per cent. of the world market in controllable pitch propellers, and it has diversified into several other areas.

In recent weeks and months there has been a general resurgence of business confidence. The CBI's monthly survey of industrial trends for February was the most encouraging of its kind for at least 18 months. The majority of firms expecting their output to increase was greater than it has been for three years. A majority of companies now say that their total order book is above normal—one of the highest figures ever recorded. On export order books, the response was more favourable than any since the middle of 1985, which was the most optimistic in the history of the survey. The most recent survey by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce recorded a high level of business confidence among its membership in all regions of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Richard Hickmet (Glanford and Scunthorpe): My right hon. Friend mentioned the BSC, and it was a great pleasure to have him visit the most efficient steelworks in Europe last Monday. Certain proposals have been aired by Eurofer and the Steel Council. Will he confirm that the BSC is among the most efficient and profitable steel corporations in the world, that any future cut in capacity must depend on the profitability of the industry concerned, and that as the BSC is the most profitable steel works in Europe we would expect no steel cuts in its operations?

Mr. Channon: My hon. Friend makes an important point, and exactly the same point was made by my hon. Friend the Minister of State at the Steel Council on Wednesday last week. I agree with him and am happy to confirm how impressed I am by the efficiency at the Scunthorpe works, which are probably the most productive steelworks in western Europe. If they are not the most productive, they are certainly right up with the leaders. That is a remarkable turnround, especially when one considers that when we came to office British Steel was losing well over £1 billion a year. This year its half yearly profit is albut about £68 million. In the past few years there has been a complete turnround.

I was dealing with the Association of British Chambers of Commerce. Its latest survey recorded a high level of business confidence among members in all regions and showed how confidence was picking up in the areas of high unemployment. The Government are determined to continue the fiscal and economic policies that have brought about these hopeful trends and my right hon. Friend's Budget is ideally suited to this purpose. Above all, industry needs a stable economic and financial framework. The runaway inflation of the 1970s must not be allowed to reappear. With the annual increase in the retail prices index now at about 4 per cent., and expected to remain in that region for the rest of this year, industry no longer faces the constant worry about prices shooting up as they did not very long ago.

Nor does industry need to fear that Government borrowing will enjoy priority over wealth creation in Government policies. The PSBR this year and next will be at lower levels than we have seen since the beginning of the 1970s as percentages of GDP. Industry, of course, has made a major contribution to this development, through increased payments of corporation tax. I point out to Opposition hon. Members that that is a classic demonstration that lower taxes and prosperous taxpayers mean more, not less, revenue for the Exchequer. It is a matter of great satisfaction that the prudent economic and fiscal policies pursued consistently by my right hon. Friend and his predecessor have made it possible for this year's Budget to include a range of measures, direct and indirect, that are greatly to industry's advantage.

My right hon. Friend's decision to devote more than half the scope for fiscal adjustment to a £3 billion reduction in public borrowing was not only financially prudent but will be of great benefit to industry and commerce, and thereby to jobs. The CBI welcomed the Budget as just what it wanted. [Interruption.] Opposition Members laugh at the CBI figures. They are not interested in the voice of the views of industry.

One immediate benefit of the decision to reduce the planned PSBR has been a further reduction in interest rates. All of us are aware of industry's long-standing concern that real interest rates have been higher in this country than in most of our competitor countries. It has been the Government's policy throughout that interest rates should be maintained no higher than is necessary to maintain downward pressure on inflation. The whole House will welcome the fact that the strength of the economy and the Government's prudent policies have permitted a cut in interest rates. Not only does each percentage point off interest rates represent a cut of £250 million in industrial costs, but, even more important, the prospect of a sustained cut in interest rates which can be taken into account when industrialists calculate the return on new investment will make it easier for them to plan for expansion.

The reductions in tax will help industrial performance. If Opposition Members believe that the money will be spent on imports alone, they have little confidence in British industry. Have they stopped shopping at Marks and Spencer which, like many companies, has British sourcing? My right hon. and learned Friend the Paymaster General has said that the same argument would apply equally to increased wages, but the Opposition do not argue that wages should be cut. The reductions in personal taxation will encourage everyone not only to work harder but to acquire new skills and qualifications and to seek additional responsibilities.

I commend particularly to the House and to industry the proposed new tax relief for profit-related pay. For a married man on average earnings who accepts 5 per cent. of his pay in the form of profit-related pay this offers the prospect of an extra £1·50 a week, which is equivalent to 1p off the basic rate of income tax. With 20 per cent. of his pay in the form of profit-related pay the tax relief is worth £6 a week, or 4p off the basic rate. If this new relief is widely taken up, as I hope it will be, it will help to create a sense of common purpose among all those who work for companies. It will bring much needed flexibility in pay structures, without which firms are understandably reluctant to take on more employees when things go well, and may see no alternative in a downturn to reducing employment.

Industry's most important resource is its people. The Budget will help to ensure that the energies and potential of countless individuals are put to good use.

It is an excellent Budget for the individual entrepreneur and the small business. The large increase in the threshold for inheritance tax and the improved business reliefs will make it easier to pass on a flourishing family business to the next generation. The increased retirement relief from capital gains tax will also improve the incentive to build up a small business.

My right hon. Friend's package of VAT measures for small businesses responds to a number of legitimate concerns. The proposal to allow firms with an annual turnover of up to £250,000 to account for VAT on a cash basis will be particularly welcome. It will mean that small firms are no longer required to pay VAT on transactions for which they have not been paid, and it will thus allow automatic relief from VAT on bad debts. The option to account for VAT annually, with a system of monthly instalments, will be found useful by many firms.

The changes in the business expansion scheme will increase the value of this useful measure. It will no longer be necessary for all the funds subscribed to be invested within the same financial year if tax relief is to be obtained. This has led to a bunching of BES investments in March of each year, with the risk that the quality of the investment suffered. The change will increase the confidence of potential investors in the scheme, as well as its potential for helping to launch small and innovative companies.

A further specific change is designed to enable the business expansion scheme to be used more easily for financing film production in the United Kingdom. This is something that the film industry has been urging on the Government for some time, and my right hon. Friend's proposal will be very welcome to them.

This Budget represents the continuation of an economic strategy that is plainly succeeding. It maintains the prudent fiscal and monetary policies that have resulted in inflation finally being curbed. It takes a further step towards increasing incentive and enterprise by allowing people to keep more of what they earn, and it continues to reduce the level of public sector borrowing, so releasing more funds for private sector investment at a lower price.

These policies have led to the successes that I have already outlined and have contributed to achieving the biggest monthly fall in unemployment on record. Yet the Opposition — with their heads still buried in the discredited economic tomes of the 1960s, rather than observing the reality of economic success all around them —continue to advocate the reverse. In a welter of high spending, high borrowing and high taxation, they would throw away all that has been achieved. They have a prescription that would send us sliding back to the bottom of the league once again. On every front their policies would be crippling to industry and business.

The climate of understanding and co-operation in industrial relations, which the Government's trade union legislation has helped bring about, would be lost as power was handed back once more to the militants and extremists in the trade unions. Industry would be hamstrung by a plethora of bureaucratic committees and controls. Management would be prevented from taking any decisions until it had been cleared by innumerable committees, local authorities, the trade unions and any other pressures that the Labour party wants to put on it.

Some companies would fare even worse. For them it would not just be management which the state took over, but ownership as well. Despite the overwhelming evidence of its manifest failure, nationalisation is still on Labour's agenda, although it calls it by a different name nowadays.

In case industrialists are tempted to believe that their particular commanding height of the economy is not on the list for seizure, I remind them of the words of the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith), who last year said:

"I don't see why we should just go round taking over clapped-out companies. It would be nice to get into the new profitable areas. Stuff that makes money."

The right hon. and learned Gentleman nods. That is the Labour party's policy. I am glad to have that confirmation. The House welcomes that clarification. One thing is certain. Once the right hon. and learned Gentleman and his colleagues got their hands on those companies they would not be profitable for long.

Labour has also promised to impose selective import tariffs and subsidies. This would lead to swift retaliation against British exporters, just at a time when our export prospects are better than they have been for years. In addition, to my astonishment, the Opposition have said that they propose to abolish the aid and trade provision, which, since its inception, has helped to win exports worth £1·7 billion. I cannot fathom what on earth the policy reason for that can be. Perhaps the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East will tell us a little about that proposal, because it seems utterly astonishing.

Hon. Members will remember that during the Knowsley, North by-election, when I much enjoyed the presence of the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley), the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott) let the cat out of the bag by announcing that Labour would impose a levy of at least 1 per cent. on companies' turnover to finance industrial training.

Mr. Eric Heffer (Liverpool, Walton): That is right.

Mr. Channon: I am glad the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East has the support of the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer). Others are not too sure. His colleague, the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook, hurriedly tried to put the cat back in the bag again by saying in the same place the next day that that was not Labour party policy and that he could not imagine that it would be.

A week later the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East added to the confusion by telling me during the industry and employment debate that compulsory training levies were certainly Labour party policy and that 1 per cent. was the minimum under consideration. It seemed that the two were split by irreconcilable differences and that buns might start flying in the Tea Room.

Last week the Labour party introduced its new training document describing a new adult skill plan financed by Government and industry, but no mention is made of levies. All that we are told is that there is to be a new name —a new national training fund, which would require a fair financial contribution from all employers.

I should be grateful if the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East would tell us exactly what is proposed. What is the size of the burden which the Opposition intend to put on industry? Is it to be a 1 per cent., 2 per cent., or 3 per cent. levy? Is it to be on turnover, on profits or on sales?

As recently as last Thursday the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East, who is rapidly becoming to the Labour party what the albatross was to the ancient mariner, forgot his brief and admitted that there would be a levy. But then, in a remarkable attack of amnesia, he denied that he had ever said that the levy would be 1 per cent. on turnover. Surely the House and industry in general are entitled to know exactly what the proposals are, what they will cost and whether small companies are to be exempt. We must be told, or industry will have no idea what financial burden the Labour party proposes to impose. That is a disgrace.

Mr. Heffer: If we are not to have a levy of 1 per cent. or a fair contribution to training, how will we train the people whom we need?

Mr. Channon: I am strongly in favour of more training expenditure, but I am not in favour of a compulsory 1 per cent. training levy on the turnover of companies whether they be big or small. That is what is promised. Either that is Labour party policy, or it is not.

Mr. John Smith: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Channon: Not now. The right hon. and learned Gentleman will have a chance in a minute.

Mr. Smith: I should like to answer.

Mr. Channon: Very well, we shall hear the answer.

Mr. Smith: The right hon. Gentleman's reluctance to give way might arise from the fact that my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) asked a pertinent question. If the right hon. Gentleman is in favour of extra expenditure on industrial training, how is it to be financed?

Mr. Channon: I believe that training should be financed by the companies themselves. The House will have noticed that even though I gave way the right hon. Gentleman chose not to answer the question. He did not answer the question, either because the Labour party has not decided, or because the answer is too embarrassing. Perhaps we shall be told a little later, although I suspect that we might not be.

Mr. Sydney Bidwell (Ealing, Southall): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Channon: I must press on. Many hon. Members wish to speak.

The Budget is prudent. It is a Budget for industry, with sound money, lower interest rates and improved incentives. Industry's performance over the last six years has been a success story that is perhaps only now being fully recognised. The Budget will allow industry to build on that success. I hope that it will be the signal for many firms to move from successful consolidation to renewed expansion. The criticism from the Opposition Benches is a time-honoured part of our ritual. What matters is the response to the Budget by industry and the country. I am confident that the response will be positive. The outlook for industry has seldom looked brighter.

4.6 pm

Mr. John Smith (Monklands, East): Having listened to the Secretary of State's speech, one can hardly believe that we live in a country with over 3 million unemployed. Those people rated hardly a mention from the beginning to the end of the right hon. Gentleman's speech, yet unemployment is one of the three great problems in this country. The first is mass unemployment which is at a disgracefully high level by any civilised standard. The second is a manufacturing industrial base which has been dangerously reduced and urgently needs to be expanded. The third is the deepening entrenchment of the north-south divide.

It is clear that the Budget was not intended to help a sustained effort to reduce unemployment. In speech after speech during the Budget debates Government apologists have sought to claim that tax cuts, particularly the reduction in the standard rate, will create jobs. They might, but if the extra money available for consumption is spent on imports—as the evidence shows is likely—new jobs will be created, but they will be in Frankfurt and Tokyo, not here.

If the Government had any intention of creating new jobs in the United Kingdom, which one might have thought to be a reasonable aspiration of any sane Government, the best value in jobs and in the improvement of services is to be achieved in a carefully targeted programme of public expenditure.

The Labour party has produced such a programme in "New Jobs for Britain". The intention is to reduce unemployment by 1 million in a two-year programme. It involves four main elements. The first is encouraging economic enterprise by stimulating investment in manufacturing, promoting industrial and regional policy and reducing industry's costs by cuts in national insurance contributions on a regional basis. That will provide 250,000 jobs.

The second element is stimulating capital investment in the nation's infrastructure, with particular reference to the housing programme and transport systems. That will produce another 250,000 jobs in the public and private sectors.

The third element involves a major skill training programme, converting the current piecemeal schemes into a national training programme providing 360,000 jobs and training places.

The fourth element is improving health, education and personal social services to provide another 300,000 jobs. The cost will be £6 billion each year.

Mr. John Maples (Lewisham, West): We understand that the Labour party's programme is to be financed by increased borrowing. Last Wednesday the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) said that he would be happy with a PSBR at 4 per cent. of GDP, at about £15 billion or £16 billion, which represents an increase of £12 billion. What effect will that have on interest rates?

Mr. Smith: My right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) said nothing of the kind. Certainly at no time did he say that the programme would be financed entirely by borrowing. The hon. Gentleman should reread Hansard.

Mr. Maples: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Is it in order for the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East to misrepresent what his right hon. Friend the Member for Sparkbrook said on Wednesday?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Gentleman can seek to raise that matter later if he is called.

Mr. Smith: My right hon. Friend the Member for Sparkbrook was talking about the public sector deficit, not public sector borrowing. When the hon. Gentleman rereads Hansard he will be under an obligation to withdraw the allegation and not to repeat it.

We have repeatedly made it clear that the cost of the programme will be £6 billion in each year. We know from this Budget that that could be afforded—let it not be said that there is no alternative. The Chancellor had at his disposal £6 billion and that could have been used to finance the programme. Each time a sensible policy has been advocated to the Government we are told that there is no alternative to their current policies, as if it was beyond the wit of man to devise any alternative. They cannot use that excuse in this case. The Labour party's programme spells out what can be done and the Budget showed that that it could be afforded. It is a matter of choice.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Nigel Lawson): Oh!

Mr. John Smith: The Chancellor laughs. We are used to his lack of concern for the unemployed. In Budget after Budget he has refused to lift a finger to help the unemployed. In this Budget he has made the cynical choice to disregard them entirely. The Chancellor's ambitions are not as high as ours, but if he had even spent £2·6 billion —the amount of money he used to cut the standard rate —it would have made a significant impact on reducing unemployment.

What type of Government do we have? What kind of society do we live in that does not put the reduction of unemployment by 1 million in two years at the top of its list of priorities?

Mr. Lawson: The level of unemployment is coming down, you silly man.

Mr. Smith: I shall avoid replying directly to the Chancellor's vindictive personal abuse — it is no substitute for argument. When I develop my argument I shall have a word to say about some of the things he has said in the past, but I hope that he can contain himself for a moment or two.

The Chancellor does not seem to understand that the figures for unemployment in this society are higher than they were in the 1930s—and we thought that was the most dismal decade of our century. He does not seem to understand that unemployment is lasting longer than it did in the 1930s. It is not just the loss of economic opportunities that is so disheartening; it is the blighting of individual opportunities and the stunting of personal development, especially that of our young people, which is the tragedy of our times.

The Chancellor and his colleagues talk about getting unemployment below 3 million, as if to get unemployment below that figure would be an occasion for national rejoicing, when we would all break out into cheers at the Government's success.

Mr. Hickmet: Surely the right hon. and learned Gentleman will be pleased if that occurs?

Mr. Smith: I will be pleased when unemployment finally gets below 3 million, but I will not regard that as an opportunity to congratulate a Government who should never have allowed that figure to get near 3 million in the first place. This is the first post-war Government to put us into such a position. If the Government do get to the stage where unemployment is below 3 million, with all the associated flags and buntings, I hope that they will not be surprised to discover that the public do not consider that much of an achievement. The Government will be reminded that they inherited an unemployment level of 1·25 million. The public are also aware that, in modern Britain, 1·25 million under-25s alone are out of work at the moment.

The Government have a determined policy towards the unemployment figures and that is why they have made 19 changes to them. I wish they had an equally determined policy towards the true problem of unemployment.

This Budget is irrelevant to the millions of unemployed and their families. The Chancellor — we need not be surprised that he did this—walked by on the other side of the street.

In the presentation of the Budget an attempt was made —it was repeated today by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry — to claim that industry was prospering under the Government. It is a difficult task to claim that industry is prospering under the Government and we must consider the facts. How can industry be prospering when investment in manufacturing industry —the key to our future success—is 20 per cent. lower than it was in 1979? How can industry be prospering when manufacturing output is 5 per cent. lower than it was in 1979—in fact it is lower than it was in 1972—and when 20 per cent. of our manufacturing capacity has disappeared? I challenge right hon. and hon. Members on the Conservative Benches to question any one of those figures. They cannot. They know that they are precisely the current facts about British industry. Those are the results of eight years of Conservative Government.

How can the Government have been succesful if investment is one fifth below what it was when the Conservatives came to office? Output has still not reached the level that the Conservatives inherited. At the end of next year, output, based upon the Secretary of State's prediction and the prediction in the Red Book, will still not have reached the 1979 level. The fact is that one fifth of our industry has disappeared. How can that be a record of success?

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and other apologists seize upon one statistic — that of productivity — and say that everything is reassuring because manufacturing productivity has increased. Today the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry introduced a new phrase, "comparisons of rates of productivity growth". Almost certainly that will be something different from productivity, but the sleight of hand that goes on in the presentation of statistics is such that we must consider the productivity statistics with care.

Mr. Tony Marlow (Northampton, North): Will the right hon. and learned Gentleman give way?

Mr. Smith: I am developing an argument at this stage and I will not give way.

The Government argue that manufacturing productivity has increased, but I hope that they know that productivity figures have only comparatively improved because employment has fallen faster than output. In effect, workers have been thrown on the dole faster than production has declined. Productivity growth on its own is not the objective that we should seek, rather productivity against the background of increased production. That should be the true objective. In that way we generate higher output through improved utilisation of all our resources. I have reminded the House that manufacturing output is some 5 per cent. lower than it was in 1979. Productivity has increased only because employment has fallen by 28 per cent. The Government should take no credit for that figure.

In Government speeches copious references are made to an increase in exports. We heard it again today from the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. It is true that, since 1979, manufacturing exports have risen by 15 per cent., but why is it that, in all the speeches from Ministers, in the Red Book and in answers to questions, there is only ever reference to exports? There is never any reference to imports. Surely the Government comprehend that it is the relationship between exports and imports that is the crucial matter.

Mr. Lawson indicated dissent.

Mr. Smith: If the Chancellor does not understand that, it is no wonder that we are in our present economic difficulties. Perhaps the Chancellor believes that it is all right to talk about exports and totally to ignore imports. I thought it was bad enough that the Secretary of State did not know the difference, but now we have a Chancellor of the Exchequer who does not know the difference either.

Mr. Marlow rose——

Mr. Smith: No, I will not give way.

The Government refer to exports rather than imports only because if they refer to imports it gives the game away. Manufacturing exports have risen by 15 per cent. since 1979, but if the Government referred to imports they would have to admit that, since 1979, they have gone up by 48 per cent.

In all the Government propaganda a cloud of silence has descended on the trade figures, especially the figures for manufactured goods. The reason for that is that we had a deficit of almost £6 billion in 1986 and, as the Red Book tells us, we are heading for a £8 billion deficit in 1987. Not only are we in deficit, but we are, in fact, facing a deficit that is accelerating on a downward curve.

Mr. Lawson: That is neither here nor there.

Mr. Smith: According to the Chancellor, it does not matter that we have moved from a £5 billion surplus in 1979 to a £8 billion deficit in 1987. It does not matter that there has been a £13 billion deterioration in the balance of trade in manufactured goods. The Chancellor sits there smugly and says that it does not matter. That reveals the mentality and competence of the people who are temporarily in charge of our affairs.

Mr. Marlow rose——

Mr. Smith: I will give way to the Chancellor if he would like to explain why a £13 billion change in our balance of trade does not matter. It would be an interesting explanation. We know, however, that these are facts that cannot be denied. The alarm bells should be ringing both in the Department of Trade and Industry and in the Exchequer to signal the deterioration in our balance of trade in manufactured goods. That would be happening within any sensible and competent Government. Worst of all, this is the first time since the industrial revolution that Britain has had a deficit in its balance of trade in manufactured goods. It is the unique achievement of the Government to put us into deficit to the extent of £8 billion.

Despite the depressing statistics for British manufacturing industry, is there any notion of help in the Budget? The answer is no. To all intents and purposes, the Government have turned their backs on manufacturing industry. It was the Chancellor of the Exchequer who reminded us some years ago that he did not understand the special importance that the Opposition, and some Tories, attach to manufacturing industry. I shall explain the special importance that we and, I suppose, some Tories still give to it. The manufacturing sector is the nation's indispensible wealth creator. Secondly, without a vigorous and expanding manufacturing sector, we shall not be able to pay our way in the world.

There are those who speak of the important contribution that is made by the service sector. I accept, of course, that it has an important contribution to make, but it will not have a future unless it has the market that the manufacturing sector provides for it. It is the interlinking of the two sectors that the Government fail to understand whenever they address these problems.

Mr. Ian Wrigglesworth (Stockton, South): Will the right hon. and learned Gentleman advance the argument that only one third of services are tradable whereas virtually 100 per cent. of manufactured goods are?

Mr. Smith: I would make that point if it were precisely correct. The argument is slightly better than the hon. Gentleman suggests. Only one fifth of services are internationally tradable as opposed to all manufactured goods. I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for his help, but perhaps he will help me a little more when he next intervenes by getting the facts right.

Tomorrow the Labour party will launch its industrial policy, entitled "New Industrial Strength for Britain". The document will show how a constructive policy can help to transform the prospects for British industry. We wish to set in motion three engines of growth: first, new policies for investment; secondly, a new approach to research and development; thirdly, an entirely new approach to education and training.

We know already of the Government's appalling investment record. That is why we need the British investment bank that the Labour party proposes, which will bring forward new investment in manufacturing industry. I need hardly dwell on the case for research and development. An intervention in the speech of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry made the point. It is so obvious that more research and development is needed. Britain will fail if it does not encourage new products and processes. In that context, it was chilling to note a few days ago a report from the Science and Engineering Research Council that it would have to stop financing all further projects this year because of an acute shortage of funds provided by the Government.

The scandal of Britain's neglect of industrial training has been revealed in report after report. In "New Jobs for Britain" the Labour party has shown what could be done. What do the Government say? The Secretary of State has told us that he is in favour of industrial training, but he added that it would have to be financed by companies and he did not have a clue how that was to be done. Next time the right hon. Gentleman thinks that he has a stick with which to beat the Opposition, I advise him to ensure that the stick does not hit him over the head. He should formulate his own policy before he attacks the policies of others.

Sir William Clark (Croydon, South): Is the right hon. and learned Gentleman aware that a 1 per cent. levy on the turnover of our most successful companies would turn their profits into loss?

Mr. Smith: I am aware that in many unsuccessful companies there is no provision for proper education and training. The Chancellor of the Exchequer told us last year that the responsibility for research and development and for industrial training could be left to industry, which he claimed was profitable. He argued that it could afford to pay for it, and would do so. The fact is that industry has not responded. British employers for the most part—there are some honourable exceptions—cannot be relied upon to provide industrial training. Their neglect of industrial training is a measure of their failure to calculate their own long-term self-interest. This is a serious matter for the nation and for all those who are affected by the failure to provide training opportunities.

Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody (Crewe and Nantwich): Is my right hon. and learned Friend aware of the effect of the changes in the way in which British Rail is to be organised in my constituency, which mean that, for the first time, this year 88 apprentices will complete their training and will not be given jobs? Is he aware also that no new apprentices will be taken on? That is one of the effects of the Government's policies.

Mr. Smith: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for drawing atttention to a serious situation that has arisen in her constituency, and in many others, as a result of the terrible decisions that have been taken by the management of British Rail.

The most sickening feature of all is the de-skilling of the nation. In most areas of Britain if an engineering company advertises for a small number of apprentices, the management is embarrassed by the hundreds of youngsters who apply. Only recently a manager in my constituency told me that he would never advertise again for apprentices. He explained that he did not know how to handle the queue of hundreds of youngsters who came looking for work. In future he will let it be known more locally that apprentices are required, and it is probable that they will be supplied by relatives of the existing work force. He told me that he had not understood the depth of the problem until he experienced it for himself. Unfortunately, that is the position throughout the country.

Instead, we should have a policy that is designed to create the best educated and most trained work force in western Europe. That is well within Britain's capacity. That could be achieved if it were set as one of our objectives, but that will not happen by accident. It will need the commitment of employers, employees, trade unions, trainers and educators at all levels. Above, all, the Government must give a lead.

Anyone who reads the Budget statement and listens to our debates will not guess that we are talking about issues that are vital for Britain. No one who studies the measures that are set out in the Budget statement will guess that we live in a nation that is more deeply divided now between north and south than ever before. Outside the south-east, the south-west and East Anglia—that is Britain to the north and west of the line between the Severn and the Wash—there has been sustained 94 per cent. of all the jobs lost since 1979. We know that the north-south divide is not the only relevant statistic. In pockets of the south-east, in some of the industrial towns, and especially inner city areas, there have been serious and worrying job losses. The most striking division, however, is between north and south.

For many hon. Members it is not necessary to deploy statistics on this issue. They know only too well from their constituency experience what is happening. A journey around Britain, especially by train, will draw attention to empty factory sites and deserted premises where there was once the hum of productive activity, where people and communities earned a good living for themselves and contributed to Britain's industrial and training strength. Too many areas are either derelict sites or factories with broken windows.

Mr. Marlow: Labour local authority areas.

Mr. Smith: The hon. Gentleman makes the cheap remark, "Labour local authority areas". I do not think that they are uniquely Labour areas. If they are Labour areas, thank goodness that there are some Labour Members who understand what it means.

Mr. Marlow rose——

Mr. Smith: I shall not give way to the hon. Gentleman merely because he shouts from a sedentary position. That does not give him the right to intervene in the debate.

My hon. Friends—I wish that this were the position on the Government Benches—know of the tragic new phenomenon that is caused by the north-south division. Workers are driven south to look for work. They travel down from the north to find a job in relatively prosperous parts of the south. Many of them find a job but they cannot settle because there are no local authority houses, and house prices are tens of thousands of pounds above any ceiling to which they could aspire. We see these workers during the weekends on long-distance buses. They are the new industrial gipsies of Britain. These are men who travelled south to find work and they return home for the weekends. They are driven to make impossible choices. They are unable to settle with their families in the area in which they can find work. This means that they have to travel on long-distance buses during weekends.

Some of these men decide that family life is more important than a job and retreat, disillusioned and despairing, to where they came from. That is understandable. Others struggle on, having added to their problems the difficulties of a divided family. This tragic division of our country cannot be right, but it has not happened by accident. It is not something that has visited Britain like the black death of the middle ages, about which nothing could be done. It is the direct result of Government neglect. Regional industrial assistance has been halved since 1979, and the Government are planning to halve it yet again in spite of these appalling problems. The Government have abandoned regional industrial policy, which they described in their 1984 review as "a social policy".

That is the essential difference between the two sides of the House. We do not argue that regional policy is a social palliative to deal with the problems of run-down industries; we make an economic case for it. We say that we must use all the resources and skills of the people in the relatively disadvantaged areas so that they can create a new future for themselves, and so that we can lessen the division between north and south and the dependency which is so demeaning to both sides.

That is why the Labour party is committed to new development agencies, which will spearhead an industrial recovery in the regions. It is why we will place special emphasis on high-class new technology as part of our regional industrial policy, and will review the classification of assisted areas to breathe new life into a commitment that is now dwindling by the day.

We do not and cannot accept that the accentuation of unemployment and the deprivation of personal opportunity can be justified. It is bad for the north, but it is equally bad for the south. If economic expansion is to be confined by unfettered market forces to the overcrowded segment of our country, there will soon be overheating, skill shortages and pressures on the environment — all of which could be avoided by sensible planning to distribute industry not only more fairly, but more rationally. Bringing jobs to the people instead of driving the people around the country in pursuit of them seems a much more intelligent approach.

To listen to the Government speak about the Budget, one would think that the problems did not exist. There is certainly no hint of a policy to deal with them. That is the crucial difference between us. The Labour party wants a better, more productive future for our country, and we know that that can be achieved only by an expanding and competitive industry that taps the skills of our people and gives them an opportunity to take on the world. We know that we must create the wealth, as well as advocating that it should be spent on improving the quality of our society and the opportunities for our people. That is why we wanted to see a Budget that mounted an assault on unemployment, made its principal purpose the revival of our industries and sought to counter the deepening divisions in our country and among its people.

We oppose this Budget not merely because the Government have proposed no policies to deal with the problems, but because they do not even share our objectives.

4.32 pm

Mr. Julian Amery (Brighton, Pavilion): I listened to the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) with, as always, great respect. He ended his speech by emphasising the division between north and south. I recently had the opportunity to campaign for my party on Tyneside and in Durham, and I must say that I was surprised to find that the position, at least superficially, was not so very different from that in Brighton and the south-east.

Of course, big changes take place, including industrial changes. When Bristol and Liverpool were deprived of the slave trade a great many problems were created for those who had been employed in it, but some industries cannot be brought back. The same kind of thing is happening in various parts of Britain where industries that were once of major importance cannot be revived today.

The right hon. and learned Gentleman said that we must have a strategy for bringing work to the people. Of course we must, but we must also think about how to bring people to the work. The debate has reminded me of a fable which I am sure you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, were taught as a boy. It concerned some hunters who were hunting a bear and arguing about how to divide its skin. Until this year our Budget debates have largely raised the question, "What is the best way to hunt the bear, and what is the best way to divide the skin when we have caught it?". This is the first time that we have caught the bear, enabling the Government—I shall discuss in a moment whether they were right or wrong — to spend nearly £5 billion on hospitals, schools and so on, to cut taxation and to pursue a policy that is bringing down interest and mortgage rates.

I am sure that the right hon. and learned Gentleman —who I think will end up on a different Bench from that on which he now sits—will be the first to recognise that that is a considerable achievement. I do not think that anyone would deny that. We have climbed a steep and stony path and, to paraphrase Sir Winston Churchill, we have emerged on to sunny uplands, where we have something to distribute. The interesting point about the debate is that it has not been about the policies; it has been about how we should divide the proceeds.

Conservative Members are entitled to ask, "Would the bear have been shot if the Labour party had been in power?". I think that the answer is no. I am sorry to see that the right hon. and learned Gentleman has momentarily left the Chamber; he may have some natural function to fulfil. Would the policies advocated by the Labour party since 1983 have produced the results that ours have produced? Labour's policies have been modified from week to week and from month to month. I understand that it is announcing some tomorrow that are different from those that it has preached before, but all that those policies have advanced is the need for more public expenditure.

There is a reasonable argument for that, but where does it lead? We have been through it before, and we know that it leads to higher inflation, to austerity and, in the end, to bringing back the International Monetary Fund. We know what it did to our industrial relations, which are now among the best in Europe. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State mentioned that foreign companies were now investing here. They would not have done so had the National Coal Board not won the battle against Mr.

[Mr. Julian Amery]

Scargill, or had the newspapers been stopped by the Wapping dispute. On both issues, the Labour party was on the wrong side.

A new world is developing. My right hon. Friend said that 300 German companies were investing here. I have heard of 200. Asked why, they said that our industrial relations were better and that our taxation was more sensible. When I was on Tyneside I was interested to note that the Nissan company was taking up work in Sunderland in a big way. All that is the result of policies that have worked. More growth, more employment, lower interest rates, lower inflation and a stable currency cannot be called bad results. I question whether those results would have been achieved if we had pursued the policies advocated by the right hon. and learned Gentleman.

I come to the policies advocated by the alliance. They are rather like the old Austrian eagle. They have two heads. One says to the country that whatever the alliance thinks the audience wants to hear. The other, which is quite natural, coming as it does from the new chancellor of Oxford university — the right hon. Member for Glasgow, Hillhead (Mr. Jenkins) — is the Socialism of the Gaitskell era. I understand and respect that view, but where does it lead? To call it "cloth cap Socialism" is out of date, but I would say that the SDP comprises well-dressed Socialists with a penchant for the better things in life, and why not?

Because SDP Members have learnt from their experience that that policy cannot be made to work without producing inflation, they have advocated a form of incomes policy. It is a rather complicated formula, which penalises employers. It might lead to a flight of capital unless exchange controls are introduced. It is not a sensible policy or one that might create or encourage economic growth. I understand that the right hon. Member for Hillhead and his colleagues want to show that they are not in favour of inflation, but what will they do? Will they invite Barbara Castle to join their ranks? "In Place of Strife" is what they are trying to say.

With hindsight, it could be said by Labour and alliance Front Benchers that the Government might have done better. I do not deny that. All politicians are fallible. Alfred Marshall, who was the doyen of all our economic policies when we were young, said that to achieve economic success one has to apply reason, perception and imagination. That is exactly what my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has managed to do. The former Leader of the Opposition, the right hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Foot), who is not here today, said:

> "More governments, including left governments, have been thrown out of power through a failure to deal with inflation than through any other single cause."

The Opposition parties, simply because of their inability to criticise the Budget, have fastened, rightly, on the unemployment issue. It would be ridiculous, particularly in an election year, for anyone to suggest that we do not care about unemployment. We want to be elected, so of course we care about unemployment. Even if we were hard-faced, hard-boiled men, we would still have to care to get the votes. It would be silly to pretend that we are not interested in that issue.

One million new jobs have been created. The right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East said that unemployment is worse now than it was between the wars, but the position is different now. Between the wars very few working men would allow their wives, when they had children, to work because there were not the amenities that are now available today — refrigerators, washing machines and the other goods that take the burden off the housewife. There is now a much larger working population.

Of the 3 million unemployed, more than 1 million have been unemployed for more than a year, and this is the hard core of the problem. The other 2 million, apparently, to judge from the statistics, are re-employed within 12 months. That is what the statisticians would call a transfer of human resources, but what I would call people changing their jobs. If, as happens in many cases, they are given a "handshake" from the firm that they leave, it is not all that rough. I am glad to say, as a rather old-fashioned Tory, that we do not make it too difficult for those people to make the change.

The real unemployment is created by the type of industrial action that we saw during the coal strike. Tens of thousands of coal miners lost between £8,000 and £9,000 by obeying Scargill, and the Labour party did nothing to stop that nonsense.

It has been said that this is an electioneering Budget. I was amused to hear the Leader of the Opposition answer the speech by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor. It is always very awkward to speak immediately after my right hon. Friend. The right hon. Gentleman attacked my right hon. Friend's speech as the speech that he had not made. I can understand that the right hon. Gentleman's speech writers had not guessed what was in it. It was interesting to note the light that the right hon. Gentleman's speech threw on the Labour party. The Labour party thought that if it had been in our shoes an electioneering Budget would have been produced, but it has not. This throws some light on what the Labour party would have done if it had happened to be in our shoes.

Ever since, we have heard about how Labour would have spent the money if it had it, about what Labour would have done with the £5 billion or £6 billion that was available and about how Labour would have spent it differently. All right, but Labour thought that we would produce a Budget to grab votes. We have not, but Labour should not think that this is not an election-winning Budget. The caution and prudence shown are guarantees that when my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister brings forward her manifesto, and if she offers something pretty good, it will be credible in a way that nothing else would have been.

4.47 pm

Mr. Robert Sheldon (Ashton-under-Lyne): The right hon. Member for Brighton, Pavilion (Mr. Amery) said that this was an election-winning Budget because it was a prudent Budget. I shall question that later, but first, while the Chancellor is here, I think that I should do what my right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition does each time he responds to the Chancellor. He congratulates him on the manner of his speech. We all recognise that the right hon. Gentleman's speech was his own — I could detect no trace of any civil servant's injection into it — but that is the limit of my congratulations. [Interruption.] I have seen many Treasury briefs, and one gets to know their language. I did not detect it on this occasion.

The Chancellor talks repeatedly about this country's economic success. I only wish that that were true. Talk of success is somewhat credible when one sees what is happening in the west end of London, but in my constituency what is known as the west end of Ashton-under-Lyne shows no sign of success. There is unemployment of more than 20 per cent. In Droylsden houses are decaying and their fabric is being destroyed. Window frames are rotting to such an extent that the standard practice is to get large wads of newspaper and stuff them between the brickwork and the window frames. How can one talk of success when that is happening and when the roads are in hopeless disrepair? I would welcome the opportunity to show the Chancellor around some parts of my constituency. I think that even his confidence might be shaken. He certainly could make no claim to success.

If the right hon. Gentleman has been so successful, why were retirement pensions, for example, not allowed to share in his success? If he has been so successful, why was child benefit not increased to help the least well-off couples? Why are houses rotting? The Public Accounts Committee has heard that £19 billion is required just to maintain a reasonable level of house repair. That has not been undertaken. It is false economy to allow house repairs to be neglected and windows to fall out, as is happening in my area.

I can find further examples in which sensible assistance would have been of enormous financial and economic value. It would have been value for money. That sort of expenditure is required just to maintain the level of our investment. A most important question was put by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith). If the Chancellor of the Exchequer is so successful, why is our industry not being modernised in the way that is should be? Why has our balance of payments deteriorated from a surplus of £2·5 billion to a deficit of £7·5 billion? Why have education and training been so generally deplored? There are many problems. I cannot understand how one can talk of success when such crucially important matters are before us. Above all, if we are so successful, why is this still such a divided country?

Mr. John Townend (Bridlington): The hon. Gentleman spoke about education. Does he accept that we are spending more in real terms per pupil than at any time in history and that pupil-teacher ratios and expenditure are as good as they have been at any time in history?

Mr. Sheldon: I never concentrate on inputs. I am more interested in outputs. Nobody can be satisfied with the output of our universities and other education institutions. Nobody can talk about success in that regard. The Government have failed to achieve something that could reasonably be achieved.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer not only talks about success but wants to claim the prize for prudence. If he has been so successful, why is he so prudent? General elections do not normally bring a rush of caution to the heads of Chancellors of the Exchequer, despite what the right hon. Member for Pavilion said. We have to examine more carefully the Chancellor's claim for his achievements in prudence as well as in success.

Let us consider the balance of payments for 1987. It is forecast to be minus £2·5 billion, but we know from past forecasts that the average error amounted to £3 billion. We could have a balance of payments deficit of between zero and more than £5 billion. That is a bit shaky. There is not much sign of success. Nothing in the future seems to suggest that it will change readily.

If the Chancellor has been so successful, why did he fail to revalorise excise duties? We all know why—it has an effect of about 0·3 per cent. on the retail prices index. If inflation could be as high as 4·5 per cent., according to the Red Book, with an increase in the margin of error of 1·75 per cent., which could bring it over 5 per cent., but leave that out of account at the moment, the Chancellor thought the extra 0·3 per cent. that was lost from failing to revalorise was worth having.

Some years ago the Chancellor of the Exchequer used to believe in a rather interesting notion called "truth in taxation." He applied it to income tax. He said, "It is not right that, year after year, the Chancellor claims credit for raising the level of threshold. It is not fair. We want truth in taxation." He went along with the Rooker-Wise amendment, so there was the ready revalorisation year by year. If the Chancellor of the Exchequer is still wedded to truth in taxation, we need a Rooker-Wise among the Government to bring about revalorisation of excise duties. I shall be interested to know which Government Members will put themselves forward as candidates. At least on this occasion they should have the support of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, although I do not see much sign of welcome at the moment.

The important thing is that the so-called prudent Budget depended on the failure to revalorise taxation and on a high exchange rate, high interest rate policy. They are clearly now the prime determinants of British economic policy—high interest rates to maintain a high exchange rate and to maintain low import prices, even though manufacturing industry will be dealt another blow. Already we have heard Denys Henderson, the incoming chairman of ICI, say that a $1.60 pound is eroding our competitive position, but cheap imports—the policy that we are pursuing at present—and low excise duties will massage the inflation figures, as will Lord Young's many devices to manipulate the unemployment figures.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer is best known in the lifetime of two Parliaments for wanting two things in his medium-term financial strategy. One thing to which he was dedicated was monetarism in a somewhat extreme form. We were all happy to see it moderated. The Chancellor looks quizzical. He will recall the 1980-81 Red Book, with its steady downward trend. It was a brilliant intellectual exercise—I shall never deny him that—but it postulated a rather rigid procedure for determining important matters. At one time, as the right hon. Gentleman and I know, he wanted to leave it to the Governor of the Bank of England to carry out the policies. We debated these matters in the fiduciary debate of 1976 or 1977. I am not sure whether Mr. Robert Leigh-Pemberton would be happy to carry out that type of policy, in the light of the more recent pronouncements.

The Chancellor wanted monetarism and tax reform. The first was not on. For his second aim, he had experience as a financial journalist, a most unusual experience as a speaking Whip on Finance Bills, and experience as Financial Secretary to the Treasury, responsible for the medium-term financial strategy. He was superbly placed —no one has ever been better placed—to be the great reforming Chancellor in taxation matters once the nonsense of monetarism was seen to fail. That is what many expected, and the action on pensions and life assurance led one to hope, and even to expect, the beginning of the long task of eroding some of the nonsenses in our tax sytem, the predominant peak of which, of course, was mortgage relief. Schedule A, inheritance tax, capital gains tax, and mortgage relief had a most powerful effect upon the incentive of people to invest in their own property.

The Chancellor has always had a passionate wish for a share-owning democracy, but what we have instead is a property-indulging Government. They subsidise the constant musical chairs, as householders trade up to improve their investments, particularly in the south-east. Of course, the Chancellor of the Exchequer knew and understood that, but he also knew the Prime Minister's opposition to any rationalisation. In the end, the result was a draw. There was no reduction in the relief, but no extension, either. Those of us who awaited with great interest the passage in the Chancellor's speech that we thought would deal with the level of mortgage relief found that it was a dog that did not bark. Those of us who trained our eyes on both the Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer to see how they reacted to the change were not rewarded by even a mention of the matter.

Profit-related pay was mentioned by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. I do not believe that there is any direct connection between the efforts of many employees and company profitability. It is all right for those in top management. They have a responsibility for certain areas, and if they are successful they are rewarded. But what about the charge hand in the machine shop, or the designer in the drawing office, let alone the worker on the shop floor? What direct connection do they have with the profitability of the company as a whole? Salesmen receive performance-related commission on their sales. There are arguments about the effectiveness of such a system of rewards, but its effectiveness does not increase as the distance between personal effort and distant profitability goals increases. To provide tax incentives for these but not for more direct achievements does not improve incentives. It distorts them. What about the public sector? Are we to discriminate against it? Employees in the public sector are not in the profit-making business. Are they to receive no incentive for personal effort?

Mr. John Stokes (Halesowen and Stourbridge): I am listening most carefully to the right hon. Gentleman, for whom I have a great regard. However, in the many factories in my constituency, which I frequently visit, I have never found such great realism as now. The workers, the charge hands and the foremen, let alone the managers, are deeply interested in the success of their companies.

Mr. Sheldon: They have to be if they want to keep their jobs, but whether their desire to keep their jobs is related to a distant goal that does not directly affect them is another matter, with which I believe I have dealt sufficiently.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer rightly stressed the importance of fiscal neutrality in a number of these areas, but he makes a bit of a nonsense of his claim to fiscal neutrality by his proposals relating to share-purchasing, betting at racecourses, and profit-related pay. There is not much neutrality there. The late Lord Kaldor, for whom I had a great personal affection—I think that he was the greatest economist that we ever had who failed to win a Nobel prize—believed excessively in the ability of tax incentives to motivate action. The Chancellor of the Exchequer used to represent the other extreme, from which he is now shifting. The distortion of the economy that results from those policies is reflected in this Budget. It runs counter to so much of what he has advocated in the past.

I regret, as does my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Monklands, East, the fact that the Budget is largely designed for the south-east. The Chancellor said not a single word about regional policy. That was a terrible omission, which I am sure he must regret.

Mr. John Morris is the president of the Manchester chamber of commerce and industry. In the presence of the Prime Minister, who was sitting by his side—he is a very brave man—he said:

"we do have a problem and we do believe a change in central government policy is needed to help us put it right. It is a problem which, if allowed to get worse, will not just prevent the north-west from exploiting its potential but will strangle our national growth. This problem is known in the Press as the north-south divide but it is actually much more specific than that. It is the accelerating concentration of the nation's wealth and resources in the south-east . . . Only by a commitment to the potential of the regions will the nation as a whole be able to escape the south-east vortex. The reason you and your colleagues hear so many complaints outside London, Prime Minister, is because frankly we do not see a willingness to address this problem."

That is the most important problem of all. It is more important than economic policy.

People feel that they are being disadvantaged because they live in a certain part of the country. That is the reality of their feelings, and what I regret most about the Budget is that there is no recognition of what is happening outside this favoured region in the south where we have the opportunity to debate these matters.

The Government have created two nations. The Budget deals with only one of them. Not a single word of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's speech was devoted to the problems of the other regions, and even now they do not even receive lip service. The taxation relief that has been offered by the Chancellor is not received with rapturous acclaim when prosperity is absent from entire communities.

The Government do not have a proper regional policy. For the last seven years they have claimed their devotion to small businesses. Mossley in my constituency, as well as Ashton-under-Lyne, consists entirely of small businesses, but while the Chancellor was extolling their virtues these firms were closing their doors. Nearly half those small firms ended their existence at the same time as the Chancellor was offering various kinds of relief and telling us what he was doing to help them. Once those doors are closed, they will never reopen. Those firms were doing a useful job for the community and the country. They suffered, and they will continue to suffer. Any Budget that leaves out of account such communities and people cannot claim to be a good Budget.

5.6 pm

Mr. Terence Higgins (Worthing): I begin by congratulating my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on his Budget. Inevitably it has been labelled by the media an electioneering Budget. I hate to think how mean and restrictive my right hon. Friend would have had to be for it not to have been so labelled.

The Budget debate takes place against an interesting political background for the Opposition. Labour Front Bench spokesmen have clearly stated that they will reverse whatever tax cuts my right hon. Friend might make. It is unusual for an Opposition to place such a statement on the record. None the less, on reflection it was not a very unfortunate statement for them to make. It has given the impression that if the Labour party were to come to power, all that would happen would be the restoration of the status quo as at the beginning of last week. In reality, that is not true. Given their expenditure programmes, it would mean a vast increase in taxation. Taxation would be far greater than at the beginning of last week.

In these debates I have great pleasure in speaking after the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon). I was interested in his suggestion that amendments ought to be moved to increase excise duties. My right hon. Friend has not increased excise duties, which brings out the crucial point that it would be a question not just of offsetting the tax changes in the Budget but of increasing taxes as well. However, the right hon. Gentleman was quite safe to make that suggestion because he knows, as I do, that it would be out of order to oppose an increase in excise duties during the debate on the Finance Bill.

It is also of interest to establish clearly the position of the alliance. We recall that last year they voted against the proposal to reduce taxation. No doubt they did so to demonstrate their fiscal rectitude. However, they did not go to great lengths to publicise what they had done—no doubt to avoid endangering their electoral prospects. If they do the same this year, I hope that there will be a great deal of publicity about precisely what is involved.

I welcome in particular one measure—the proposal to increase tax relief for those over 80. Some years ago I had the privilege of introducing a private Member's Bill that gave pensions as of right to the over-80s. It was the first measure that we introduced in 1970 when we came to power. I hope that the example that my right hon. Friend has given in this Budget will be followed on future occasions.

I am rather more worried about my right hon. Friend's proposal to treat the capital gains paid by insurance companies in the same way as corporation tax. It will put them at a disadvantage in relation to unit trusts, and it may affect the profits that eventually they are able to distribute. I hope that my right hon. Friend will look again at that proposal.

My right hon. Friend has introduced a very balanced Budget. It strikes a balance between the increases in public expenditure that were announced earlier, cuts in taxation and reductions in borrowing. The balance between those three elements was the keynote of my right hon. Friend's speech last week. The fact that we have already seen a reduction in interest rates as a result of these measures is important not only to those with mortgages but to those who are investing in industry, with the prospect of corresponding increases in employment.

My right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury emphasised that we must look at both sides of the equation and at the difference between them. In that context, I hope that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will look more favourably at the proposals in the report on finance of the Select Committee on Procedure to bring together the two sides of the debate. It is strange that the Budget deals only with raising taxation instead of looking also at public expenditure. I hope that my right hon. Friend will look at that proposal again, and, perhaps, at the proposal for placing a limit on Government borrowing—a system that is used in the United States.

I welcome the cut in the public sector borrowing requirement, but I have two doubts about it. The first is my right hon. Friend's proposal that, over the length of the medium-term financial strategy, it should be held at 1 per cent. of gross national product rather than continue on its downward path. I hope that he will at some stage spell out the arguments for doing that.

I have long had differences with my right hon. Friend about asset sales, the proceeds of which he continues to treat as a reduction in public expenditure, whereas I believe that they should be shown as a means of financing the PSBR. Those asset sales are now larger than the PSBR itself. If the figures were treated in the way that I have suggested, the PSBR would be more than double the size that appears in the official figures. Of course, the impact of that change would not be twice as large, because selling British Telecom or BP is not precisely the same as selling gilt-edged stock. None the less, the economic effect, while not exactly the same in quantitative terms, is the same in qualitative terms.

It is difficult to ascertain what the balance between fiscal and monetary policy now is. I hope that my right hon. Friend will not hesitate as much as he has in the past, when policy is developed, to recognise that that balance has changed. There have been considerable changes in the medium-term financial strategy. The original intention of that strategy—to reduce the PSBR so as to control the money supply without putting excessive reliance on interest rates—is closer to being achieved now than before. It is curious that despite that fact the measure of money supply that was originally proposed—M3—has now been effectively dropped.

As the balance of payments has already been discussed at considerable length in this and earlier debates I shall say only that I do not share the great concern that has been expressed about it. The fall in the exchange rate against the deutschmark in particular is bound to work through in the form of higher exports. The official forecasts on the balance of payments figures may be over-pessimistic, not least because they are based on conservative estimates of future oil prices. Therefore, I do not share the concern expressed about the matter by the Opposition.

I now turn to the somewhat strange letter that appeared in the Financial Times immediately before the Budget, signed by all the chief economic advisers to Governments from 1947 to 1979. They should know better than anyone that publishing a letter immediately before the Budget is not likely to have a tremendous impact on its contents.

The letter was also curious because it made a superficial and over-simplified analysis of the events of 1979-80. It grossly underestimated the impact, not only of the items mentioned in it, but of the world recession at that time. It also failed to take into account the Clegg pay settlements, whose impact in terms of our competitiveness was serious, as the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee pointed out at the time. The effect of high oil prices on the exchange rate should also have been mentioned. The letter failed to appreciate the great number of influences at work at that time.

As a result of that conjuncture of variables, overmanning in British industry was substantially reduced, and, as a result of that, the unemployment from which we have been suffering since then took place. It was neither the classical type, with a lack of co-operative factors, nor the cyclical variety. It was a once and for all change, reflecting the fact that the jobs were not there at all.

In terms of human unhappiness, that was a great tragedy for those who were affected by it, a large number of whom did not contribute to the inflationary wage settlements. It has meant that we have had to create about one third of the jobs in the economy since then. There is no simple solution to the problem and a massive increase in the level of demand would not bring about the kind of long-term solution that we need. On the contrary, it will take time. The Budget produced by my right hon. Friend is consistent with that objective.

The letter that I mentioned earlier advocates a change of course, although exactly what change is unclear, as it is not specified. The Budget's measures are likely to result in a reasonable level of economic growth which, in turn, provides a basis of lower interest rates and so on, giving hope that a decline in the level of unemployment such as we all desire will take place.

The demographic factors that have contributed considerably to the level of unemployment while employment has been increasing are likely to work gradually in our favour, and we should all welcome that. That will affect not only the south-east of England, but other parts of the country too. The overall employment picture gives cause for hope of an improvement. The balance between expenditure, taxation and borrowing is the right one, because if long-term investment is to be found, the rate of interest will play an important part in that.

This was not an electioneering Budget; rather it continued the development of policy. There have been considerable developments over the past few years, but this Budget should see us into a third term of Conservative Government and a continued improvement in our economic position.

5.18 pm

Mr. Matthew Taylor (Truro): I thank you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, for allowing me this opportunity to make my maiden speech. It is not especially easy to come into the House in such tragic circumstances and I am conscious of the remarkable precedent set by my predecessor, Mr. David Penhaligon.

It is rare on the death of an hon. Member, even in such tragic circumstances, that such a huge wave of sympathy and such a great sense of loss are sparked off. That is true not only of my constituency and of Cornwall as a whole, although perhaps the greatest sense of loss has been felt there, but of many throughout Britain who felt that they had lost an ally, a straight talker and someone on whom they could depend. Indeed, many who had never met him personally felt that they had lost a genuine friend. David had become known throughout the nation as a politician who was honest, down to earth and deeply caring—in short, a politician of warmth and humour who could be trusted and relied upon.

I was fortunate enough to work with David, so I am well aware that he never attempted to put on a public face, or a pretence, but always acted on his words—he lived his Liberalism.

I believe that I can speak on behalf of all my constituents in thanking David's colleagues and friends in the House for their generous tributes to him. Most especially, I wish to pay a tribute to the sheer bravery of his family—to Matthew, and Anna and, above all, to Annette, his wife, who has shown remarkable courage in the months since his death. I am grateful to them for the help they have given me in tackling his casework, through the campaign and now as I take his seat in the House.

Let no one say that David was simply a good natured Cornishman, marvellous attributes though they may be. He was a rare campaigner for justice for the poor, the elderly and for Cornwall, highlighting not only the problems but proposing imaginative and far-reaching solutions.

When he was first elected he had come from third place in a constituency where the Liberals had badly declined. Over many years he built up a strong voice for the Liberal party, not only there but in the House, and it is an element of tribute to him that we now see the alliance and the Liberal party challenging for Government. Indeed, I think that he would have greatly appreciated the panic shown by certain Conservatives over the weekend.

At the time of his death David was one of those putting the finishing touches to the alliance's yellow book, "The Time has Come", and to the alliance Budget proposals. Each has now been published and is part of his legacy as a great Liberal. For each he drew, in large part, on his knowledge of the problems of Cornwall.

Truro and St. Austell is an area of great contrasts. It is popularly known for its beaches and sunshine but we suffer, in fact, from all the same problems as some of the most deprived regions of the north. The Cornish health service has not been allowed the resources to keep up with the growing burdens upon it. We have waiting lists for urgent cases and four out of five people have to wait more than a month. For non-urgent cases one in three people have to wait for over a year. The primary schools, in particular, are old and dilapidated, yet the funds are not made available to restore or renew them. Cornish housing waiting lists lengthen and homes crumble while the receipts from council house sales are locked up in London. Local unemployment remains well above the national average, yet the grants available to assisted areas have been removed from Truro and St. Austell and more jobs have gone with them. Farm incomes have dipped between 60 and 70 per cent in the past five years, bankrupting many smaller family farms. In the clay areas around St. Austell we still live with a pale version of the deprivation and dereliction of the coal mining communities elsewhere. We have seen a decline and it is those issues that I have highlighted throughout the recent by-election.

Throughout, I argued that the money made available by the short-term revenues from privatisation and North sea oil should be invested in rebuilding our schools and hospitals, in our children's education and training, and in jobs. Above all, I believe that the short-term Government revenues should be used not for short-term gains for the better off but for long-term investment from which we can all share the dividends in the future. Most of all, we must fulfil our obligations to invest in our children and their future. It was with the resounding backing of the people of Truro and St. Austell for those priorities that I took my seat on Budget day last week.

I must confess that I was disheartened by the Chancellor's speech; not for what it contained but for what it did not contain. There was a give-away of £500 million in the Budget to those who smoke and those who drink, but we are told that there was no money for the things that so clearly the people of Truro and St. Austell said that they wanted made a priority. It contained nothing for the unemployed, the old, the young, the disadvantaged or the future. Indeed, the Chancellor has failed to draw any lesson from the dismal showing of party candidates representing his priorities in by-election after by-election. Was there anything for the rich? There were perhaps a few extra pounds in the wallet, but I do not believe that even the rich still think that those are the right priorities for our Government. They can see that if their children are unemployed, their parents have to be helped out because the pension is inadequate. If when they want hospital treatment they find themselves having to wait more than a year or paying for it privately, there is no gain from the Chancellor's tax cuts.

I had hoped that the Government would respond to the clear message of the voters of Truro and Greenwich that the time has come to start investing for the future and to start rebuilding our nation. I fear that, so far as I can detect, the Chancellor has failed to do so. The people of Truro and St. Austell elected me to make that case and I have done so. They also elected me to campaign for change, and on that I am just beginning, but change is in the wind.

5.27 pm

Mr. Cranley Onslow (Woking): It falls to me, and I am glad to accept the pleasant duty on behalf of the House, to congratulate the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on his maiden speech. I am sure that what he said about his predecessor will have been echoed by all present on both sides, and by those inside or outside the House. David Penhaligon was a man who won enormous respect and affection from all of us, even though we did not always agree with what he said. However, if we all agreed with what everybody said we would not be here at all.

May I say to the hon. Gentleman that I congratulate him on the manner of his speech, if not necessarily on all its content. I congratulate him on the terrifically Liberal way in which he interpreted the conventions about avoiding anything controversial. Whatever forces brought the hon. Gentleman to the House, he is now here on his own and he will stay here, as long as he does, by virtue of his own achievements and his mark will be made by himself. We look forward to seeing how he goes about it.

This is only the second time that it has fallen to me to congratulate a maiden speaker. On the other occasion, the hon. Lady whom I followed had won a by-election in Lincoln from a certain Mr. Taverne. As far as I can recollect, she lost that seat at the next general election and it has been a Conservative seat ever since. The hon. Gentleman may take that in any way he wishes. We look forward to hearing him again.

As far as I can recall, this is my own maiden speech in the Budget debates. I do not recollect having ventured into this difficult territory before. I welcome the procedural change by which it has been made possible for hon. Members to continue to debate the Budget on the evening that the Chancellor makes his statement instead of going on to some opposed private business or other.

I have no doubt from the conversations I have had with colleagues in the House and with constituents that this is a good Budget and that the Chancellor is to be congratulated on it. He is also to be congratulated on the consistent management and maintenance of the objectives that have enabled him to bring forward the Budget in this form.

I spoke to a number of my constituents on Saturday morning and I asked them what they made of it. The small traders were unanimous in their welcome for it, particularly for the value of the VAT changes. I hope that there will be no difficulty with the EEC on that and I hope that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor will also accept that the EEC should be pressed to do something to raise the VAT threshold above its present figure. It is far too low and it should be raised.

The constituents to whom I spoke were unanimous in welcoming the tax reliefs and were also very pleased about the interest rate reductions that had followed the Budget and the reduction in the mortgage rate, about which they had just heard. They were also very pleased about the constant theme running through this Budget, as with its predecessors, of maintaining the fight against inflation.

There is one specific point which I want to bring to the attention of my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Treasury. I want to echo the point raised by my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins) about the effect on the insurance industry of the proposed changes in corporation tax rules. Unfortunately, the Chancellor's Budget statement did not spell out too precisely what effects the changes will have and nor did the Inland Revenue press release that followed. I hope that we can have some clarification on that matter because the Association of British Insurers is very concerned by a move which it believes will bear heavily upon its industry. Many of its members are worried about what has happened to the "level playing fields" approach.

The ABI states that it has received confirmation from

"the Inland Revenue that it is intended that the proposed new measures will apply to the policyholders' share of chargeable gains arising in life funds. This is to be achieved by the repeal of Section 26 of the Finance Act 1974"— with which hon. Members will be instantly familiar. The ABI goes on to say:

"Tax on the investment gains of policyholders' funds effectively represents a levy on the savings of millions of policyholders. The new measures, which are expected to cost at least £50 million per annum, would further reduce the competitive position of life insurance companies in relation to investment trust companies and authorised unit trusts and even direct investments by individuals."

The association goes on to stress:

"In 1984 the Chancellor justified the abolition of Life Assurance Premium Relief on the grounds that it was desirable to encourage equality of investment opportunities. The Association fully supports that objective but considers that the proposed new capital gains tax measures will have the opposite effect."

I must add to those comments the view of one major unit trust company with which I have been in touch. It argues that the calculation of the product of the change at £60 million in the Budget may be a considerable underestimate because, it states:

"In 1985 capital losses on gilts could offset gains in other securities. This is no longer the case. Stock and bond markets have risen substantially since 1985 so that realised gains in 1986 will be significantly higher than in 1985. . . . The provisions for capital gains tax made by the life companies are borne by the policy holders. Those provisions reflect unrealised gains. The cost to the policy holder of the Budget proposals will therefore reflect not the impact on realised gains—the Revenue's assumption—but unrealised gains."

[Mr. Cranley Onslow]

The company makes other points which no doubt can be pursued and probably will be pursued in the Committee stage of the Finance Bill. However, with regard to the representations that I have received, I must tell Ministers that there is a point which must be cleared up speedily. I would be happy to expand on the brief summary that I have given to the House now if that would be helpful to Ministers.

The next point concerns the cuts in the science budget, which have received a lot of publicity over the weekend. The right hon. Member for Glasgow, Hillhead (Mr. Jenkins) made a great deal of that in his party political broadcast and the right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen) went on about it during his appearance on "Any Questions".

The facts seem to be very difficult to establish. I can tell the right hon. Member for Hillhead in his absence that if he is concerned — and I would not quarrel with his objective—to make Britain the best educated nation in western Europe, it might have been more to the point if he had said something about the effects of the completely unnecessary teachers' strike which is causing infinitely more damage to our children's prospects than anything else that is happening at the moment in the world of education.

When we try to find out precisely what the effect of the Science and Engineering Research Council budget reallocation will be, we do not have very much firm material to rely on. An article in The Times today refers to Dr. Peter Day and his research into superconducting material, one property of which is said to be an application to magnetically propelled trains. I recall that we have been in that country before. There was a tremendous row in 1973 about linear motors which, I think, are not totally different from magnetically propelled trains. The judgment then was that that technology was not likely to be of great value to anyone with already well-established conventional railways. I wonder how genuine is the alarm that is now being sounded.

Another item in that article in The Times also worries me. It states:

> "Britain is particularly well placed . . . because it has probably the world's best instrument for the job, called Isis, at the Rutherford and Appleton laboratory near Oxford."

If we already have the best equipment for this research, I am puzzled and cannot understand why we cannot find some way of combining with other nations that are working in the same area to make progress together. I cannot understand why the British effort must be carried out in isolation and apparently totally funded by the taxpayer.

Leaving that point aside, the part of the argument that I find even more depressing is the way in which it ignores what is already happening in industry to apply research to marketable products. Our industrial progress is more likely to be speeded and maintained by applied research than by some of the academic work about which we hear so much fuss. I say that with the knowledge that at least two of the companies with whom I am lucky enough to be involved have recently invested considerable sums of money in setting up applied research units. These have been extremely successful and should shortly be paying their own way and soon making substantial profits. I would much rather see scarce scientific resources used in ways that will create jobs and saleable products in the next two or three years than being used to create something which may or may not be of great benefit to us in 20 years' time.

The general health of industry also attracted some comments from Opposition Members. When I hear Opposition spokesmen on this subject, I am puzzled by how little they seem to know about the south. They claim an enormous expertise on the north, but sometimes their comments about life in the south are totally detached from reality.

Mr. Alistair Burt (Bury, North): That is because the Opposition do not have any Members of Parliament in the south.

Mr. Onslow: It may be because they have no hon. Members representing southern constituencies and I suppose that I would be out of order if I went into the reasons for that. However, Opposition Members have not tried to find out the reality.

The right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) suggested that if things continued as they are there would be skill shortages and environmental pressures in the south-east of England. There have been skill shortages and environmental pressures in the south-east for four or five years now. The green belt, which is immensely valued by my constituents, nevertheless acts as a barrier to some of the kinds of industrial and housing developments that some Opposition Members are so eager to see. More than one company in my constituency is 10 per cent. short of the skilled manpower it needs to maximise its business opportunities, and that against the background in which the employment position continues to change for the better. Only today I received a press release from Surrey county council that shows that there has been a 14 per cent. drop in the number of people registered as unemployed in Surrey in the past 12 months. The press release states that most young people in Surrey have a realistic opportunity of obtaining a suitable job.

Against that position, companies in my part of the world are seeking to move some, if not all, of their enterprise to other parts of the country—for example, to the north — where they can find a more congenial opening for development on property costs and employment opportunities. The biggest employer in my constituency is probably still British Aerospace, but its Weybridge plant is being run down and British Aerospace is relocating the work that used to be done there to other areas, including Manchester, Humberside and Bristol. It is no longer economically sensible to make aeroplanes at Weybridge, but design, draughtsmen's work and administration will continue there.

Just as British Aerospace is relocating to areas which the Opposition describe as deprived, so James Walker, which is the biggest direct employer located in my constituency, has long had subsidiary factories at Workington and at Wadebridge in Cornwall. They contribute to the strength and development of a healthy company. Another company whose representatives I met the other day is setting up a subsidiary in Birmingham, and another has set up part of its enterprise in north Wales.

That is how matters will go in the future. It may be true that, comparatively, the south-east is more prosperous than other areas at present, but that prosperity represents an economic flywheel whose benefits are spinning off and will continue to spin off to other areas. I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on what the Government have done in the Budget to make it easier for such firms to continue to prosper, expand and diversify.

Opposition Members who criticise the Government could usefully apply several tests when they talk about the north-south divide. One is whether the immobility of labour—about which, understandably, they complain—is increasingly being compensated for by the mobility of management. I have anecdotal evidence to show that that is happening, and there is statistical evidence to the same effect. In response to a question from me this morning, the Library was kind enough to produce some figures on domestic air passenger movements. They show that between 1982 and 1985 the average annual increase in traffic between the London airports and the provincial airports of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Manchester and Newcastle was 9·2 per cent. That is not all due to tourists or to family travel. A significant part of the increase—the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East, as a user of the shuttle, will have noticed this—represents the movement of managers to those areas seeking and expanding economic opportunities. The figures show that that trend has continued into 1986, although the full figures for that year are not yet available.

Mrs. Dunwoody: Has it occurred to the hon. Gentleman that it is caused by something much simpler? Management in areas such as the north-west is being forced to travel to London to check with other administrators, who are no longer in touch with what is happening in their few remaining subsidiaries in the manufacturing areas.

Mr. Onslow: It is probably some fault in the management system which I have no doubt the hon. Lady knows all about and could cure if she put her mind to it. I shall not dwell on that point, but the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East should not be so gullible about the cause of the split between the more economically active areas and the areas where economic activity has not yet recovered to its previous level. The industries that used to provide the economic activity in those areas have died and must be replaced.

The Government's management, which can be described as prudent, includes more proposals for privatisation, with the announcement that the remainder of the Government's stake in British Petroleum will be sold. I welcome such sales, especially because I have never believed that it is the business of the Government to accumulate assets. The Opposition are fond of talking about public ownership, but the only genuine public ownership is the personal and beneficial ownership by millions of members of the public, who now have the opportunity to put their savings into enterprises that were previously closed to them.

To return to my experience in my constituency on Saturday morning, the only switcher that I found was a lady who told me freely that she had voted Liberal at the seven elections in Woking in which I have been fortunate to come top of the poll, but that she now intended to vote Conservative. I welcomed that, and asked her to tell me why. She said that her son had told her that she would be daft to vote in a way that might create a hung Parliament and thus cause immense damage to the value of her savings.

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South and Shoreditch): It is a very small sample.

Mr. Onslow: It is a very small sample, but I doubt whether she is the only person. What a perceptive fellow the hon. Gentleman is. What a perceptive little sample he is. I very much doubt whether that lady was the only constituent of mine who thinks that way about the opportunities that have been opened to her, under this Government, to take a personal interest in the prosperity of the country.

This is a good Budget. I agree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing that it is not an election Budget. It is consistent with the long-term aims which the Conservative party has set for itself. My hon. Friends the Members for Reigate (Mr. Gardiner) and for Horsham (Sir P. Hordern) said that 25p was not a low enough target for the reduction in the basic rate of tax. I agree with them. It should be our purpose to reduce the first payment point for income tax as low as possible, consistent with prudent management. To do that, we must win another election. The Budget will help us to do that.

5.47 pm

Mr. Eric S. Heffer (Liverpool, Walton): We have heard much in the debate about income tax, and the hon. Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) also mentioned it. I have no objection to income tax relief for those at the lower end of the incomes scale—some working people have been taxed too highly—but that is not to say that we should agree with the Government's proposal to lift the income tax burden from all sections of the community. A clear level should be set beyond which taxation should increase, not decrease, because income tax is an important way of redistributing wealth. The Government have taken the opposite line and are helping the rich, to the detriment of the poor.

A fact which emerges clearly from the Budget proposals, and which has been underlined by the debate—I have listened to much of the debate on various days—is that the unemployed gain nothing from them. As the people of Liverpool would say, there is nothing down for them. Nor does it help the low-paid. On Thursday last week my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) said that since 1979 a total of £8 billion had been given in tax cuts. The poorest 6 million taxpayers have received only 8 per cent., while the richest 1 million taxpayers have shared one third of tax cuts. My hon. Friend said:

> "The taxpayer on £70,000 a year has received a tax cut of £367 a week. The low-paid have received under £2 a week and that has been offset by increases in national insurance contributions, VAT, excise duties and other indirect taxes." —[Official Report, 19 March 1987; Vol. 112, c. 1114.]

The Government have consistently pursued a policy of increasing indirect taxation, which hits the lowest paid hardest. Indirect taxation is the most punitive form of taxation, yet the Government have pursued a policy of increasing it from the very day on which they were elected. This is a rich man's Government. I do not mean that all of them are rich, but they support the rich against the poor. According to the Inland Revenue figures for 1984, the richest 1 per cent. of the population owned 21 per cent. of personal wealth, and the richest 10 per cent. owned 52 per cent. The poorest half of the population owned just 7 per cent. of the personal wealth. The latest figures for household income distribution, published in November

[Mr. Eric S. Heffer]

1986 in Economic Trends, show that the gap between the rich and the poor is widening. By 1985 the top 40 per cent. of the population accounted for 76·5 per cent. of personal incomes, whereas the poorest 40 per cent. accounted for 6·3 per cent.—a drop from 9·5 per cent. in 1979.

The fact is that Britain is made up of two nations. The gap is not just between north and south. In that respect, I partly agree with some Conservative Members. Matters are worse in the north because it has had a greater concentration of industrial workers, but some workers in the south are suffering just as much. We must understand that the divide is between the rich and the poor, although it is further aggravated by the north-south divide.

As I have said before, I shall never forget the image of the Prime Minister coming out of No. 10 on the day that she was elected and reciting the prayer of St. Francis of Assisi. It would have been better had she quoted a few words from what Benjamin Disraeli wrote about the two nations. Although we have not yet reached a state of affairs as bad as that, we are getting very close to it. In London, we are certainly getting close to the situation described by Jack London in "The People of the Abyss". He described poverty stricken, homeless people sleeping under arches in this great city of ours. He described people coming here to look for work and not being able to find it.

The problem is that the Government are a class Government, carrying out class politics. They do not argue class politics; indeed, they deny the existence of the class struggle. They simply carry out class politics against our people and our class.

The Prime Minister goes on about Victorian values. Some Victorian values were good, but not those that the right hon. Lady espouses. Her values are the values exemplified by the small shopkeeper who, unable to find somewhere for his workers to live, turned them out into the streets on a Sunday. Those employers kept their workers poverty stricken, did not think that there should be organised trade unions and fought against them. They believed that workers should be kept in service for the benefit of the rich. We do not hear the Prime Minister saying very much about the real values of those times.

The Government tell us that we are living in a popular capitalist society and that we are increasingly a property-owning democracy. They tell us that more and more people own their own houses and that there are more and more individual shareholders. Ministers should come to my constituency and to other parts of Liverpool and see how many houses are up for sale and how many of the young people who owned their homes have now been thrown out because they could not keep up the mortgage repayments.

Some time ago there was a very good article in the Daily Telegraph about workers coming down from Liverpool on the 4, 5 or 6 o'clock train on Sundays and going back on Fridays. Married men with families have to leave their homes to seek employment. They lead a nomad's life and live in all sorts of dreadful conditions—that is, if they can find accommodation at all. The hon. Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) said that there was a skill shortage in the south, and I am sure that there is, but when my young nephew who is a skilled craftsman literally got on his bike and came down to the south with a tent he could not find a job as a skilled engineer. The only job that he could get was in a bar, and he did not think that that was what he required. Perhaps he could have got a job if he had had a house. But there are no houses, lodgings or other places in which to live. Those are the problems with which we are faced.

The Chancellor boasted that we now have 8·5 million individual shareholders. He knows as well as I do what happens when a company or an industry is privatised. In the first flush there appears to be a wide take-up of the shares, but they are almost immediately sold and become concentrated in the hands of financial institutions and smaller groups. If the Government think that I am talking a lot of nonsense about the share-owning democracy, they should look at the excellent booklet entitled "The Widening Gap—Rich and Poor Today" published by the Labour research department. I am talking, not about the Labour party research department, but about the research department started by people such as G. D. H. Cole a long time ago. The document lists the top 200 millionaire shareholders. They range from David Sainsbury and Robert Maxwell to J. M. K. Laing and, believe me, they own a lot of shares. They do very well out of so-called diffused shareholding democracy.

The real economic power rests not with the Government but with those top shareholders. Let us consider that in relation to unemployment in areas such as mine. In January this year Merseyside had 136,100 people out of work—20·1 per cent unemployment. The figures are also listed by local authority area. Knowsley had 19,001 unemployed and Liverpool 55,683. In St. Helens it was 14,434, and in Sefton, which includes Bootle, it was 21,039. In Wirral, which in Liverpool is regarded as a posh area to which one used to get the boat, it was 25,943.

I want the House to reflect for a few minutes on the misery that lies behind those figures and what they mean for people living in the situation that they are in today, with no jobs and no hope. This is particularly true of young people. It has been said by Conservative Members that we do not understand the south. Perhaps we do not, because we do not live here all the time, but if they came to our areas to see what it is like, with masses of young people with nothing to do and no hope and no future, they would understand us better. These people do not believe that anybody will do anything for them. Some of them have been unemployed for more than six years. They cannot change jobs because they have never had jobs. They are part of the over 1 million who have been out of work for more than a year. Hon. Members should think of the horror that that means.

Had it not been for the Liverpool city council taking on 11,500 workers for construction work, building houses, sports centres, parks and much else, the level of unemployment would have been even higher. Unfortunately, most of the Liberal party is not here, but I must tell its Members that it is a great pity to read that the Liberal party in Liverpool is talking about stopping the house building programme that had been put into effect.

The construction industry is the one industry which, if the Government were serious about creating employment, could get workers back to work quickly. It is a labour-intensive industry. All that one has to do is look through the Government Departments to see what is required and provide the money to get that building done, and get local authorities to say what housing needs there are, and get on with the housing. Public buildings, the development of the railway system, which needs modernisation, and the sewerage system provide plenty of opportunities for job creation. My right hon. Friend the Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon) referred to the chamber of commerce that had asked the Government to provide £500 million in the Budget for extra work for the construction industry. I do not see that anything has been done along those lines.

Homelessness has increased. In 1979, 56,700 households were accepted as homeless for rehousing. That is the official definition of homelessness. By 1985 that figure had grown to 93,900, and it is rising all the time. That was the accepted number of applicants, not the total number, which in 1985 was 203,000. Government statistics point to 588,000 overcrowded households in 1985 and 109,000 severely overcrowded households, and only 38 per cent. of those people are on housing waiting lists. These figures have gone up all the time. Registered households in England stood at 1,020,000 in 1979, and they stand at 1·25 million today.

Much can be done. Opportunity exists through a housing policy. The Trades Union Congress, in its Budget proposals, and even the employers in the construction industry, have pressed the Government to put investment money into building. It is the one industry that could begin the process of building up employment and getting it going. Whatever criticisms I may have of some aspects of their policies, my Front Bench spokesmen are right to argue for beginning the process of developing the construction industry and putting investment into this vital industry.

When my party comes into office, as I think it will, it must carry out these policies. I am not one of those who read the papers and think "Oh my God." That comes from the hothouse of the journalists. When I talk to people, I find that they are about as enthusiastic for this Government as a Jewish person would be about a pork chop in a synagogue. They have no enthusiasm whatsoever for this Government and they intend to get rid of them. I want them to vote for the only party that can create an alternative Government, my party.

I want to see an end to privatisation and I want to take back into public ownership those industries which have been privatised. The Government talk about shareholding, but we all had shares in such industries because they were the nation's shares. They were owned for us, by us and in our interest. If they were not run as well as we wanted them to be run, we had the right to do something about that. Once such control is out of our hands, we have no control over industry.

I want to extend public ownership. I am delighted with the idea of the investment bank, and I hope that we shall look further than that. I want to see the nation's resources planned on a proper basis. Technological development, whether or not we like it, will create unemployment, so we need alternative employment for those workers who are made redundant. This means planning the nation's resources and the nation's labour, which is part of our resources. This in turn means that we have to talk in terms of a 30-hour week and fewer working days each week and extending industry, and the service industries, in other directions. We must put profits not before people but behind the interests of the people.

We need to get rid of this selfish, greedy society that has developed since the Government came into office. They have proved that the capitalist competitive system does not work in the interests of our people. It is time that we made a move to get rid of it.

6.8 pm

Sir William Clark (Croydon, South): The House has listened with great interest to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer), who made his usual anti-capitalism speech. In his view, we should go back to the good old days when we had state regulations and state control, which stifled initiative and led to overmanning in our industries. That is mainly responsible for today's high unemployment.

I welcome the Budget, which is a continuation of the Government's strategy since 1979. I cannot see that there should be any surprise that some of us who have supported this policy ever since the Government started in 1979 now see it coming to fruition. This year, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has increased revenue from VAT, from more productivity in industry and from PAYE. This has given him the opportunity not only to increase public expenditure on education, health and so on to the extent of over £4 billion but to cut taxes by just short of £3 billion and to cut the borrowing requirement by £3 billion.

I do not know whether the hon. Member for Walton is advocating an increase in excise duty. However, I advise him that people with low incomes are benefiting from the fact that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has not increased excise duties on cigarettes, beer and so on.

To listen to Opposition Members, one would think that any reduction in taxation would immediately cause a balance of payments problem. Surely any increase in wages will cause such a balance of payments problem. Their argument is so illogical that it is untrue. The £2·8 billion reduction in personal taxation will create more demand and more jobs. That is what we want. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor's main thrust in the Budget ensures that inflation is being kept down with the non-valorisation of excise duty and the cut in the borrowing requirement.

As hon. Members will recollect, the public sector borrowing requirement was running at £7 billion, or 1·75 per cent. of GDP. It will now be reduced to £4 billion, which is only 1 per cent. of GDP. I am sure that Opposition Members will agree that it is fair to say that the Labour Government's borrowing requirement represented just over 9 per cent. of GDP. That forced them to go to the IMF. Their real problem was overspending. We were in an absolute mess—[Interruption.] It is no good the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) laughing. He knows as well as I do that when his right hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey) was Chancellor he had to go cap in hand to the IMF to bail out the country. We were beggars to the IMF. The right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) said that his right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) did not say that under a Labour Government the borrowing requirement would increase to 4 per cent. of GDP. I refer Opposition Members to column 952 of the debate on 18 March which shows that the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook clearly said that the deficit would be 4 per cent. of GDP. That means that he will borrow about £16 billion. It is no good the hon. Member for Dagenham denying that. Perhaps when he speaks he will spell out——

Mr. Bryan Gould (Dagenham): I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman because I can do better than that. I should like to correct him and point out the distinction between the public sector financial deficit, which is what my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) was discussing, and the public sector borrowing requirement, with which the hon. Gentleman is confusing it.

Sir William Clark: Not under a Labour Government, because the difference between the two is the privatisation money. I presume that there will not be any privatisation money under a Labour Government, which means that 4 per cent. of GDP is £16 billion. I remind the hon. Gentleman that before the Labour Government went to the IMF the 9 per cent. borrowing requirement would, in today's figures, mean overspending of about £36 billion. That is the size of the problem that we face. The borrowing requirement must affect interest rates which we have seen fall by one point. I believe that they will go even lower.

I advise right hon. and hon. Members who advocate an increase in the borrowing requirement to consider the present cost of the national debt. It costs us nearly £18 billion a year to service it. What could we do with that £18 billion if we were paying it in interest? In simple terms, the country is paying £30,000 a minute in national debt. There are 60 minutes in an hour and 24 hours in a day, and every minute we are paying £30,000. I hope that my right hon. Friend's target for the borrowing requirement is zero. If we raise £5 billion from the sale of BP, the current borrowing requirement of £4 billion will be reduced to nearly zero.

I know that the hon. Member for Walton does not care for the capital society. However, during the past seven years, with the sale of property to council house tenants, we have created a true property-owning democracy—[Interruption.] It is all very well for Opposition Members to grin about that, but they should talk to some of the 63 per cent. of people who are owner-occupiers. Former tenants are delighted that they have had the opportunity to buy their council houses. Opposition Members should talk to the 8·5 million small shareholders and savers, not to people such as Mr. Sainsbury or Mr. Robert Maxwell. The small shareholders want a stake. It is all very well for Opposition Members to say that, with nationalisation, we all had a stake and were all shareholders. I should like to know what dividends I have ever received from, for example, British Rail, in which I am supposed to be a shareholder. I have not received any dividends from that but if I invest in British Telecom I receive dividends from that investment.

We should continually remind people that overseas assets are a great boon to our economy and produce between £4 billion and £5 billion worth of invisibles for our balance of payments. They have increased from about £20 billion to £110 billion today. I am sure that economic pundits will agree that, in time, with the great build-up of overseas assets as oil revenue reduces, invisible earnings from our overseas assets will increase.

I welcome the mention of personal pensions. However, I issue a warning about occupational pension schemes. They should be increased. Nothing is better, when a person retires, than that he or she should have some income apart from the state retirement pension, because that gives them far more independence. However, if the Labour party were to form an Administration, they would force the institutions—the pension funds—to repatriate overseas assets and capital and divert that capital into what is known as a national investment bank. We have all seen the investment policies of previous Labour Governments. For example, there was not much money left after their investment in De Lorean. The same was true of the groundnut scheme and there was absolute, complete and utter disaster over Gambian eggs. If pension funds are forced to invest money in non-profitable ventures, through the national investment bank, their declining actuarial value will jeopardise the pensions of today's occupational pensioners. I remind the House that between 11 million and 12 million people have occupational pensions. If the Labour party had its way and upset actuarial valuations because of bad investment, those 11 million to 12 million people might not receive the pension that they were expecting.

I welcome the fact that another boost has been given to the age allowance in personal taxation. I also welcome the blindness allowance and the increase in the thresholds. I remind the House that they have increased by about 22 per cent. in real terms since 1979. However, I advise my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary that the threshold is far too low. Even after the Budget a married man will start to pay tax at 27p in the pound as soon as he has earned £73 in a week. That is far too low. We should increase that threshold as soon as possible because the national average wage is now £195 a week. The target should be aimed so that a person starts to pay tax only after earning at least half of the national average wage.

As has been mentioned by some of my hon. Friends, the higher rates of tax are far too high. I welcome the fact that the top rate was reduced from 75p to 60p in the pound. However, at one time one paid 33p in the pound at the tax threshold. In the next tranche, when one's income had increased, the uplift was 40p. Then it was 45p, 50p and so on. The difference between 33p and 40p was a seven point jump. Now that tax is down to 27p in the pound, the jump from 27p to 40p is too steep and we must even it out. We cannot do so in this Budget, but in the lifetime of the next Parliament when the Conservatives will again introduce four or five Budgets our target should be for a rate of tax of 15p in the pound for those on half the average wage—£100—20p in the pound for those on the average wage—£200—and then increase the tax in tranches of five points each. That would provide a much more progressive payment for taxpayers.

I would not have a top rate of income tax higher than 50p in the pound in the long term. The United States of America acts as a magnet because of its salaries and research and development facilities, especially in the universities that liaise closely with private enterprise, which are particularly attractive to academics and scientists. In addition, the United States has a top rate of tax of 28p in the pound, so if we maintain our top rate at this high level there will be a tremendous brain drain.

I welcome the Chancellor's announcement of one VAT annual return for businesses with a turnover below £250,000. A small business is invariably a one-man business, probably with a wife or son helping. The first concern is to build up the business and the administrative burden of VAT is intolerable.

I agree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins) and my hon. Friend the Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) that we should reconsider the question of capital gains tax on life insurance funds. If capital gains tax is paid on life insurance funds, there will be an element of retrospective taxation, because at present many life insurance funds have an in-built capital gain on which they do not pay tax. If CGT must be paid, presumably it will also cover past gains.

A Labour Government would reimpose the 2p reduction in income tax, but I do not suppose that they would touch the age or blindness allowances. I remind Labour Members that the low paid will benefit from the reduction of 2p in income tax on average by about £3 a week. Some pensioners pay tax, so why should they not have the 2p reduction? The Budget has given mortgage payers a 2p reduction in income tax, amounting to about £3 a week, and through reduced interest rates they could save a total of £4 or £5 a week.

I do not know whether this is constitutionally right, but if the Opposition will not co-operate in passing these tax changes, may I suggest to my hon. Friend the Minister that we have two Finance Bills? One would deal with the 2p reduction in income tax and the age and blindness allowances, and the other with everything else. In that way we could quickly pass the former, so that there would be no inhibition on the date of the general election, which I hope will be in September. Something should be done to prevent the chaos that could be caused if the Opposition do not co-operate, so that after 5 April 1987 those receiving dividends know how much tax they must pay.

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg (Hampstead and Highgate): Does my hon. Friend agree that it may be helpful during the election campaign if teachers, miners and doctors realise that the Labour party would increase their tax?

Sir William Clark: I am sure that my hon. Friend is right. I am trying to find a way to avoid the chaos that could occur from 6 April if it is unclear whether tax should be paid at 27p or 29p in the pound.

I know that Labour Members are frustrated because the story is so good. It is true and fair to say that the economy has improved, is improving and is on a firm foundation. If this is thought to be a Budget of bribes, each of our Budgets has involved bribery because in each we have reduced taxation. Direct taxation has been reduced since 1979. It is clear from the reports from the Confederation of British Industry, the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, the Institute of Directors and the National Institute of Economic and Social Research that there is confidence. Even the NIESR, which is not normally optimistic, agrees with that. The trade union movement has been made more responsible and we have made massive strides towards prosperity.

All I say to my right hon. and hon. Friends on the Front Bench is, "For goodness sake, don't let anyone talk us out of continuing in the same way. The one reason why we have been successful is that we have had the determination not to be sidetracked to immediate panaceas." We have followed our strategy of keeping inflation down. I emphasise to the hon. Member for Walton that the best step any Government can take for the low paid is to keep inflation to a minimum. If inflation runs riot, it does not matter what one's savings are because they will be dissipated. The Government have controlled inflation and they must continue to do so.

6.26 pm

Mr. A. E. P. Duffy (Sheffield, Attercliffe): The hon. Member for Croydon, South (Sir W. Clark) defends the Government's economic record since 1979 and justifies the Budget on the grounds that the Government's policies are now coming to fruition. He appeals to his Front Bench not to be sidetracked and to continue on this particular road. However, he cannot deny that the great black spot in their economic record is their failure to get to grips with high unemployment—not perhaps in his constituency or part of England, but certainly in the north. That failure has accentuated the large regional inequalities and the disparities in income and opportunity. A Budget motivated by economic and social justice rather than by maximum voter appeal would attack the problem of long-term unemployment with the vigour previously reserved for tackling the problem of inflation.

During the past six months of falling unemployment figures the proportion of people in work appears to have altered little. Perhaps the greatest danger now facing us is that people will say, "Thank God, unemployment is now falling. We can forget about that problem." The recent unemployment figures have revealed how wide the gap has become between prosperous and disadvantaged regions. Between June 1979 and June 1986 the north saw a decline in total employment of nearly 14 per cent. while the south saw a decline of only 1 per cent. In the same period Yorkshire and Humberside suffered twice the national loss of jobs in manufacturing—a fall of 21 per cent. as opposed to 10 per cent.—and a much higher loss rate in energy production—a fall of 31 per cent. as opposed to only 24 per cent.

Yorkshire and Humberside together with other northern regions have been falling behind in job creation and predictions of future national industrial trends by independent organisations suggest that that is likely to continue. In 1984-85, of eleven United Kingdom regions, Yorkshire and Humberside had the third lowest average weekly incomes. The latest figures on wage differentials show that the gap there is still widening and in some respects it is now as high as £60 a week. The widening gap in house prices between Yorkshire and Humberside and the south-east reflect the relative prosperity of the two regions.

Stansted, the M11 and M25, the Channel tunnel and the increasing concentration of growth activities such as information technology in the south will widen the gap in future. This growing divide is reflected in northern cities. In Sheffield, the gap between the haves and have-nots has widened during the 1980s. More schoolchildren now receive free school meals, up from 17 per cent. in 1980-81 to 37 per cent. in 1985-86. The number of supplementary benefit claimants has nearly doubled since 1979. I know that the hon. Member for Croydon, South is kind and compassionate and I have a high regard for him. I wonder how he can reconcile what is happening in a northern city such as Sheffield, which is not untypical in the north, with the picture that he presented to the House and to which he enjoined his hon. Friends on the Front Bench to cling.

Employment is the key. Nothing brings about such a sharp drop in income as losing one's job, or retirement. That is borne out by income surveys. Unemployment in Sheffield has gone up to nearly four times what it was in 1979 and unemployed people now make up the biggest group claiming supplementary benefit. With the greatest good will, I say to the hon. Member for Croydon, South that the biggest paymaster in Sheffield is the DHSS. It supplies the income for 50,000 people in Sheffield, most of whom were wage earners not many years ago.

[Mr. A. E. P. Duffy]

The key question about this Budget must be whether it is a Budget for jobs. A new poll has reported that 60 per cent. of people would be willing not only to forgo tax cuts, but even to pay more if it meant that more jobs would be created. All hon. Members were aware of that a week ago and it is interesting to note how that view has been reinforced by further polls since the Budget that were reported in the weekend press. There was no comfort for the Chancellor in the weekend press. The Budget is not going over as well as the Chancellor and, presumably, the Prime Minister expected. It may not win the election for the Conservatives. There was no comfort for the Government in the opinion polls published this weekend. There may be some for my hon. Friends but none at all for the Government. The best rating for the Government of 39 per cent. support will not give them a majority, but will result in a hung Parliament.

The Budget does nothing for the poor, the homeless, the old or the sick. Most of all, it will do nothing to create jobs. There is no cut in national insurance charges to reduce the cost of employment, no rationalisation in the scale of employee's contributions to reduce one more poverty trap and no increase in family allowances. I repeat that the Budget is no comfort to the Prime Minister who will not be encouraged to go to the polls on the basis of this Budget. Presumably, that was in the mind of the hon. Member for Croydon, South who in his speech asked for an election not in June but in September. A nation now divided will be more divided. The rich will get richer and the poor will be lucky if they only stay as poor as they are.

The Chancellor insists that the indirect route is the best approach to solve Britain's chronic social problems. I understand that view very well. He and the Prime Minister share an unshakeable belief that only an efficient, profitable and expanding economy can put Britain back to work. At one time, I think I was disposed to that view, but in recent years there has been much evidence to persuade many hon. Members to the contrary view. If the Chancellor's measures are intended to help create an environment in which the economy can expand, why is industry producing less and investing less now than it was in 1979? My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) asked that question in his opening speech.

Why has the Chancellor not responded positively to the anxieties about the long-term health of Britain stemming from the lack of research and development and innovation in private industry expressed by The Times, the Confederation of British Industry and the electronics industry as well as by the hon. Member for Honiton (Sir. P. Emery)? The British Institute of Management is also critical of the Chancellor's failure to encourage the technology sector as well as of the lack of moves to step up public spending in infrastructure development.

On grounds of economic management, quite apart from social justice, there is no case whatever for a reduction now in income tax. First, most people in employment do not need a boost in their living standards. They are all doing very nicely. According to calculations by the Central Statistical Office, those in work need an increase of only 2·4 per cent. to compensate for inflation and tax changes. Secondly, a tax cut now will merely accelerate a consumer spending boom. Consumer spending rose by 5 per cent. last year in real terms—or at about twice the rate of growth of the whole economy. Retail sales are running 7 per cent. ahead of last year, while manufacturing production is only 2 per cent. higher than a year ago. Most of the increase in sales has been met from imports, hence the balance of payments deficit, notwithstanding the oil revenues.

As my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) warned the House on Wednesday, the dangers of an unbridled spending boom are first, higher inflation; secondly, a further deterioration in the balance of payments as foreign goods are sucked in; and, thirdly, a fluctuating exchange rate when manufacturers are pleading with the Government for a stable one. Last year's big devaluation of the pound has left British goods 25 per cent. cheaper than those of our continental competitors. This competitive advantage means a real prospect of sustained industrial revival — if the Chancellor does not spoil it.

Furthermore, the revival of depressed areas in the north, such as south Yorkshire, is very much dependent upon a general upturn in the United Kingdom and overseas. There is a further onus on the Chancellor to provide for that general upturn. He warned the House that there are still serious imbalances in the economies of the United States, West Germany and Japan which could lead to further turbulence on the exchange markets. I am well aware, as he undoubtedly is, of the difficulties of a co-ordinated economic expansion. Nevertheless — and I concede this to the Government—if there is one country whose economy is perhaps well placed to foster such an economic initiative on behalf of international expansion, it is the United Kingdom.

Such a British initiative would benefit not only the depressed north, but would be a positive response to last month's appeal by the United States Treasury Secretary, Mr. James Baker, when he looked to the group of five —but was obviously looking principally to the member nations of the European Community—for such a co-ordinated economic expansion.

In the ealy 1980s the United States spent its way out of unemployment in the traditional way without an increase in inflation because it managed to combine expansionary policies with a strong exchange rate. Any European country expanding alone would find it difficult to follow that act, but it demonstrates that a modern industrial economy can expand out of unemployment without unleashing a wave of inflation, provided the exchange rate does not fall. For the members of the European Community, trading so closely with each other, the most effective way to do this—if the political problems could be overcome — would be to expand together. The additional imports which would be sucked into any one country as growth picked up would be matched by exports to its trading partners with little change in the pattern of exchange rates.

How far did the Chancellor pursue, at the recent meeting of the group of seven, this pressing need for a co-ordinated economic expansion? He had been urged to do so the month before by the United States Treasury.

There is a danger, as the Chancellor warned last week, that the world economy will move back into recession later this year. He and the Prime Minister will have a further opportunity to foster co-ordinated international economic expansion on the 8, 9 and 10 June at the Venice summit of the seven leading industrialised countries. On the other hand, at that time we all may be caught up in a general election, in which case that will conclusively demonstrate what the Budget has been about.

6.40 pm

Mr. Kenneth Warren (Hastings and Rye): In the Red Book my right hon. Friend the Chancellor says that he aims to maintain a vigorous and enterprising economy. Since 1979 the Government have reduced inflation, the public sector borrowing requirement and taxation. That is exactly what is required for us to build a base on which industry can expand. I declare an interest as an engineer and would like to concentrate on the needs of the future. We can rebuild the industrial enterprise of this country and conquer some of the problems about which the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Duffy) has just spoken so eloquently in terms of his own city of Sheffield.

I do not believe that we can ever get the service sectors of our economy to compensate for the loss of industrial jobs. I am not at all happy at the way deindustrialisation has been taking place, not just in recent years but certainly over the last 50 years. In 1978 Sir Alec Cairncross gave four good indicators, which are symptoms of which we are aware nowadays. He said:

"You can recognise deindustrialisation by a decline in employment both in absolute and relative terms in the industrial sector of the economy. Secondly, there is a decline in the share of national output contributed by the industrial sector of the economy. Thirdly, a decline in one's share of the world industrial output and, lastly, a failure due to poor export performance to finance a full employment level of imports."

Looking at those four points, and having done some research on the problem, I think that we have suffered from some or all of those symptoms over the last 50 years. Deindustrialisation is a dangerous disease which is now to be contrasted, I am happy to say, with a considerable wave of industrial enthusiasm that I have come across when travelling the country recently.

Although the Government at last have room for financial manoeuvre, for about the first time since the second world war, I am concerned that we should not use that manoeuvre without looking at ways in which we can make substantial progress. The Government are determined not to dominate industries, but are rightly determined to help industry where they can. There are three sectors where the Government have a task — in skills for jobs which are available, training for jobs which are available and matching people's keenness for employment with the tasks that have to be done. There is a need for a Government industrial strategy that recognises constraints on industrial progress and recognises the duties that the Government must fulfil to train people for jobs in a timely fashion and at the rate at which they are required.

There is an enormous skill shortage in this country. The Manpower Services Commission is doing a useful job in retraining, but I wonder whether the Government understand the scale of the problem in international terms and the very high levels of skills that are required to remain competitive. A couple of weeks ago I was talking to a major motor components manufacturer in the midlands. He said:

"I could open the doors to 300 qualified engineers tomorrow if I could only get them. If I got those 300 qualified engineers I could recruit 300 semi-skilled workers and after that probably another 300 unskilled workers."

The key to re-employment, whether it be in Sheffield or the midlands, is getting the lead workers — the qualified scientists and engineers — out of colleges and through factory gates at a faster rate than has been attempted by the Government.

In my constituency there is a company which is working on a defence contract which is so short of engineers that it has had to subcontract the work to the United States. Another company in my constituency cannot find any engineers of the kind that it needs coming out of any college or university in the south-east and it has now had to recruit the first of several people which it expects to have to recruit from the far east. Unless we can meet the growing high skill shortages, which are easily and quickly identified, the process of deindustrialisation will go on. It has been known for several years that there are at least 30,000 vacancies for qualified scientists and engineers in the computer industry. Let us compare the numbers of engineers in industry here with those in Japan, West Germany and the United States. Of course, we have a smaller population than Japan or the United States so it is not surprising that we have fewer engineers. However, West Germany, where the population is equivalent to our own, somehow manages to pay its workers twice as much as we do and to produce 30 per cent. more engineers than us. In Japan there are three times as many engineers as there are in this country and in the United States there are seven times as many.

It is not the number alone that matters. The question is how they are interleaved into the industrial economy and how they are utilised. Otherwise the Swiss and the Swedes, who have small populations, would never have been able to survive in world industrial markets. If we look at our major competitors, with whom we must compete to survive—West Germany, Japan and the United States—and the way in which they deploy their resources in the training of engineers, we see a very worrying picture. In this country, for every 10,000 people on the industrial labour force there are 36 qualified engineers. In West Germany there are 48 qualified engineers, in Japan there are 58 and in the United States there are 62. My statistics come from a report which was produced late last year by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils supported by the science policy unit of Sussex university, on whose court I have the honour to serve.

That ratio shows that we do not have a high enough mix of qualified engineers in our industrial society to be able to compete in a way that the investment in education, which is being put forward in the Budget, should deliver to our community. United Kingdom statistics, unfortunately—I hope that the Treasury and Department of Trade and Industry Ministers will pick this point up—are dreadfully slow to be published. The figures that I am quoting are the latest available and they are from 1981. Statistics from West Germany are available from 1982; Japan and the United States seem to be able to produce their statistics when they are only three years out of date. Even that may be a long time out of date, but one has to work on the information which is available. I ask the Treasury and the Department of Trade and Industry to see what they can do to speed up data which are produced only every three years, if at all.

My second point is about the effect of the shortage of engineers on the competitiveness of pricing of our goods for domestic supply and export. The Financial Statement and Budget Report 1987-88—the Red Book—on which our debate is based, shows some substantial improvements in chart 3.9

[Mr. Kenneth Warren]

"Unit labour costs in manufacturing".

It looks as though 1987 will be a particularly good year. However, the backlog from 1979 is extremely worrying and exemplifies the problem of the shortage of engineers in our industrial society.

United Kingdom unit labour costs rose over the period from 1979 to date by 84 per cent. For our other principal competitors unit labour costs rose by only one third of that rate over the same period. That is an example of how the shortage of engineers affects our competitiveness and why deindustrialisation continues. Holding down pay rises is a last resort which I do not applaud because there is a good litmus test as to whether a company's management is on top of the job. It demonstrates how skill shortages are biting into a company.

I draw attention to a parallel problem, which is in desperate need of a solution and to which some hon. Members on both sides of the House have referred—the question of research. The House of Lords report on civil research and development published late last year commented:

"Morale is low in the scientific community."

Morale is low. It is at such a low level that the Government must recognise that the seedcorn is no longer being sown.

The Prime Minister said in February this year that Government spending on research and development, as a proportion of national output, was more than in the United States, West Germany and Japan. I do not want to clash with my right hon. Friend, particularly in her absence as that would be cowardly, but I wish that it were possible to know the exact military component of that research and development. It is clear from the House of Lords report that civil research and development has been declining over at least the last 20 years and is still in desperate trouble.

Only today in The Times there was a good example concerning the problem of the discovery of superconducting materials. Apparently research cannot be continued because the Science and Engineering Research Council has frozen funds for all new projects. That principle was discovered 70 years ago and many principles take a long time to reach the market place. For example, the ballpoint pen took 58 years to reach the market place in 1946. Detergent took 42 years and magnetic tape recording 39 years. We regard those products as commonplace today. Some other ideas have reached the market place more quickly. It might reassure the hon. Member for Attercliffe to know that stainless steel took only eight years from the principle being discovered to the time that it was on sale. Even better, synthetic penicillin took only a couple of years.

Science usually has to wait for marketing-led technology to come into public hands. Investment in civil research and development in the United Kingdom is not equivalent to our needs.

Last December John Fairclough, the Government's chief scientific adviser, attacked industrialists for failing to invest in research and development, but he said that he was "concerned" that the Government were likely to cut spending on non-military research. When he made that statement he was introducing the Cabinet Office review of Government-funded R and D. That gave us a little clue as to how much is spent on military research and development. The total spent is to go up from 51 per cent. to 54 per cent. over the next couple of years while the total spent on research is likely to come down by £4 billion.

Those fundamental figures are of desperate importance in relation to new projects on which the Government must make decisions and where decisions are long and dramatically overdue, such as on the funding of the A330/A340 Airbus projects and on whether we have a space programme. We cannot continue to put off decisions on high technology projects. The Government have a responsibility built into the structure of the agreements on Airbus. We cannot ignore the fact that we are gradually being manoeuvred out of our negotiating position on Airbus by the French and the Germans who fully understand that the market place which has been developing for the last decade has now arrived. Customers are queuing up before the design is off the drawing board.

If we cannot see what is happening to market opportunities on our doorstep, what chance or sense is there in people coming forward to qualify as engineers? The jobs may not be there when they get there. The jobs will have gone elsewhere. I am told by Airbus that planeloads of keen would-be participants in Airbus are arriving from Italy and Japan and other countries believing that the British are on the way out because we have spent so long trying to make up our minds about a blatantly obvious business opportunity. The Government cannot shirk their responsibility any longer.

With the Prime Minister's visit to Mr. Gorbachev imminent and the rumour that an announcement that a British astronaut will be propelled into space will be made in the departure communiqué, I hope that we achieve the understanding, which is believed to be abroad in Government, about the need to develop a space programme in line with that of our competitors. Mr. Fairclough said:

"The brunt of cuts will have to fall on the advancement of science and the improvement of technology."

I cannot believe that the Chancellor and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will agree that that should result from our Budget.

It is true that the wallies in the Science and Engineering Research Council are not the best managers in the world. They are in the process of spending £6 million, which they believe they can recover, to move the telescopes out of east Sussex to Cambridge. I should have thought that they had something more inventive to do with that money than play around with that far-out piece of science.

Maurice Shock, chairman of the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals, has clearly identified the problem in science in relation to Government. He says that although the science vote has gone up by 6·3 per cent., the whole lot will be wiped out by salary increases and as a result of the pound going down in value. That means that the sterling value involved in our collaboration with organisations such as CERN in Geneva has become more expensive.

The Science and Research Council has 1,500 research proposals with which to deal. About 500 could be expected to get through, but SERC finds that it can do nothing at all. That is not good enough. Will the Government please listen, not just to the hon. Member for Hastings and Rye, who is their friend, but to scientists who are desperately trying not to drain their brains away from our universities, colleges and industries?

There is a good lady at Imperial college, probably in a basement, where all the best research is done at university, —"with little natural light" is the usual formula—who is working on a system which she believes could produce power from sea water. I wish her success. I think that that is chemically possible. However, she cannot carry on her work, so she will have to go to the United States. That is not the kind of incentive that the Government wish to result from the Budget.

When Sir John Kingman, vice-chancellor of Bristol university, answered a question before the House of Lords Select Committee on civil research and development he said:

"The defence of this country will collapse, not necessarily for military reasons, but for economic and political reasons. If we spend too much of our research money on defence we will simply not be able to afford to maintain this country as a viable economic and political entity."

Perhaps he was over-stating the case but Sir John Kingman is no fool. He was sounding a strong warning and, given his scientific background, strength and ability, we have good cause to listen carefully.

The funds that the five research councils have received from the Government have been wiped out, according to the programme before us, by the 24 per cent. pay award for university lecturers. Presumably, that award is justified, otherwise my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science would not have agreed to it. However, for that reason, there is no money to continue research work. One must ask exactly what the people who will receive this extra pay intend to do. My fear is that, as a consequence of the current relationship between Government and science, the brain drain will speed up and nothing will stop that for a long time.

It is difficult to measure the value of science. Science does not set out to create wealth but wealth is certainly created by science. If one studies the way in which foreign companies log patents in the United States it appears, from the latest data available, that of the top 33 companies registering patents in the United States, 20 are American, eight are Japanese, four are West German and one is a partly-owned British company. It is difficult to measure the output of science in the world, but patents and citations are a good measure of scientific output. The registration of citations follows strictly in line with the pattern I have described with regard to patent applications in America.

The science budget is the seedcorn for the nation's future industrial prosperity. However, in the past 15 years, the real-term value of the science budget has declined dramatically. A written answer given on 12 November 1985 stated that in 1971-72 the science budget was £607 million. However, in 1986-87 that budget was £535 million, in 1987-88, £529 million and in 1988-89 it is expected to be £527 million. That is not the type of investment that the Government would wish to see in industry. It represents declining investment and the Government should see where their duty lies and do those things which only Government can do.

We appear to be able to find money to encourage foreign companies to come to this country to compete with our own companies that are already fighting for their survival. I experienced that all of 20 years ago and I had hoped that any Government would have changed their mind about that policy. Some 20 years ago, we entered into a tripartite agreement on the Tornado aircraft and that led to British companies being in competition with new companies from West Germany and Italy. It appears that we still have not learnt and there are Japanese companies in Scotland that are due to receive some £150,000 in Government grants per job created. When compared with the projects that have been frozen by the Science and Engineering Research Council, such nonsense starkly brings out the problem we face.

There is a great problem regarding the cost of money. In real terms, Japan and West Germany pay only half the amount that our companies must pay to find their investment. I do not understand. I am sure that elegant Treasury Ministers will be able to baffle me by spelling out the reasons why money must be so expensive in this country, but there appears to be no basic reason.

As I stated earlier, industrialists have said that they can sell at $1·50 but that they cannot sell at over $1·60. If the price of money is reduced, presumably the value of the pound will come down. That is not a very satisfactory solution. It is rather like putting an elastoplast on the problem, but it is certainly better than the present situation where industry is castigated for not putting in enough money, but must pay twice as much as competitors for the money that it does put in.

A subject that is dear to the heart of my hon. Friend the Member for Honiton (Sir P. Emery)—I share his feelings — is whether there are constructive ways to encourage industry to invest more of its own money in research and development. Surely there must be incentives that the Treasury can devise.

In conclusion, there are three key obstacles which confront the Government — skill shortage, research money shortage and the cost of money. They are obstacles that the Government must remove, but, first, they must understand that such obstacles exist. I believe that the science policy followed by Government should be focused more clearly—I believe that the Government can do that. Indeed, I do not believe that any other Government who can come before this House has the same chance of success as that presently in power, and who will continue to be in power after the next election.

7.5 pm

Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody (Crewe and Nantwich): When the Chancellor of the Exchequer got to his feet last week to introduce the Budget, I was not here. I had been bidden to the offices of the chairman of British Rail to meet him and the chairman of British Rail Engineering Ltd. That occasion proved far more indicative of the problems that face the country than the rather extraordinarily ambivalent Budget that was presented in the Chamber.

I had asked to go to see the chairmen of British Rail and of British Rail Engineering to put to them the position that exists in my constituency. We have just lost some 400 jobs in British Rail Engineering Ltd. because it has been decided that there should be a change in work patterns and that the repair work—the basic manufacturing work—of the Crewe BREL workshops should go elsewhere to regional depots.

When I arrived for that meeting, the chairmen, far from talking about the 400 redundancies, which had largely been dealt with by natural wastage, had another piece of information to give me. They said with some brutality, but with great directness, that another 600 jobs would be lost from the BREL workshops. Only those hon. Members who have gone through the trauma of watching efficient, viable, manufacturing industries destroyed before their eyes will know what effect that has on a constituency where there has always been a high degree of expertise and a strong commitment to manufacturing.

Let me tell the House what that means. It means that, in my constituency, there has been a continuing tradition of apprenticeships, which involve the training in the engineering industry, which the hon. Member for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Warren) discussed. A number of apprentices are taken in every year and go through a highly skilled and useful training programme. On completion of the programme the apprentices sometimes go to work in other factories in the constituency, but mostly they go into the business of constructing new or repairing existing locomotive and rolling stock. Are those skills no longer needed? In August, we shall be confronted with the situation that has not existed in my constituency since I was elected, but I am told existed in the 1920s, when young apprentices, when they come to the end of their time, will be told that there is no work for them. If the union cannot persuade large numbers of older workers to go, not only will no apprentices be taken on this year, but there will be no way of absorbing those people still going through their training. That is the reality of Britain under a Conservative Government.

The Government do not seem to understand that it is the economics of the madhouse to allow a railway system, which is a subsidised railway system, to run down its manufacturing units. These units have a high level of expertise and a great deal of skill. This action will force the British Railways Board to put work out to tender, not just in this country, but anywhere in the world. Those tenders will be for the very rolling stock that can be built by British Rail Engineering. Indeed, those tenders will be based on the detailed work carried out by BREL.

We have here the ultimate in cynicism. The Government believe that it is more important to hold to the political idea that we must force a degree of privatisation on to the run-down railway system than to consider ways of getting the best value for money. Swindon and Shildon have shut, and the men at Horwich have been moved around. In large part, the Horwich men have been absorbed in my constituency. Many of us are aware of the cost of these closures and moves to the men and their families. We are aware also of the expertise that they bring to their jobs. How can we expect a viable manufacturing industry to operate when we have kicked the guts out of the people who do the work and they no longer believe that they are needed, that they will still have a job in a year's time, or that they will still be in employment when their sons complete their apprenticeships?

In my constituency there was an agreement—it was one that the work force went along with—that there would be 400 redundancies over three years. That was the original position. Suddenly, the three years became six months, and now there are to be about 1,000 redundancies instead of 400. Where in the Budget is there anything for these men? Where in this anodyne mixture of tiny bribes and little gestures are there answers to their problems? Where are the answers to the problems that I shall face in my constituency if the one core manufacturing industry is allowed to run down and to die?

Why is this happening? Is the work force incompetent? Of course it is not. Is it capable of competing? Of course it is, if it is given a fair chance. It will be unable to compete, however, if every advantage is given to its competitors and the political view prevails that British Rail Engineering Ltd. should be run down. Unfortunately, the management, at chairmen level, will follow that view. The result is that the men know that their jobs are not safe.

On the Friday following the conversation that I had had with both chairmen, the chairman of British Rail Engineering Ltd. resigned. I understand, Mr. Deputy Speaker—perhaps you will believe this—that I can be quite sharp on occasion, but even I do not take sole credit for persuading a man between Tuesday and Friday to change his view to such an extent that he decides suddenly to depart, taking with him his deputy. British Rail Engineering Ltd. says that this happened as a result of an agreement. It is the sort of agreement that was faced by one of the workers in my constituency. He talked about redundancy on the Thursday because he had multiple sclerosis, and he was told on Friday, "Collect your goods and be out of this factory by teatime." That is the sort of agreement that is being offered to the work force in my constituency, and there is nothing that can be done about it.

There is no clear sign that the Government understand what manufacturing industry is about. Unfortunately, there is a clear political plan that follows the Serpell report. We were told when the report was produced that there could be no likelihood of a Conservative Government supporting it, but how is it that what happened to the royal ordnance factories is now being repeated at British Rail Engineering Ltd?

First, the work force is run down. At the same time, large sums of taxpayers' money are spent on renewing useful assets and high-quality machinery. Before that process is completed there is direct privatisation, either by coming to an agreement of the sort that was reached with the royal ordnance factories or, even worse, with the sort of agreement that was reached with Vickers. Vickers had only one competitor in the creation of tanks and when the status of the ROFs was changed it was made darned sure that Vickers took control of the only commercial alternative. The position is the same with British Rail. Someone from Vickers has appeared from the sidelines to become a non-executive director. I do not have the advantages of many Conservative Members. For example, I do not know intimately members of the most important commercial organisations at managing director level. That is a deprivation that I shall manage to live with without too much difficulty. It may be that the gentleman from Vickers who has become a non-executive director has a great many skills, but it is certain that he has a strong commitment to a commercial policy that states, in effect, that it is fundamentally wrong to have a unit such as British Rail Engineering Ltd. that is capable of operating within the state sector. That is not because it is incompetent or because there is a lack of investment. It is not because it cannot compete. The reason is that the Prime Minister has a strong, bigoted and unequivocal hatred of a state transport system.

Conservative Members who come from points in the south are not concerned. Why should they be? Indeed, they think that it is quite amusing to talk about those who are coming south from Liverpool and Crewe, for example, looking for employment, perhaps finding it and then travelling backwards and forwards every weekend. Conservative Members do not think that these men are especially important. We know, however, of the cost in terms of social deprivation, and it is one that will be paid in generations to come. There will be children who do not have united families and young people who do not have training.

In the centre of my constituency there are young men and women who have not worked for four years. They have not worked since leaving school and they have no hope of receiving proper training. Of course, they can participate in the odd YTS scheme here and there and provide cheap labour by occasional spells of shelf filling. Let it be understood that they have had no training and that they will have no opportunity for training. Many of them know that they will never obtain a proper job. These young people have parents who are demoralised, destabilised and frightened. They are deeply angered also.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer may think that he has prepared a Budget that will be extraordinarily popular with those whom he wants to vote Conservative, but in effect he has wiped out a section of the population. This certainly applies to those who have been involved until recently in manufacturing industry. It is something that will come back to haunt the House for many generations to come.

I shall not stand by and see the workshops close in my constituency. I shall not stand by and see men and women put out on to the stones, when they are needed. I shall be here to remind the Chancellor of the Exchequer and other Conservative Ministers, day after day if necessary, that Britain cannot afford the criminal waste of destroying manufacturing industries that are fundamental to the nation. Until the Government learn that, there is no hope of anything other than a divided and destabilised society. That is a cost that none of us should be prepared to pay.

7.17 pm

Mr. Richard Ottaway (Nottingham, North): I shall not comment on the remarks of the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody), other than to say that at the royal ordnance factory at Nottingham—the hon. Lady referred to royal ordnance factories generally—the work force has remained unchanged since privatisation and there is now a much enhanced order book. We are not suffering from social deprivation in the Nottingham ordnance factory.

When my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer can come to the Dispatch Box and confirm that the increase in expenditure that was announced in the autumn statement still stands, announce a cut in income tax and reduce the public sector borrowing requirement to 1 per cent. of gross domestic product, resulting in a cut in the interest rate and a reduction in the mortgage rate, coinciding with a reduction in the jobless by 71,000, I believe that he deserves our congratulations. As someone who represents a centre of the tobacco industry, he receives my thanks. The Players factory is at Nottingham and many of my constituents work in it. On many occasions we have said to my right hon. Friend that he must not kill the goose that lays the golden egg. This year we have been rewarded by his decision not to increase the excise duty.

The tobacco industry has been in difficulty. It has suffered a number of takeovers in recent years and it has undergone a massive reorganisation. It asked the Treasury for at least one year's relief, and I am pleased to say that it has been given that. That is something for which we are all grateful.

I should like to place a marker for the future. I am not impressed by the health argument that has been advanced during the debate, but I know that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has been influenced in the past by it. Smoking is dangerous to health, and I believe that it is the Government's role to persuade smokers to kick the habit, not to dictate by imposing taxation and forcing people to stop smoking. I cannot subscribe to the nanny state, which I consider to be unacceptable. If the Treasury feels that it must try to prevent the spread of smoking by means of taxation, I ask it to try to quantify the cost to the nation of smoking and of looking for cures for smoking. When that is done, I ask for the result to be included as a specific item in the Budget, rather than impose a general increase in taxation in years to come.

My only real concern about the Budget is the absence of any mention of the ailing shipping industry. It is inevitable that the Government will have to face the decline in the country's fleet, which is now in a perilous state. There are daily reports of further flagging-out from the British flag to flags of convenience. In 1985, the General Council of British Shipping said that by 1995 the number of ships flying the Red Duster would be between 300 and 400. That was a wildly optimistic forecast. It is now predicted that by 1995 only 100 ships will be flying the Red Ensign.

The Government have a duty to ensure that the number of ships is adequate to supply the nation's needs. There is no shortage of ships in the world, and I suppose that the colour of the flag that a ship flies as it comes up Southampton Water does not make much difference as long as the goods are getting into the country. It is the Government's duty, however, to ensue that those ships keep on coming.

The second role of the Government is to ensure that a strategic reserve is maintained. This is not in itself a justification for intervening in a shipping area but, with a fleet of just 100 forecast by the year 1995, it should not be lost on the Government.

The lack of any policy on shipping is now hitting the shipping service sector. London is the centre of world shipping and has produced a good income for the nation over the years, but it is now in decline. There is a substantial shipping business in the City, with the resolution of disputes at the forefront. A leading arbitrator was saying the other day that he is now seriously underemployed. On the Baltic exchange, there is nothing but doom and gloom. The brokers are pessimistic. This sector depends on the shipping industry, and it needs a shot in the arm.

I welcome the changes to the business expansion scheme announced by my right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary the other day. However, as the Government know, what we need to resolve the nation's shipping problems is a fiscal remedy. The revenues from today's shipping are minimal. All the shipowners are now moving to offshore havens where they make no contribution to the British Treasury—"If you cannot beat them, join them." We should be positive about our two offshore havens, the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands, and encourage shipping to go there rather than to Panama or Liberia. We should liaise closely with the shipping industries, and consider reliefs for managing companies. After all, what have they to lose if no income is coming into the Treasury? They have everything to gain from the restoration of the country as a leading maritime nation, with the added benefit to industry.

To me, the most important parts of the Budget were the welcome announcements about small businesses. There are many small businesses in Nottingham. They are major job creators, and they are at the heart of the engine room of the nation's recovery. However, they are not without their problems. When a survey of east midlands firms asked which four factors most limited business prospects, 56 per cent. cited interest rates, while 46 per cent. blamed cash-flow problems. This is a good Budget for the business men who expressed those concerns. Interest rates have dropped in its wake, and we know that small businesses have welcomed that.

Hon. Members may recall reading a few weeks ago in the newspapers that the Nottinghamshire chairman of the National Federation of Self Employed and Small Businesses, Mr. Jim Conduit, had urged his members not to support the Conservative party in the next election because it had done nothing for them. However, I am pleased to report that Mr. Conduit has now changed his tune. After the Budget, he said:

"It will all make a big difference. Bank rates are particularly important to small business men. This Budget is a step in the right direction."

So we now have the blessing of even Mr. Conduit.

The reduction in corporation tax for small businesses is also very welcome.

Cash flow was the second item that caused business men concern, and the Budget is particularly important for them. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor recognised that late payment of debts was a serious problem. He said in his Budget speech:

"Perhaps the biggest problem faced by the small business man today is the trade customer who is late in paying his bills: so late sometimes that VAT becomes due before the bill has been paid. I can do nothing about late payment; but I can, I hope, do something about the VAT problem."—[Official Report, 17 March 1987; Vol. 112, c. 821.]

My right hon. Friend went on to announce the important concession of the optional cash accounting for VAT for businesses with a turnover of up to £250,000, and this concession is very welcome, but my right hon. Friend could do something about debt, as his Department is well aware.

The problem of creditors being kept out of their money while the debtors have the use of it was recognised by the Law Commission as long ago as 1978. In its report No. 88, it came up with the following remedy:

"The introduction of Statutory Interest is appropriate and necessary."

Ten years later, however, the problem of late payment is growing. The complaints sound the same. I have received some letters from business men, one of whom said:

"We have never had a better year for turnover but we are still in danger of going broke."

Another said:

"If all our bills were paid we'd be millionaires, but we can't recover the sums due."

The excuses are moving with the times. One excuse that I have heard is, "We cannot get at the invoice until the end of the month; it is in the computer." In the old days, they could get it out of the filing cabinet in minutes.

In 1986 the CBI carried out an important survey, which found that late payment was common throughout industry. Of those asked, 57 per cent. said that most, or more than half, of their bills were paid late. The figure rose in a number of interesting industries. In the engineering industry it rose to 69 per cent.; in the construction industry to 64 per cent.; and, rather surprisingly, in the professional services to 64 per cent.

The City's leading debt underwriters, Trade Indemnity, said that the longest credit period that it had known was in the industrial and commercial services sector, which includes advertising agencies, computer services, contract cleaners, direct marketing, employment agencies, insurance brokers, security services and shopfitters. They all take a disgraceful average of 206 days' credit.

Mr. Hickmet: What about the delay by solicitors in paying counsel?

Mr. Ottaway: They fall into the professional services sector. They take up to 206 days to pay.

Unbelievably, no remedy has yet been put forward as suggested by the Law Commission. It may come as a surprise to hon. Members, but it is not possible to sue for the interest on a debt after the principal has been paid. That makes us the odd man out in Europe. The only way that a creditor can be sure of being compensated for being out of his money is by issuing a writ with the invoice, and that will hardly make the wheels of industry go round.

The Government have adopted a mixed attitude to the problem. Following the CBI guidelines in 1980, they launched a voluntary code in 1986 in a booklet entitled "Payment On Time". It is a rather woolly document and gives no recommended period for the payment of debt. The credit agency Dun and Bradstreet said that it had noticed no change in the time taken to pay debts since the publication of the booklet. That comes as no surprise, as we have had a voluntary code since time began.

Whereas the Department of Employment, which published the booklet "Payment On Time", did not receive much of a response, the Treasury has been far more positive. Last year it introduced penalties for late payment of VAT, and the response to a written question of mine shows quite dramatically that the receipts of VAT have gone up and the outstanding backlog of unpaid VAT has gone down.

The problem will be slightly alleviated by the welcome measure proposed in the Budget, but that measure would not be necessary if bills were paid on time. The answer is a right to interest on the late payment of debts as was recommended by the Law Commission. I am sure that that would result in a more rapid payment of bills.

In its survey the CBI asked firms whether, if they were automatically entitled by law to interest on any debt paid late, they thought their customers would pay more promptly. A staggering 85 per cent. said that they did. As a result, I introduced my Right to Interest Bill, whose main proviso was that interest on the late payment of a debt was deemed to be an express term of every contract. There has been considerable argument since then about whether that should be a statutory entitlement or a statutory discretion. My preference is for the statutory entitlement, because I believe that any discretion available to the courts is accompanied only by vast armies of lawyers trying to persuade the court how its discretion should be exercised.

The Government's position on this proposal is that they are open to persuasion. I am delighted to report to the Government that a consensus is emerging. My early-day motion 63, which is not by any means frivolous, and which calls for the introduction of legislation, is now supported by 176 hon. Members from all parties, including some of the hon. Members now present. Both alliance and Labour spokesmen have spoken in support of the proposal. I do not know whether it will be in their manifestos, but they have shown a distinct interest in the idea.

The excellent Forum of Private Business, which has about 20,000 members in the small business category, has conducted no fewer than five surveys on the topic, which have shown support varying between 70 per cent. and 84 per cent. in favour of a statutory entitlement. I now have the support also of the Engineering Industries Association, the Small Business Bureau and, I am afraid to say, the National Farmers Union, although I am not sure whether I want to pray that organisation in aid of my proposal. The CBI has come out in favour of the statutory discretion, and that is a welcome development. The Association of British Chambers of Commerce has a rather woolly, ambiguous approach to it all. It says that it supports future legislation so long as there is no change in the law. I suggest that the Government ignore that garbled advice.

Of all the major pressure groups in industry, the Institute of Directors alone stands opposed to the introduction of the statutory interest. That is primarily because it is a free market organisation. It believes that such a proposal is interventionist. It is not. It is regulation of the market place, which we are only too pleased to accept in the present climate. I believe that even at this late hour the Institute of Directors can be persuaded to change its mind.

The concern of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor is welcome. Speeding up the cash flows of small companies is important. I believe that the VAT measures announced by my right hon. Friend will do that and that my Bill will do so even more. The great advantage of my Bill is that it does not cost the Treasury a single penny. The important thing for the Government is to create the right conditions in which small businesses can operate. The Budget has done that, and I welcome it very much.

7.32 pm

Mr. Brian Sedgemore (Hackney, South and Shoreditch): The Chancellor's critics have been unfair to him. They have failed to realise his undoubted talents. In particular, the Chancellor has an outstanding ability to play word games in which he says the opposite of what he means. Most of us play those games at Christmas, but the Chancellor plays them at Budget time. When he tells us that the economy is undergoing some kind of economic miracle, he is really Humpty Dumpty telling us that the manufacturing base has been devastated by the Government. When he says that exports are improving, he is the March Hare who is telling us that there has been an import surge and that the impending balance of payments crisis is likely to be so disastrous that he could not give us the bribes that he had originally promised us. When he tells us that he believes in business integrity, he is really the Knave of Hearts who has created a free enterprise culture in which for too many people in the City of London the only principle is lack of a principle.

e have now had nine wasted Tory Budgets and they have combined to produce a free enterprise charter in which too many business men feel that it is better to make money than to make things. In those nine wasted Tory Budgets, successive Chancellors have trumpeted free enterprise. For the most part, it has been a disaster. For some, it has been death. This winter during the cold spell hundreds and possibly thousands of people died of hypothermia because they could not afford the heating, the food with enough calories and the clothing to stay alive. Every winter, according to doctors in Shoreditch, old people die before their time because they are thrust from the National Health Service and the community services cannot help. In those nine wasted Tory Budgets, breathing the spirit of free enterprise, the Government have left us with 100,000 families without a home, 4 million people without a job and, in a tragedy unparalleled in the Western world, one fifth of our population living on or below the poverty line. Nine million people have been thrown away like empty husks into the dustbin of free enterprise. In the future, historians will shake their heads and wonder how society became so barbaric that it could allow that to happen.

Parliamentarians have a responsibility to examine the moral, economic and intellectual basis of these Budgets and the Tory concept of freedom, which it defines in terms of free markets, consumerism and the ability to pay. The Chancellor justifies the death and destruction of these Budgets in terms of Friedmanism or monetarism, an ideological creed which curiously has existed entirely outside empirical evidence. When monetarism was monotheistic, the Chancellor and his family used to go every Sunday to St. Paul's in the City, and they worshipped the one true god — M3. Then, when monetarism became pantheistic, he and his family went along to St. Paul's in the City and worshipped M0, M1, M2, M3, PSL1, PSL2, DCE, broad money, narrow money, seasonally cyclically, psychically adjusted. In this Budget we have seen the slaughter of all the gods in the monetarist pantheon and the Chancellor has revealed himself to be a heathen who worships plastic—plastic Access, plastic Visa, plastic American Express. Plastic—the ultimate symbol of a throw-away society which inevitably and inexorably will eventually crush us all beneath the weight of our personal debt.

The other justification which the Chancellor gives us for his economic policies is that his tax policies will create incentives. They will make people work harder. If so, why has he increased the tax burden overall? If it is true that top people respond to tax cuts by working harder, why does not the Chancellor argue that working people will respond to wage rises by working harder? If it is true that this theory is based on the notion, as the economists tell us, that the substitution effect outweighs the income effect, is there no empirical evidence to support it? We do not have to look at the recent survey by Professor Brown. Ever since Adam Smith published "The Wealth of Nations" 211 years ago, economists in all countries have been searching for this evidence that the substitution effect outweighs the income effect. They cannot find it. I should have thought that, having got this bright bunch of academics together in 1776, 211 years on, when they can find no evidence to support their case, they might drop the research project.

[Mr. Brian Sedgemore]

But not a bit of it—they cannot find any evidence in this country, so little Matthew Parris who used to be a Conservative Member, went wheedling off to America last weekend. I saw him talking to some professor sitting beside a television set which had to have a computer to make him look intelligent. He was preaching the kind of guff and garbage which one hears in this country only when Chancellors have come here since 1979 to produce their Budgets. There is no foundation for the monetarist theory and no empirical evidence to support the incentives theory.

Given that the twin moral pillars of the Budget are greed and selfishness, I should have thought that the Chancellor might take the opportunity to give us measures to encourage financial rectitude—for example, to help minority shareholders stamp out fraud. That issue has been taken up recently by the Financial Times. The problems stem from the difficulties which minority shareholders had in a company called Film Finances Ltd. when they discovered alleged serious frauds and a prime facie breach of section 42 of the Companies Act 1981.

Hon. Members who have closely followed the Guinness scandal will realise that section 42 of the Companies Act 1981 refers to companies using their own money to buy their own shares illegally. One of the companies with shares in Film Finances Ltd. is Wren Trust Ltd., the wholly-owned subsidiary of Gresham Trust plc. As it happens, the chairman of Gresham Trust plc is Sir Jasper Hollom, who is also chairman of the takeover panel. When minority shareholders tried to bring a civil action for fraud, Sir Jasper, the chairman of the takeover panel, blocked it. In 1985, when professional advisers requested Sir Jasper to remove a secret cheque book in the possession of the finance director of Film Finances Ltd., Sir Jasper refused to do so. Sir Jasper said that he did not want an action for fraud to go ahead because he thought that considerations of profit and commerce were more important than considerations of the law.

I have the company minutes of Gresham Trust plc for 6 March 1986, Sir Jasper Hollom, chairman of the takeover panel, in the chair. Speaking of this case, the minutes state:

"the directors could only have regard to the effect of the present proceedings upon its investment (held by its wholly owned subsidiary Wren Trust Limited) in Film Finances Limited. If, for the reasons set out in the Affidavits, already sworn by Mr. Carr and Mr. Baldock, the Board considered that there were good commerical reasons why the proceedings were not in the best interest of Film Finances Limited, then it should resolve to support Film Finances Limited's application to dismiss the proceedings".

I am bound to say that I find that odd, coming from the chairman of the takeover panel. Surely the Government Front Bench will agree that the right course for the chairman of the takeover panel was, first, to allow the civil action to proceed and, secondly, to report each and every allegation of fraud and breaches of section 42 to the Department of Trade and Industry and to the fraud squad. Quite frankly, it is outrageous that one so eminent as the chairman of the takeover panel can put profit before the law.

On commercial grounds, I have no doubt that the directors of Guinness would have liked not to have had an inquiry because it would not suit them. The hon. Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) quite rightly complained that he had warned the takeover panel that things were going wrong in the Guinness affair. The hon. Member could not have known that there was nothing that Sir Jasper could do about it. At the very time that he was complaining about what was going on in Guinness—note the date of the minute to which I referred, which was exactly the time that the Guinness shenanigans were at their height—Sir Jasper was seeking to cover up an investigation into an almost identical crime in relation to his own companies.

If only the directors of Johnson Matthey Bankers could have said, "On commercial grounds, we do not want an inquiry," I am sure that they would not have had one. If only the directors of Minet Holdings could have said in relation to the PCW syndicate, "On commercial grounds, we do not want an inquiry," I am sure that they would not have had one. There is a lesson for the Government Front Bench. That is, having created the atmosphere in which the most eminent people in the City of London can no longer tell the difference between right and wrong, the Chancellor should, first, tonight telephone the Governor of the Bank of England to secure the immediate resignation of the chairman of the takeover panel. Secondly, when he comes to the House with his Finance Bill, he should say that he will introduce measures to allow minority shareholders to bring fraudsters to book.

I feel a bit of a fool over the matter. I have twice in the House defended the takeover panel. I have said, "There are some people in the City that one cannot trust, but one can trust the takeover panel." Now my hon. Friends say to me, "But it was you, Sedgemore, who told us that we could trust the people on the takeover panel." I am bound to say unequivocally that I apologise to every hon. Member. I trusted those people too much. In future, I shall let my natural cynicism outweigh the desires of my heart, which always see the best of other people, whether they are in the City of London or anywhere else.

The Budget is a graceless epitaph for the Chancellor and the Government. Like the Chancellor, it lacks moral, economic and intellectual integrity. For that reason, the decent, thinking people in the House will not support it tonight.

7.44pm

Mr. Alistair Burt (Bury, North): I congratulate the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on his maiden speech. I know that he cannot be in the Chamber all the time, but he will probably read my remarks tomorrow. It is a special pleasure for me to welcome an hon. Member who is actually younger than I am. We both had the pleasure, when elected, of being able to choose to come to the House or go on a Club 18-30 holiday. I also endorse the remarks about his predecessor, whose loss was deeply felt in the House. I wrote to my local paper that David Penhaligon gave politicians a good name. We would all covet that simple memorial.

The hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore) said precious little about the Budget. The only substitution effect that I have noticed recently is the rapid substitution of his own party by the alliance as the official Opposition of the country. I suspect that, as Labour Members ramble on, they will find that substitution occurring more often and in more places.

I congratulate the Chancellor on the Budget. The touchstone of success for the Budget in my constituency will be as it has been in previous years—its long-term impact on unemployment. I have made little secret of my concern that the Government's policy in the recent past did not appear to make the reduction in unemployment as passionate a cause as some others that they have taken up. I still consider that the Government are seen as underplaying unemployment, but clearly they are underplaying it much less than they did in the past.

In the past 10 years or so, the arguments on unemployment have changed, or at least they have changed in the real world, although not on Labour Benches. We have recognised that the present chronic unemployment is more likely to have been caused by long-term problems rather than short-term cyclical ones. We have accepted that there are no easy answers and have questioned the seemingly ready solution that Governments should somehow create more jobs. A mood of realism has settled on the issue, but I counsel colleagues that it is not a content mood. My constituents want things to improve. Often, they are angry and frustrated, for the pain of unemployment is barely lessened by an intellectual appreciation that its causes are deep and its cure is uncertain. The appreciation that the country's economic long-term health is so much more important to their own and their children's employment than short-term heart-on-the-sleeve measures has got home, and with it a lower regard for the easy and false options of Opposition parties.

It is in that context that Bury, North views the Budget. Unemployment in the constituency is now down from its high point of 4,798 to 4,171 last month, a rapid drop that was achieved in the past 17 months, which is most welcome. The constituency now has unemployment at about 9 per cent. A number of Budget measures seem certain to enable that trend to continue. The first measure relates to interest rates. That matter was gently glossed over by the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) when he dealt with Labour's borrowing and spending plans.

Prudent management of borrowing means that interest rates will fall, and the first effects have already been seen. There is a tone in the Government's handling of the economy to which interest rates are now appearing to respond, which will come as welcome news to the Manchester chamber of commerce and industry, which was quoted gleefully and rather selectively by the right hon. Member for Ashton-under-Lyne (Mr. Sheldon). In its most recent survey of 31 December 1986 it referred to:

"a more optimistic note showing distinct improvements in the figures for deliveries and orders in both home and export markets."

It went on to state:

"as 81 per cent. of respondents see lower interest rates as necessary to improve business prospects, it must remain a matter of conjecture whether the improvement will continue into 1987 without a fall in real interest rates."

Let us hope that the fall in interest rates, precipitated by the Budget, continues. It will be a gain for industry, for home owners and for the economy in general. I also add a plea for stable exchange rates through our early joining of the European monetary system.

Secondly, on inflation, it is a remarkable measure of how far we have come that so little space and attention is now given to inflation, with its crucial effect on industry, wages and fixed incomes — particularly those of the elderly. The same industrial survey of our region makes it clear how important inflation still is to local industry. The Government are entitled to credit for reducing inflation. The Opposition's cavalier disregard of the danger of inflation ought to be remembered by those whom they purport to champion, particularly by the old who were viciously affected by inflationary rises under the last Labour Government.

Thirdly, the release of small businesses from VAT is particularly welcome in a constituency such as mine. It is an important market and retail centre. Cash flow is the bane of so many lives. In an economy where encouragement is being given to the development of small businesses that are providing so many jobs, the Budget measures will help to improve their prospects further.

Fourthly, on income tax the Government must confront head on a seeming paradox. In 1979, the level of income tax and the desire for its reduction was a major electoral concern. Eight years later, the expectation of a reduction has meant that tax cuts are now greeted with almost a Gallic shrug. But there is no paradox. Other dangers now face the economy. People's attention has naturally shifted. Some two and a half years ago I counselled caution on this issue, believing that at a time of rising unemployment the suspicion was easily bred that one man's tax cut was achievable only at the expense of another man's job and that it was vital for a long-term, month-by-month and steady reduction in unemployment to occur to confirm the success of the Government's economic policy and to give it credibility. Slowly but surely, this argument has gained strength. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is now more entitled to refer to the advantages of a low tax economy, and we must press this home. The argument has been made easier by the obvious fall in unemployment and the Government's welcome acknowledgment that some public expenditure is very good—hence the welcome mood of the "Autumn Statement" of 1986.

I cannot impress on hon. Members too strongly the importance to our constituents of the balance and the combination between tax cuts and public expenditure—not the over concentration on one rather than the other. The Opposition parties are incredible to people, as they concentrate solely on expenditure, coyly refusing to make it clear who will pick up the bill. Nobody is fooled. The voters know who will pick up the bill. We had honest David Blunkett at last year's Labour party conference to thank for that.

The new balance that this Government have achieved and that they spelt out in the "Autumn Statement" and the Budget is to be welcomed. I see it as a necessary change in emphasis which my part of the country, blessed as it is with good and honest public servants in all their many vocations, will welcome. They will also welcome the concentration of attention on the lower end of tax allowances, though I ask my right hon. Friend to continue in his next Budget the policy of raising the tax threshold by more than inflation, thereby taking more of the lower paid out of tax. The 1·4 million fewer taxpayers since 1978-79 will welcome what has already been done, but I hope all hon. Members agree that that number should be added to.

Let me caution the official Opposition that their promise to add back to the tax bill of the lower paid what the Chancellor has already taken away is for those whose incomes have risen quite a different question from whether they may have wanted a reduction in their tax in the first place. What one does not have, one never misses. People want, quite naturally, the best of both worlds. They realise that it is only a sound economy—not a re-vamp of the IMF-ridden public expenditure-slashing old guard—that provides that chance.

A second touchstone of the success of this Budget is likely to be its ultimate impact on the north-south divide. Here — let us again be honest — is another seemingly intractable problem that has affected Governments of different persuasions since the first world war. All too often the arguments about the north and the south are oversimplified. It is not a simple problem. I hear with some sympathy the genuine cries of some Opposition Members. I know for the most part what inspires those cries, but increasingly those areas are represented by my hon. Friends whose sympathy is no less but whose realism is greater, which keeps them from the undesirable siren call of easy and false policy options.

This Budget will work for the north for the same reasons as it will work for the economy as a whole. However, I urge my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to devote more of his considerable energies to this problem in his next Budget. It is time to be imaginative and perhaps iconoclastic in dealing with it. I have not always been the first on my feet to praise my right hon. Friend in the past, but I bow to nobody in my appreciation of him as his own man, untrammelled by convention and determined to pursue his own way of dealing with problems. In dealing with the north-south divide that approach is needed.

A Budget looking at the north-south divide would not devote itself to an older and in some ways discredited view that public expenditure on projects is the answer. Instead it would look at whether the fiscal structure could be altered in some way to assist the growth of businesses and new enterprises in the north. If it is fair to ask for differential pay in different parts of the country, perhaps it is also fair to ask for differential tax rates in different parts of the country.

But let us be absolutely frank. Ultimately, the north-south issue will be resolved not by Governments but by pure common sense. One day, some bright spark will wake up down here, in this over-priced, over-rated and congested hell hole of the south of England and say, "Blow this for a game of soldiers; I'm off." People will realise, as the price of land and houses continues to rocket, as their own and their families' quality of life suffers from ridiculous commuting decisions, that there is a decent alternative. We should be emphasising the positive side of the north-south divide. The positive side does not rely solely on public expenditure; it relies also on private expenditure. They both have a part to play. What so depresses me about the arguments of Opposition Members about the north is their appalling lack of belief in their own people and in their own areas. They have hardly a good word to say for them; they moan on and on. How many people outside the House, hearing that image of the north, will be attracted to go there, set up in business and fight for the future? I believe that the north and those who live in the north can produce industry, enterprise and jobs. Magic handouts did not work in the past and they will not work in the future. A different approach is needed.

The north-south divide will be reversed. Folk will realise that away from all this high-cost everything in the south-east is a beautiful part of the country. It is situated in the north-west, with fabulous road, rail, air and sea connections. It is handily placed in the centre of the country, with good state and private schools on the edge of a major city, with all the necessary commercial infrastructure to support successful business initiatives. This place is called the metropolitan borough of Bury. People ought to wake up to what will happen in the south-east in the next 20 years and get out fast. If anybody wants further details about Bury, my telephone number in the House is 219 6320. I shall be glad to tell people about the metropolitan borough of Bury.

This Budget is a responsible continuation of certain policies and an acknowledgment of an equally responsible change in others. The Chancellor has done well. The underlying strength of the economy is sound and people's response to a realistic Budget will be equally realistic. They will vote for it and give us the opportunity to continue to improve. Above all, they will give us the responsibility to continue in future the vital job of reducing unemployment.

7.57 pm

Mr. Ian Wrigglesworth (Stockton, South): One would not have expected the hon. Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) to do other than praise the Budget. He welcomed the increased public expenditure upon which the Government embarked towards the end of last year and reminded the Government and the House that unemployment should be given a higher priority than so far his Government have given to it. I welcome that, as I welcome also some of the other points that he made.

As always in economic debates, Conservative Back Benchers tend to agree with quite a number of points that we on the alliance Benches make. In that connection, I wish to refer to the speech of the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Ottaway). I pay tribute to the work that he has done in seeking to provide an opportunity for businesses to charge interest on outstanding debts. This is long overdue. These debts are a great burden on small businesses. I welcome, as he did, the Government's VAT changes. They will help small businesses, particularly over their cash flow problems.

I have begun on a non-partisan note, which I am afraid I cannot continue. First, however, I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor). He made a very good maiden speech. It is a great pleasure to welcome him to our Benches. I knew him when he worked for David Penhaligon, and he will make a major contribution to our future debates. I support the warm tribute that my hon. Friend paid to David Penhaligon, with whom I also worked over the past year and whose death in a tragic accident resulted in a great loss to me, as well as to the whole House and the country.

The Budget has shown the clear contrast in the approach to economic policy of the two sides of the House. I want to examine the economy from our point of view, rather than in the glowing and misleading terms in which the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Ministers and their supporters have been describing it recently, as the general election approaches.

Inflation is still higher in this country than in any other member of the group of seven industrial nations, with the exception of Italy. Although one can draw good comparisons with our performance in the past — I acknowledge the progress that has been made—the fact remains that we are still lagging behind our partners in the group of seven industrial nations that constitute our major competitors on the world market.

My next point is one dear to the hearts of many Conservative Members, and hon. Members have referred to it during the debate. Our total tax burden is still higher than it was in 1979. If all that we have heard about the incentives that tax cuts foster is true, one wonders why that vast army of people—in addition to the brain drain, which has been taking place for different reasons—have been leaving the country recently.

In 1978-79, taxes represented about 33·8 per cent. of GDP. In 1979-80 they rose slightly to 35·1 per cent. So, having been at just over 35 per cent. in 1979, when the Conservatives came to office, taxes have gone up to 39 per cent., and just recently have fallen slightly to 38 per cent. Thus, the total tax take in this country is now 38 per cent. of GDP as against 35 per cent. when the Government came to office.

One need only look at the changes that the Government have made in taxation since 1979 to understand why that is the case. The Government like to forget the period 1979 to 1981, certainly as regards manufacturing industry. We remember the days of 8 per cent. VAT, which then went up to 15 per cent. even though the Government had promised that an increase—at least, of that size—would not take place after the election.

There are now 750,000 fewer manufacturing jobs in the economy as a whole. More jobs have been lost here than in the whole of the European Community during the corresponding period. Manufacturing output, unlike that of all the other developed countries, has actually contracted. Ministers do not like being reminded of it, but the House well knows that manufacturing output is still 4 per cent. below the peak level of 1979. It has taken the Government all those years to get back to manufacturing output at 4 per cent. below what it was when they came to office.

Unit labour costs, which have improved marginally—we have heard about this—are vital in comparing our position with that of other countries. They are still rising faster than those of our competitors. Earnings growth, which has stabilised at 7·5 per cent.—almost double the rate of inflaton for the past four years—is now creeping up again, once again undermining our competitive position. Average growth since 1979 is the worst in the group of seven industrial nations, except for France, and is below the European Community average of 1·4 per cent.

Recent figures have been adduced to blank out much of what happened in the early years when the Goverment's monetarist arguments were to the fore and when the change that has recently taken place in policy had not yet been given the chance to start working. The recent changes are the very ones that some of us have been advocating. The fruits of increased public expenditure are now becoming evident, and that is why we urge the Government to continue in that direction.

The fundamental divide between the two sides of the House, to which I referred earlier, concerns the way in which the £5·5 billion fiscal adjustment has been used. The Chancellor has been most unimaginative, considering the scale of the fiscal adjustments at his disposal. He could have done a great deal about tax reform, which would have been widely welcomed. However, he has devoted £3 billion to cutting borrowing. Why should he do that before a general election? We have been told that it is all because of "Lady Prudence", that he has been cautious.

I do not believe that that is the reason. The Chancellor did it for the same reason that led him not to put up the cost of booze and baccy, among other excise duties. He is worried that if he expanded the economy further we would have more major balance of payments problems and inflation would rise to 5, 6 or 7 per cent. That is what he fears would happen if he expanded the economy by using the whole fiscal adjustment instead of cutting back on borrowing.

The Chancellor also embarked on cutting income tax rates with the money that was available to him. He used £2·5 billion to reduce income tax by 2p in the pound.

Mr. Hickmet: What about interest rates?

Mr. Wrigglesworth: I shall come to interest rates in a moment.

Tax cuts are the area about which we most fundamentally disagree with the Government. As has been pointed out, there is no real evidence to show the incentives that tax cuts bring. We do not want tax to be any higher than it has to be. It is a question of priorities. One has only to read the recent speeches of Ministers—in particular those of the Chancellor—to realise that the Government have a wholly different set of priorities from us.

We believe that the highest priority is unemployment, which is hardly mentioned in the speeches of the Chancellor and other Ministers. Nor do they mention the poverty that is being suffered by a large percentage of the population. Those below the official margin of poverty, which is about 40 per cent. above the supplementary benefit level of income, now number 16·3 million—a rise of 42 per cent. since 1979. This amounts to about 31 per cent. of the population.

To echo Franklin Roosevelt, one third of the nation is ill-fed, ill-clothed and ill-housed. Vast areas of the north-west, about which the hon. Member for Bury, North spoke, Scotland, Wales and the north-east fall into that category. One need walk only a mile from the City of London, either east or south of the river, to see the poverty, ill health and bad housing that one third of the population are facing.

Our priority for the Budget, therefore, would have been to deal with those conditions and circumstances and with the unemployment that gives rise to them, rather than using the £2·5 billion fiscal adjustment to cut income tax by 2p.

The hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Hickmet) mentioned interest rates. It is remarkable for Conservative Members to criticise us for not being concerned about interest rates. Like a number of Conservative Members, the Confederation of British Industry, the Governor of the Bank of England and, we are told, the Foreign Secretary and the Chancellor, for a long time we have been advocating membership of the exchange rate mechanism — the European monetary system—to try to get interest rates down. We are deeply anxious about the fact that our interest rates are, on average, 4 per cent. above the level of interest rates in our European partners' economies. We believe—this is not a figure that we have conjured up, but one which others have concluded should be possible — that by joining the exchange rate mechanism and by giving a degree of stability to the exchange rate and to monetary policy, we could succeed, in time, in getting the level of interest rates down by an average of about 2 per cent. The Chancellor has not taken that option despite advice from the many quarters that wish to see that happen. Indeed, many Conservative Back Benchers want to see that. We believe that that is a vital part of economic policy upon which the Chancellor should have embarked in this Budget and, indeed, in previous Budgets.

We believe that jobs and poverty should be the top priority. The level of unemployment is unacceptable. It is much worse than the official figures suggest. There have been 19 changes in the calculations on the register of unemployment which have taken some 524,000 people off the register, which of course is a register of those who are entitled to unemployment benefit and not those who are seeking work. One can add to that about 485,000 people who are on special schemes and the youth training scheme. If one does that, one gets a figure of unemployment that is massively higher than that quoted by the Government.

I have just received a report from Newcastle university on the research done by that university for BBC North-East. As a result of that work, it estimates that the level of unemployment is 46 per cent. higher than official estimates and represents a total job gap of some 4·7 million between the number of jobs available and those who want them. I do not take the view that the jobs provided by the Manpower Services Commission and the places provided by the youth training scheme are, in the disparaging sense, make-do jobs with no value. Perhaps some of them are of little value, but many of them are of great value and we should not discount them. However, I mention those make-do jobs because it was the Prime Minister, before she was faced with 3 million-plus unemployed, who condemned artificial jobs. In April 1979 the Prime Minister said:

"Artificial jobs are like artificial flowers, they have no fruit, they bear no seed."

If that is the case, we would like to see the Prime Minister and her Chancellor do a great deal more to create real jobs in the economy. We believe that the proposals that we put forward before the Budget could achieve that.

Before dealing with our proposals I shall refer to important items in the Budget. First, unlike the Labour party, we welcome the introducion of tax relief for profit-related pay. We will want to examine this in Committee on the Finance Bill. We have for some time advocated moving towards more profit-related pay, we would like to see the scheme succeed and we will examine it in that light when it comes before the Standing Committee. I do not accept the disparaging remarks made by the hon. Member for Sheffield, Attercliffe (Mr. Duffy), who said that the scheme could not help to make workers identify with their enterprises and seek to achieve better results. That is the whole object of the exercise, as well as increasing the rewards available to workers at the same time.

Secondly, I hope that in Committee we will be able to discuss personal equity plans. I am afraid that all the evidence that we have seen bears out the fears that have been expressed from the alliance Benches ever since the scheme was introduced. We want to see a Loi Monory scheme, a front-loaded tax scheme, that will give a real incentive to people who have not invested in shares so that they will come into share ownership in a way that will greatly extend the number of shareholders in the country beyond what has yet been achieved by the Government.

If one looks at the Financial Times survey of institutions offering personal equity plans, one finds evidence to show that the number applying for them has dropped substantially since January when the scheme was first launched, and that those who did apply and those continuing to apply are paying for them in lump sums and are clearly existing shareholders, not new shareholders. The whole purpose of the exercise should be to try to bring people into shareholding for the first time. That is why we want to see a Loi Monory scheme rather than the personal equity scheme that the Government have introduced.

Thirdly, I should mention the regrettable introduction of the 25 per cent. increase in the duty on gaming machines. I am not against increasing that duty or the drink and tobacco duties in line with inflation. It is regrettable that that has not been done over a period of time and that this 25 per cent. increase has been slapped on to pay for the abolition of on-course betting duty. Those of us who live and work in constituencies with many working men's clubs will find that this will be an enormous burden upon them. I regret that the Government have taken this step. In the short time since the Budget I have had an opportunity to discuss this issue with clubs. Many of them are reeling under high levels of unemployment, loss of membership and considerable financial difficulty. The 25 per cent. increase in the duty will be a substantial burden upon them, particularly small clubs, and they could well do without it. To do this to abolish on-course betting duty is most regrettable and I hope that before the Bill goes through the House the Government will have had time to think again.

I should mention what we would have preferred to see in the Budget. On the subject of industry, I do not think that I need add much to the speech made by the hon. Member for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Warren). The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry was in the Chamber and he will have heard chapter and verse from one of his own Members what some of us, not least my right hon. Friends the Members for Glasgow, Hillhead (Mr. Jenkins) and for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen), have been saying about the need for increased civil research and development, the need for greater support for science in order to reverse the brain drain and the need for a smaller burden of interest rates upon industry.

We believe that we could get a substantial reduction in unemployment by targeting expenditure, not upon tax cuts, but upon providing a jobs guarantee over three years to the long-term unemployed, who are the most hard hit section of the people searching for jobs. We believe that it is essential that we do something about capital expenditure in the public sector. Expenditure needs to be increased in the education service, the Health Service and on infrastructure projects such as roads, railways, sewerage and so. We believe that the benefits of those who have been hardest hit by the recession should be substantially increased and that, plus a cut in employers' national insurance contributions, could all contribute, along with the jobs guarantee, towards getting the level of unemployment down by over 1 million in three years.

We have put forward our carefully costed proposals and the consequences of those proposals for borrowing, interest rates and the balance of payments for all to see. I believe that they would have been much more welcome to the country and certainly to those who have suffered most over recent times. The Secretary of State's speech at the beginning of this debate was exceedingly complacent about the problems facing us both socially and industrially. I hope that on reflection he will think that the party points that he made and the points scoring in which he indulged have little relevance to the lives of people in industry or those on the dole. I hope that he will think again and that the electorate in due course will see that the tactics adopted by the Government mask a great deal of misery beneath the surface and great divides within the nation. They represent policies that should be rejected in the general election, whenever that comes.

8.20 pm

Mr. John Townend (Bridlington): It was interesting that the hon. Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Wrigglesworth) did not repeat the costing of the alliance programme. He did not say how much would be met from borrowing or how much from taxation. He did not seem to be interested in anyone querying that point with him during the debate.

It is especially pleasurable for Conservative Back Benchers to be called to speak in the debate on the Budget statement this year. After a number of years of hard slog, it is clear to everyone that the Government's economic policies are now paying off. As my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, South (Sir W. Clark) and other hon. Members have said, it is remarkable, when we consider that oil revenues have dropped by about £6·5 billion, that the Chancellor has still been able to increase expenditure by nearly £5 billion including substantial extra expenditure on education and health. In my constituency within 12 months we shall see the completion of the new Bridlington hospital, which has been required now for 20 or 30 years. This Government—the Government who are repeatedly attacked for making cuts—have built and paid for this hospital. In addition, the Chancellor has been able to reduce the PSBR to 1 per cent. of GDP and to reduce income tax by 2p in the pound.

I am rather intrigued when Opposition Members, particularly alliance Members, refer to the level of taxation at 27p not being that significant to the ordinary man in the street. They forget that people consider national insurance as well as income tax. Even after the present reductions the man on below average earnings starts to pay tax and national insurance at the rate of 36p in the pound.

This has been a very conservative Budget—and I mean conservative with a small "c"—and it has been very prudent. In no way can my right hon. Friend the Chancellor be accused of putting forward a pre-election Budget. The projected figure that he has used in his estimates for the oil price is very conservative and I think that it is very likely that during the year oil prices will be higher and that there will be benefits both to Government revenues and to the balance of payments. The Chancellor deserves our gratitude and congratulations. Conservative Members must understand why the Opposition are looking so green with envy.

The economy is in better shape now than it has been for years. Inflation is under control, productivity is still rising and much of British industry, after a lot of pushing and shoving, is at last getting its act together. We really now have an opportunity of getting into a virtuous circle. Six years of successive economic growth have meant that higher tax yields are allowing the Government to reduce borrowing at the same time as reducing taxation. As a result, all of us who represent small business interests in our constituencies appreciate the effect that that has had already on interest rates, with the base rate falling by 1 per cent. over the past few weeks, mortgage rates are also coming down and further interest rate reductions likely. That will again give increased incentives to industry to invest.

Unemployment is falling. We must never forget that the figures are not understated—they are overstated by the enormous size of the black economy that has grown year after year. There are some 80,000 people who are registered as unemployed in the south-east when we all know that anyone who really wants to work and is capable of working in the south-east can get a job. There are several hundred thousand foreigners working in the catering industry because our own people are not prepared to take those jobs. We must also take into account those who are not willing to work. I checked the figures in my constituency just after Christmas. There were more than 100 school leavers drawing social security, yet there were more than 100 unfilled vacancies on the YTS. How many young people are not capable of taking the jobs that require more and more skills? How many of our children are leaving school unable to write properly, read adequately, do simple arithmetic or speak properly? The right hon. Member for Ashton-under Lyne (Mr. Sheldon) accepted earlier the point that I made that we are spending more per head on education than ever before. He said that what mattered was not the input, but the output. Surely, as much as anything, output must be the responsibility of those working in education.

There has been much talk about the north-south divide. I am sorry that the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) is no longer in the Chamber. He would not give way when I tried to intervene earlier. I am an east Yorkshireman born and bred. I have worked in the north, in east Yorkshire all my life. I represent a constituency that has the eastern suburbs and the agricultural heartland of the city of Hull. That is an area of high unemployment. I suggest that Opposition Members, instead of always blaming the Government and referring to cuts, should ask themselves, "What is the reason for all this unemployment?"

When I was a boy, Hull was the third port of our country. It was a great and prosperous city. With entry to the EEC and the movement of trade from the Atlantic and Liverpool to Europe, Hull should have benefited and become the Europort of Europe. It did not. It declined. Why did it decline? It declined for two reasons, the national dock labour scheme——

Mr. Hickmet: And the unions.

Mr. Townend: My hon. Friend the Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Hickmet) is quite right—and the Transport and General Workers Union. Felixstowe, which in those days was a wharf at the end of nowhere, which did not have the dead hand of the national dock labour scheme or the TGWU upon it, took the trade. Our prosperity moved south. The first culprits are the unions and the national dock labour scheme. I urgently press on my right hon. Friends that they should do away with that scheme in our election manifesto, because it has crippled the port of Hull.

I spent many years on the Labour-dominated council in Hull. I well remember industrialists coming to the city and saying that they would like to build a factory in the city if we could sell them some land. Our ideological brothers in the Labour party said that they did not believe in selling land and that land should belong to the people.

[Mr. Townend]

They said that they would lease the industrialists some land. The industrialists said, "Thank you very much", left the town and went somewhere else to buy freehold land. Now, when there is very little foot-loose industry and high unemployment, the Labour party has at last changed its policy. However, it is too late.

The hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) referred to Liverpool. What industrialist in his right mind would build a factory in Liverpool when we consider the record of the unions and Derek Hatton? What about the rates? That is one of the factors that influences whether an industrialist will develop. The Opposition have not taken any account of the appalling effect that some of those militant trade unions have had on our northern cities. I can quote a classic example. In my city of Hull, two brothers, half English, half West Indian, left the forces after the war and started to build agricultural trailers in a garage. They built up a large business that eventually became a plc. It was the largest manufacturer of agricultural trailers in the country. It was non-union, but eventually the unions got in. Unfortunately, the shop stewards were of the worst militant variety. They crippled that company and in the end it closed. We no longer manufacture trailers in Hull. If that company still existed, how many more apprenticeships would have been created? Before Opposition Members criticise the Government for unemployment in the north, they should come to the north and see the real reasons, as we who have had to live with the results of militant Socialism know the reasons.

It might appear churlish to mention omissions from a Budget that contains so much which is welcome, but some omissions have caused disappointment. No attempt has been made to deal with the tax anomalies and injustices that discriminate against those who are married and in favour of those who live in sin. The Conservative party believes in the family. It believes that children should be brought up in a stable environment and that that can best be provided within a marriage. Our tax system should discriminate in favour of marriage, but if the Government will not go as far as that, they should at least be even-handed and not discriminate against marriage. We have done that for many years, and I am sad that, in a year when resources were available, the Chancellor decided to do nothing.

It is nonsense that when two people decide to get married and set up home together they can pay £900 more a year in tax due to lower mortgage relief than they would if they lived together in sin. Equally, in this day and age, it must be wrong that a woman's investment income should be considered to be that of her husband for tax purposes when her earned income is considered to be her own and when the mistress's unearned income is considered to be her own. We cannot justify continuing a system in which divorce is more tax-efficient than marriage. I ask my right hon. and hon. Friends to consider that point.

I especially welcome two items in the Budget. The first is the additional help to old people, especially the extra age allowance for those aged over 80. It will be welcomed in my constituency, where the percentage of old people is way above the national average. Secondly, I thank the Chancellor for all the help that he has given to small businesses — we have heard all the details tonight — especially the provision that VAT can be assessed on a cash basis and that traders can obtain immediate relief for bad debts. No one has done as much as the Chancellor and his predecessor to help small businesses. Almost ritually, we expect every Budget to provide more help, encouragement and concessions to small businesses, and we were not disappointed this year. I am pleased that corporation tax and capital gains tax for small firms have been reduced to 27p in the pound.

This is a first-class Budget — a just reward for a Government who have followed a consistent economic policy regardless of carping criticism, naturally from the Opposition and occasionally from Conservative Members. Credit is due to British manufacturing industry, which has often been criticised in the past, and to the expanding financial services industry. They have taken advantage of the improved environment provided by the Government and they have created so much additional wealth and tax revenue that this Budget was made possible.

I look forward to my right hon. friend the Chancellor presenting his Budget next year and achieving his aim of reducing the standard rate of tax to 25p in the pound, and I hope that then he will make it more advantageous to be married than to live in sin. The success will continue only if we keep a constant watch on and increase our efforts to control public expenditure. The pressure to increase spending is always there. We must always be vigilant.

8.34 pm

Mr. Ken Eastham (Manchester, Blackley): Election year always stimulates a concentration of mind, especially on the Government Benches, and we have seen that in some of the speeches today.

It was interesting to hear the hon. Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) suddenly becoming alarmed about jobs and saying that there is no easy answer. That is completely contrary to what was said in 1979. I remember the posters produced by Saatchi and Saatchi to justify the high fees that they received to project the Conservative party. Then unemployment was 1·1 million. Now it is 3·5 million and the same people are saying, "There are no easy answers". They did not say that in 1979. It shows the emptiness of the case made by Conservative Members. I realise that the election stimulates concentration, but it is not a genuine anxiety and some of the utterances and claims that were made today will kid no one.

The only good contribution from a Conservative Member today was the speech of the hon. Member for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Warren), who criticised the Government for the crisis in engineering. It was a telling, honest and forthright contribution. Opposition Members have been making similar speeches for the past seven to eight years, but, since they fell on deaf ears, they made no difference. The hon. Member for Bridlington (Mr. Townend) talked about six years of growth. If he believes that there have been six years of growth, he will believe anything. He cannot kid anyone by claiming that.

My hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) mentioned some alternative methods of creating jobs and said that the northern region should also share the prosperity of the nation. I was grateful to him for reminding us about the Prime Minister standing outside the door of No. 10 in 1979 chanting some quote from St. Francis. Some people have described that as the night when Al Capone took over, not as the night of St. Francis. That has been shown in many ways. We see the sickening and disgraceful spectacle of the rogues in the City—the slick operators who live on their wits and seem to be getting away with murder. Yet there is an over concentration on attacking the trade unions and punishing them in the most vicious antiquated way. The Government are no better than 19th century mill owners.

I wonder how many people saw "The Money Programme" on BBC2 yesterday evening, which showed 22-year-olds who operate in the City and who receive £100,000 a year. We heard those young whizz kids boasting about their Porsches, their big fancy houses and their £100,000 a year, and we hear speeches about the serious' shortages of highly skilled engineers and technicians. Is it any wonder that there is no great enthusiasm among highly skilled people with brains to become engineers when they can receive such great rewards in this Conservative society?

The Budget contained no surprises. The newspapers prophesied that there would be 2p off income tax, and they were dead right. The newspapers also prophesied that the Budget would not help the poor, as did the churches and other religious people. There was no enthusiasm for the Budget and nobody can kid me or anyone else that it was a Budget that was meant for the people. We all saw during the Chancellor's speech that he appeared to lose two pages of his text. There was a slight hiccup and somebody ran off to the side benches to the civil servants. One of my hon. Friends asked that there should be an adjournment because of this splutter. I wonder whether there was a real mistake, and a couple of pages were missed out of the Chancellor's speech, because there was no mention of relief. Usually, the Chancellor tells us about relief for the handicapped or the less well-off. There was no mention of the unemployed or the handicapped, the poor or the mainstream pensioners.

It has been said that some pensioners will be getting 2p off their tax, but we all know that there are millions of pensioners who do not pay any tax. Usually, those who are paying tax are those who have had good jobs, and now have high pensions, such as town clerks, architects and ex-civil servants. Nobody in the inner cities such as Manchester, Glasgow, Liverpool or Cardiff will receive such benefits. None of those people are receiving anything from this Budget.

We should remind the Government that when the Chancellor is doling out money he should be doling it out to the people who made sacrifices. During the past seven or eight years, the groups that I have mentioned have been making considerable sacrifices, and if there is any payout or share of the wealth, they should be at the receiving end of them. Instead there has been no reward for them.

The Chancellor seemed to be padding out what he had to say about VAT. He spoke about the assistance with business transactions, tax deductions and some minimal relief for charities. If he wanted to tackle VAT, an obvious way to have done so would have been to reduce it to the figure that it was under the last Labour Government. We ought to remind the Government and the Chancellor—I will not let him forget it—that they have nearly doubled VAT. If he had reduced VAT, everybody would have benefited. However, that is not the philosophy of the Conservative party. It wants to be specific and give to those who do not need such benefits. That was certainly the case on VAT.

Another tax that has not been mentioned in the debate is taxing the sick through prescription charges, which have risen by 1,200 per cent. since 1979. That is a tax. If the Chancellor wanted to do something to help the sick, he could have done something about these charges. Nobody wants to be sick and nobody should be burdened because he is sick. That was another thing about which the Chancellor did nothing.

The emphasis throughout in the contributions from the Conservative Benches has been on tax relief for the better-off, for those who do not need the money, such as people who have to pay capital gains tax and who are extremely wealthy.

Another matter that has not been mentioned so far is the quality of life. I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Walton dwelt on this subject, but very little concern has been shown by Conservative Members. Like my hon. Friend, I believe that the local authority fabric, such as schools, roads, pavements, housing, hospitals, and better transport, are all worthy sectors, and expenditure on them can improve the quality of life. We all know that at the moment the Government prefer public squalor. It is the old story of private affluence against public squalor, and we have seen this year after year in the past eight years.

There are good ways to provide jobs if the Government are really concerned, and one of the most useful would be controlling the housing stock and making serious inroads into such problems. Nationally, 3·3 million private houses need at least £2,500 spending on them, and that is on the 1981 figures. The Association of Metropolitan Authorities recently estimated that to bring the private sector up to standard would need £27·5 billion.

I realise that these figures are gigantic, and to bring them into perspective so that we can relate to them I shall use the example of my city of Manchester—one city of many that need such help. In Manchester, we have a housing waiting list of 38,000, and 25 per cent. of these people are in overcrowded houses. A quarter of the housing stock is pre-war and it needs £150 million spending on repairs. The council also needs £250 million to repair the system-built houses which came about as a result of decisions taken in this place.

Some 10,000 local authority houses in Manchester are awaiting modernisation and 1,000 more people a year come on the waiting list for homes. Over £100 million is needed for heating improvements. In the private sector, 3,300 houses are waiting for improvement grants. I am advised that another 50 houses a week are added to this list. People are desperately waiting for the Government to give them money so that they can restore these properties into a habitable condition.

The Government once again mentioned training, as they regularly do. I do not go along with the Chancellor nor those on the Government Benches in the way that they interpret training, because our problem is not so much about training of young people but about skill shortages. That reinforces what was said from the Conservative Benches earlier today. I remind the Government that, when we are talking about skill shortages, we should remember that during the past three years they closed 27 skill centres, some of which were making a profit. Nevertheless, daft as that decision was, they decided to close the centres. They also savaged the industrial training boards, which did a vital job in training against skill shortages.

Our nation knows about the north-south divide and does not need politicians in Westminster to remind it about it. People are conscious of the injustices and the inequalities that have been practised by this Conservative

[Mr. Ken Eastham]

Government. People no longer consider that we are one nation. There is a blatant and callous indifference in the Government's policies of inequality.

If the Budget is the best that the Government can do after eight years in office, we should ask what they have to show for those eight years. There are still 3·25 million people unemployed, and hundreds of thousands of people are homeless and living under the arches. People cannot get beds for geriatrics in hospitals. That is the progress that we are suffering under this incompetent Tory Government. Unemployment is not being tackled; crime, which many people say is associated with unemployment, is escalating and there is a feeling of hopelessness. Such is the Budget for 1987 under this Chancellor of the Exchequer.

8.50 pm

Mr. Richard Hickmet (Glanford and Scunthorpe): Much of the criticism of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's Budget by Opposition Members this afternoon has dealt with the decline of manufacturing industry, the north-south divide, and the consequential reduction in employment in the north. However, there has not been much analysis of particular industries or of the causes why some industries are in decline.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bridlington (Mr. Townend) made a telling point when he analysed what had happened in Hull. That city was one of Europe's major ports, employing several thousand dockers, and was poised to capture European shipping markets when we entered the European Community. However, it committed suicide through the national dock labour scheme and industrial relations in the ports. It is now paying the price.

I should like to investigate briefly the British Steel Corporation, and to take that as an example of what has happened in manufacturing industry during the past few years and to consider its future. As the Secretary of State said earlier, in 1979, the British Steel Corporation took 14 man hours to produce one tonne of steel whereas today it takes 6 man hours per tonne. In 1979, deliveries were unreliable but today the corporation can, in many circumstances, deliver within a month of an order being placed. Quality is now among the best in the world. On Monday, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry visited the Scunthorpe steel works in my constituency and saw steel being made for export to Germany, China and to other countries. Today the British Steel Corporation exports more than 40 per cent. of its production.

After 10 years of continuous losses, which amounted to billions of pounds of subsidy from British taxpayers, the British Steel Corporation entered profit for the first time last year with a profit of £38 million, on a turnover of about £3·5 billion. This year, it is on target for a profit of £170 million.

Since 1981, that industry has seen about 120,000 job losses in the United Kingdom. On top of those job losses in the steel industry there have been losses in the transport, maintenance and other associated dependent industries, bringing the total losses to about 250,000. The tragedy of the British Steel Corporation has been that we failed to deal earlier with those problems.

The world has been awash with steel. There are 700 million tonnes of capacity in the free world, of which 100 million tonnes is excess. There are at least 30 million excess tonnes in Japan, 30 million tonnes in the United States and, depending on the figures that are available, between 20 million and 30 million tonnes in Europe. That over-capacity must be seen in the context of the countries in the developing world, which are constantly building new steel mills and expanding their capacity. That continuing over-capacity in Europe still exists, even after we had cut capacity in this country by more than 6 million tonnes and by 20 million tonnes in Europe as a whole. Steel workers all over Europe have lost their jobs and have been made redundant.

Today the European regime of quota controls, price fixing and capacity reductions is coming to an end. Since December 1985, no subsidies to the European steel industry have been allowed. I asked my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry—perhaps my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will make sure that he gets the message—to ensure that no indirect subsidies are given for energy, transport or employment costs in the European steel industry.

What about the future? The Japanese steel industry is laying off thousands of steel workers. It is ironic that today personnel staff from the major Japanese steel producers come to the United Kingdom to see what we have done in our steel industry about redundancy and about providing alternative employment for steel workers.

The steel industry in the United States is in mortal decline. The French and German steel industries are in a parlous state. When Opposition Members say that this Budget has done nothing for British manufacturing industry, I have to tell them that the strongest steel industry in Europe today is in Britain. It is the British Steel Corporation, which is one of the most efficient and profitable steel corporations in the free world. Opposition Members may gainsay that if they like, but difficult decisions had to be taken in the industry. When the Labour party was in power, it refused to face those decisions and shelved the Beswick report. Those decisions then had to be taken by this Government.

For the future, I want the British Steel Corporation to compete on profit, delivery, price and quality. If it does, it will remain the best producer in Europe. The only way in which we can protect jobs in manufacturing industry, whether in the steel corporation or anywhere else, is to compete on that basis.

The Commission is not reluctant to remove quotas on the production of steel in Europe. The time has come to get out of the steel regime. It is interesting to ask why the Commission should be reluctant to remove those quotas, because we can deal with over-capacity in steel production in two ways: we can allow the industry to compete on profit or we can proceed by diktat. We can simply tell the steel industries in Europe to close down capacity here and there. I see no reason why the Commission should reduce United Kingdom capacity and I was pleased that the Secretary of State gave that assurance following an intervention I made in his speech. In future, none of the BSC's plants should be affected as, clearly, they are profitable. The Commission must take into account the profitability and financial viability of companies in negotiating further cuts.

What effect does the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) think Labour party policies will have on the performance of one of our major manufacturing sectors? The direct cost to the BSC of the 1 per cent. levy on turnover for training purposes would be £35 million. According to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, East (Mr. Prescott), the Labour party would use the nationalised industry to increase manning. Furthermore, the Labour party is committed to phasing out nuclear power. What effect does the right hon. and learned Gentleman think that that will have on the steel industry, bearing in mind that it is the largest user of electricity in the United Kingdom and that the chairman of the CEGB has said that he will not be able to guarantee continuity of supply if phasing out takes place and that electricity costs may increase by up to 50 per cent?

It is all very well for the right hon. and learned Gentleman, like Pontius Pilate, to make an eloquent speech, washing his hands of any blame for the parlous state of British manufacturing industry, but the Labour party failed to deal with the BSC's problems and today proposes policies which would be fatal to its future. They would remove the industry from profitability, and if they did that, under the European steel regime, the results for the BSC would be disastrous. It would face closure.

I want to see the BSC run on a sound, commercial basis. The future of the corporation lies in privatisation and giving those in that industry a share of the profit, a share of their industry and a say in how it is operated. I am somewhat disappointed that workers in the BSC will not be able to share in the profits-related scheme for tax relief announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor.

Mr. Lawson: They will when it is privatised.

Mr. Hickmet: Perhaps that is a good argument for privatisation, but meantime I hope that that matter will be considered in Committee. In relation to a major sector of British manufacturing industry, namely the BSC and steel producers, past Labour party policies have proved disastrous and, if adopted, they would prove disastrous again.

Mr. John Maples (Lewisham, West): Every year at this time my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer returns with another year of economic growth under the economy's belt and we listen to a range of speeches from the Opposition from which one would think that the economy was in terminal decline. While we certainly have problems, we have an extremely healthy base from which to attack them.

Over the past few months my right hon. Friend has achieved more than tax cuts. In the autumn we saw an increase of nearly £5 billion in public expenditure. Now we have seen a £3 billion reduction in borrowing and a £2·5 billion reduction in taxes. That is a £10·5 billion fiscal adjustment over the past four months, £5 billion of which has gone into increased public spending and only £2·5 billion of which has gone into tax cuts. Therefore, it is wholly wrong to characterise what has happened to public-sector financing over the past five months as nothing but tax cuts.

If one adds to that £10·5 billion of adjustments the lost oil revenues of £6 billion, one finds that the non-oil economy has generated £16 billion more in tax receipts than was predicted at this time last year. I do not know where Opposition Members think that that money came from. It did not come from out of the sky, off a tree or from the IMF, which is where they go for their money; it came from economic growth. That is its only possible source and it is extraordinarily economically illiterate to pretend that it came from anywhere else.

The balance that my right hon. Friend has struck between tax cuts and the PSBR seems about right. I am glad that he has concentrated on cutting the basic rate of tax rather than on raising thresholds further. I am also glad that he has tried hard to give interest rates a downward push. In that context the proposals of the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) are interesting. I put that in an intervention to the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) and he uncharacteristically refused to come to grips with the problem. The right hon. Member for Sparkbrook said:

> "The rational measure of borrowing is the public sector financial deficit, which we will hold below 4 per cent. of national income."—[Official Report, 18 March 1987; Vol. 112, c. 952.]

There was no good in the right hon. Gentleman trying to confuse people about the difference between the PSBR and the PSFD. The difference is privatisation receipts, which a Labour Government would not have. I would have thought that the right hon. Gentleman would have known this and not tried to be so disingenuous in his response. Page 63 of the Red Book shows that virtually the only difference between the financial deficit and the borrowing requirement is the £5 billion of privatisation receipts which his Government will not have. As a consequence, it seems the right hon. Gentleman would view with considerable equanimity a PSBR in the region of £16 billion. Perhaps when he is replying to the debate the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) will deal with this point. I hope that he will not try to confuse people in describing the difference between the financial deficit and the borrowing requirement, because to the Labour Government they are exactly the same.

A £16 billion increase in borrowing would raise total demand for credit in the economy by a quite astronomical percentage and would be bound to push interest rates up to an extremely dangerous level. It is extraordinarily irresponsible to pretend that the economy can stand that sort of level of public sector borrowing.

As I have said, I am grateful to my right hon. Friend the Chancellor for choosing to give a downward push to interest rates. In the last week or so we have seen part of the result of that. I hope that we will not delay for too long interest rate cuts because the markets want them to come down and the result of not reducing them is, as we have seen, a rise in the pound. I can understand my right hon. Friend wanting to see a slow decline in interest rates, but I hope that he will not allow that to go on for too long. The pound had reached a level about which the Government and manufacturing industry were happy and it would be better to see it back to that level.

I am also interested in the passage in the Red Book which gives the consequences of private sector credit demand on interest rates. I have been seeking to make that point for some time. An added explanation is that the credit granting institutions sell credit in a way that artificially expands it. If we were to couple the downward pressure on interest rates resulting from a lower PSBR with, perhaps, a little pressure in the banking sector for some qualitative restraint on lending to consumers and property companies, we might see interest rates fall even further.

[Mr. John Maples]

The tax cuts have been criticised as being a way to do nothing about unemployment. One can argue about whether tax cuts or various methods of public spending are better ways of generating jobs. To some extent, we pay our money and take our choice from the academic studies that have been carried out. It is not true to pretend that tax cuts have no consequences for job creation. They help, and several academic studies prove that. We are seeing a fall in unemployment. If my right hon. Friend the Chancellor finds in the near future that he has further room for manoeuvre, I hope that he will be able to tackle the low end of the national insurance contribution schedule, because on the employees' and the employers' side that will help the low paid and help to generate jobs. It could do that at relatively low cost because the benefit needs to be given only to the group of people at the bottom.

I hope that my right hon. Friend will stay on the same path and will continue the strategy of reducing the basic rate of income tax rather than trying to raise tax allowances. I hope that he will combine what he has done in the Budget with further measures to help push down interest rates.

9.7 pm

Mr. Bryan Gould (Dagenham): I congratulate the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on his maiden speech. He made a most effective speech and we look forward to hearing further from him in the same vein. I am sure that all hon. Members join him in the well-deserved tribute he paid to his predecessor.

This Budget debate began last Tuesday with the Chancellor's Budget speech. It was a speech of quite astonishing complacency, which painted a picture of the economy and then proceeded to build a Budget strategy upon that picture. His speech was a picture of the economy moving from strength to strength and doing so well that there was no need whatever for a backward glance at the poor or the unemployed or at all the other people who have been left behind. Clearly, the Chancellor's assumption was that they did not need anything in the way of a helping hand, that the Budget strategy would look after them as the economy prospered.

Presumably that is why in the Chancellor's speech and in the Budget itself it is impossible to detect even a hint of any help directed towards the unemployed or the poor. However, the truth is rather different. It is that the Budget speech was a mixture of half-truths and deceptions, of misleading statistics and ill-founded assertions all designed to conceal a record of quite appalling waste and decay and to give an illusion that the failures of the past, which were barely acknowledged, would somehow and miraculously be transformed into sparkling successes. It was in pursuit of that illusion that the Budget cynically and callously turned its back on the unemployed. It was a Budget which, in pursuit of that illusion, again did nothing whatsoever to address our long-term problems. Indeed, it makes those problems a great deal worse.

Let us look at some of the claimed successes, at some of the more salient features of our economic situation and our recent economic performance and see how ready Conservative Members are to claim them as successes. Let us look first, for example, at manufacturing investment —surely not an unimportant matter if we are concerned about our industrial future. We know—we have heard it repeated in the debate—that manufacturing investment is 20 per cent. below what it was in 1979. It is perhaps even more telling that, whereas in the years from 1975-79 manufacturing investment rose by £5·84 billion—there was a net positive investment of that size—in the years 1980-85 there was a net disinvestment of £5·52 billion. In other words, over that period, and virtually the term of office of the Government, we have been the only and first underdeveloping country that the industrial world has seen. That is the truth; that is the extent of the faith and confidence that investors have in the industrial economy, for which the Chancellor has been responsible.

Mr. Jonathan Sayeed (Bristol, East): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Gould: No, I have only just begun. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman would like to rise to claim success in manufacturing output. Again, as we know, manufacturing output is still nearly 5 per cent. below what it was in 1979. Even if the rather optimistic and hopeful forecast in the Red Book were to be achieved this year and manufacturing investment were to rise by 4 per cent.—a most unlikely eventuality — we still would not have returned to the position of 1979.

In case that is not damning enough, I want the House to consider one pair of simple statistics. By comparison with the 5 per cent. fall in manufacturing output in the eight years from 1979 to 1987 let us look at the eight years of the great depression—the years of 1929 to 1937—when, as everybody knows, the economy was in desperate straits. Over that period we did not experience a fall in manufacturing output of 5 per cent.; we experienced an increase in manufacturing output of 38 per cent.

Mr. Lawson: This is casuistry.

Mr. Gould: This is not casuistry; this is a form of statistics that the Chancellor is all too unwilling to face. Clearly, there is no willingness on the Government Benches to claim those figures as a success story.

Let us turn to our performance on manufacturing trade. Here we have an amazing turn-round from a surplus of £5 billion in 1978 to a Treasury forecast of a deficit of £8 billion for this year. The Chancellor said earlier, when my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) made this point, that it was "neither here nor there". I only hope that that remark was picked up by Hansard. If it was not, I invite the Chancellor to repeat it now. If not, I hope that he will in the speech that he is about to deliver.

In a sense the Chancellor is partly right when he says that that deficit — that volume of goods, £13 billion worth of productive capacity — is, "neither here nor there"; it is certainly not here, but it is there. It is providing £13 billion worth of jobs, well over a million jobs in manufacturing industry, but it is providing jobs in other economies rather than in the British economy. I wonder whether any Conservative Member will rise to claim as a success the 2 million jobs that have been lost in manufacturing since 1979. Is that a success? Does that matter? Is that not important? I believe that it is. It is an important element in the worst unemployment record that any industrial country has had since 1979. Of course, the Chancellor tries to bluster his way through that figure as well, but it is an uncomfortable truth from which he cannot escape.

One could go on describing this wonderful success story with its emphasis on small businesses. However, in each of the past four to six years the number of insolvencies among small businesses has broken new records and is now at over 14,000—four times what it was when the Government took office.

Does anyone want to claim that the competitiveness of British industry is a success story? We are told that all the terrible sacrifices were worth while because now British industry is newly competitive, leaner and fitter. I tell the Chancellor that British industry is smaller, and poorer. Can he nominate any index of competitiveness which shows an improvement since 1979? I believe that he cannot.

Another way of measuring success is to examine its fruits. There are some fruits. Of course, a group of people will benefit from the Chancellor's tax cuts and be able to exchange their BMWs for Porsches. Why is the success not felt in all parts of the economy? Why, for example, do we have the worst trained work force in the western world? If British industry is so strong, why are we assured, as we were today, that even a small contribution by British industry to go some way towards meeting the levels of training provided by other and more successful countries would bankrupt even the most successful companies in our economy?

If we are so successful, why can we not afford to make even a token start in dealing with the £15 billion backlog of housing repairs in both the public and private sectors? That backlog condemns hundreds of thousands of families to misery and homelessness.

Mr. Sayeed: Why will certain Labour boroughs not take up Government money for the estates action plan?

Mr. Gould: The hon. Gentleman will have great difficulty establishing the truth and accuracy of that statement.

If the Government wished to benefit the economy from the fruits of success, they could spend some of the billions of pounds on housing and repairs. As the CBI recommends, we could be spending money on industrial infrastructure — on roads, rail, bridges and sewers. I admit that the Government are spending money, but not as much as the CBI identifies as being absolutely necessary. In its report, "The Fabric of the Nation", the CBI makes it clear that unless we spend that money our industrial infrastructure will decay and fray at the edges. One needs only to walk around our streets and compare our shabby, shoddy and dirty cities with those of more prosperous countries to understand how far short we are falling in this vital area.

If we have so much money to spend, and there is so much success in the economy, why are we not spending money on essential research and development? Why are we allowing ourselves to fall so far behind our more successful rivals?

Mr. Sayeed rose——

Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Gould: Why is it, even in the high-tech industries — the sunrise industries — that we are now running a major deficit of well over £2 billion? The trouble is that so successful is the economy that the sun has not yet risen and there is no chance of that occurring under present policies.

Mr. Sayeed rose——

Mr. Gould: It is clear that only one Government Back Bencher is prepared to claim any of this as a success. If we are so successful, why are we not spending money on the National Health Service? Why are we not spending money to ensure that nurses are not forced to go abroad for jobs at decent salaries but are able to stay here to prevent the closure of wards and the loss of hospital beds? That is the position in our supposedly successful economy—we are running down the National Health Service.

If we are so successful, why are pensioners living in poverty, scrambling around to keep themselves warm to stop themselves from dying from hypothermia? If we are so successful and there is so much money, why did the Government break the link between pensions and national earnings? Why did we leave the pensioners behind? Why has nothing been done for family poverty? Why are there now more than twice as many people living in poverty today than there were in 1979?

Mrs. Elaine Kellett-Bowman (Lancaster): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Gould: No, I will not give way.

If the country is so flush with money and success, why is there nothing in the Budget to make a true assault on family poverty through the most effective available means, child benefit? If we are doing so well, why is there no attempt to deal with the central scandal, waste and abuse of over 3 million people unemployed? Why are we constantly told that, "We cannot deal with unemployment because we do not know where the money will come from"? That has always been the point that has been put to those of us who argue that we should be spending money on providing jobs in the economy. If we are doing so well, why does the Chancellor sit there shaking his head and muttering, doing nothing and raising not a finger to help the unemployed?

The truth of the matter was revealed—in a rare flash of honesty—by a remark made by the Prime Minister when she gave an interview to the Financial Times on whether to join the European monetary system or at least the exchange rate mechanism. What the Prime Minister said was extremely revealing. She said that we could not join the exchange rate mechanism because the economy was not strong enough. Of course, I do not expect the Chancellor to agree with her sentiment about the EMS — we are all aware there is a major disagreement between the Prime Minister and the right hon. Gentleman about this matter. However, I wonder whether he would agree with his right hon. Friend, in her rare flash of insight and honesty, when she made that concession about the economy.

The Chancellor's Budget speech and his Budget strategy — typical of the general approach of the Government—were economical with the truth. We had a great deal of vainglorious posturing by the Chancellor and some extraordinary claims were made. I hasten to say that those claims were not made in the House where they could have faced immediate challenge, but, of course, on television. That is where the Chancellor set out to hoodwink the electorate and made claims that simply could not be sustained.

The Chancellor claimed that, under his tutelage and that of the Government, Britain has now reached the point where we are head of the European league for growth. The Chancellor well knows that, since this Government took office, we have had average growth of about 1·3 per cent. a year. That is worse than in any comparable period of our post-war history and it is worse than virtually any other advanced industrial country. He made an extravagant claim about productivity — a huge claim — that, once again, we are at the top of the league for productivity. That is largely a statistical effect, produced by simply getting rid of the weaker brethren. It is rather like shooting the tail-end batsman in an attempt to put up the average—that may not work if one is the captain of the England team. Nevertheless, the principle exists.

Let us consider the truth of the matter. I invite any right hon. or hon. Member to give me the answer to this question—[HON. MEMBERS: "Give way then".] I will give way, but let me put the question first. Can anyone point to any of our rivals — we are told that they are languishing behind us in the productivity league table— who have secured improvements in productivity by reducing manufacturing output? Is there such a case— [HON. MEMBERS: "Come on, answer."] The fact of the matter is that we have achieved productivity improvements because the 5 per cent. fall in manufacturing output has been exceeded by a 28 per cent. fall in employment in manufacturing industries. If that is the sort of productivity improvement that the Government have to offer, let us have no more of that, thank you very much.

The one claim that the Chancellor of the Exchequer did not make, and the one league table that he did not put up on the screen, as it were, was about inflation. I wonder why that was. After all, inflation has been the Government's central objective. Why did the right hon. Gentleman not proclaim the Government's enormous comparative success with inflation? The answer is clear. Again, if anyone wishes to dispute what I am about to say, let him rise and I shall gladly give way. The answer to this little puzzle is that the right hon. Gentleman did not dare to reveal the truth about inflation because, as a proportion of the average of the G7 countries, it is worse than it was in 1979. The only advanced country that has a higher inflation rate than ours among the G7 countries is Italy.

The Italians, however, have the great compensation of their output, employment, national wealth and share of world trade in manufactures, which have compensated for their having a slightly higher rate of inflation than ourselves. They have overtaken us in all those respects and the Italians now have a far more successful and powerful economy than us.

Mr. Michael Colvin (Romsey and Waterside): Perhaps when debating the Budget we might also pause to give thought to the alternative Budget. What would the rate of inflation be today if a Labour Government increased spending by £28 billion, which the Opposition say that they would?

Mr. Gould: Provided that I am not tempted to give way to such futile interventions again, I shall have time to answer the hon. Gentleman's questions by the end of my remarks.

On the inflation rate, the great jewel in the Government's crown, the Chancellor of the Exchequer was so afraid of what was happening to inflation that he failed to keep excise duties in line with the rate of inflation. That was not through generosity but because he was in a state of funk about what would happen to inflation.

The false claim is made that the Budget is the continuation or culmination of a tax-cutting process. We are told that a tax-cutting Government have come to judgment. Even after the tax cuts have been taken into account, the tax burden for the ordinary family is now higher than it was in 1979. A higher proportion of our national income is paid in tax than it was when the Government came to office.

It is not as if the strategy of the Chancellor of the Exchequer had any great point in it, even if it were a true one. Even if his claims were right, the Brown report makes it clear that the incentive effects of tax cuts that the Chancellor claims are minimal and illusory. As on so many other aspects of the Budget strategy, tax cuts are a matter of both claim and policy. They are a matter of wish fulfilment rather than of practical achievement.

On taxation, I invite the Chancellor of the Exchequer to deny that work has been done in the Treasury on the possibility of a major switch from direct to indirect taxation if the Conservative party wins the next general election. We understand by that that there would be a major shift to VAT. Perhaps there would not be an increase in the rate of VAT, but there would be an extension of its scope. We are familiar with that scenario because that is what happened in 1979 when the Conservative party came to office. The Conservative Government cut income tax but they doubled VAT. I notice again that the Chancellor of the Exchequer does not stir. We know that if the Conservative party were to win the next election, the tax cuts would be clawed back by a swingeing increase in VAT.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer claims that he has been consistent, which is the most laughable claim of all. In the passage in the Budget statement dealing with the medium-term financial strategy, I believe that the words "sterling M3" did not pass the right hon. Gentleman's lips. He could not bring himself to use that phrase. He talked in a woolly fashion about broad money, but even that, he told us, would have little effect or influence on policy. That is just as well, because if we were to apply the doctrines that he described only a couple of years ago as immutable, we should be experiencing inflation rates of 20 per cent. or so.

However, in the name of sterling M3, the Chancellor and his predecessor pursued policies that ruined the nation's economy, decimated its industry and blighted the lives of millions of people. It is astonishing that that doctrine could go without so much as a decent burial. Humility is not what we expect from the Chancellor, but an apology, however reluctant and inadequate, would not have come amiss.

We now have another piece of mumbo-jumbo economics. We no longer have sterling M3; we now have the PSBR. That, we are told, is the great totem. Yet the Government's Red Book tells us that the major explosion in borrowing and lending has been in the private sector, and that that private sector borrowing is the major upward pressure on interest rates. Why is the Chancellor doing nothing about that? If he is concerned about interest rates, why is he concentrating on the PSBR, which is insignificant by comparison with private sector borrowing?

The Chancellor claims that his Budget strategy is that of a prudent Chancellor. But he is the most profligate Chancellor in recent years. What happened, under this prudent Chancellor, to the £60 billion or so of North sea oil revenues? What happened to the billions of pounds that he secured by selling off the taxpayers' assets? What happened to the increased revenues from the increased tax burden that he piled on ordinary people, including hidden taxes, such as the forced increases in electricity and gas charges? Where have all those billions of pounds gone? They have slipped through the Chancellor's fingers, and there is nothing to show for them. He has spent that money at the rate of £20 billion a year on financing unemployment. Now, this prudent Chancellor invites the nation to float itself over the general election hump on a tide of imported consumer goods, financed by record family borrowing and fuelled afresh by the irresponsible tax cuts that he has offered in the Budget.

Oddly enough, it is not only the Opposition who have argued the case for public spending as a more responsible alternative to tax cuts. A document, presumably addressed to the Chancellor, from the Tory Reform Group—the patrons of that august body include the Secretaries of State for Energy and for Education and Science, the Paymaster General, who is present, and the Home Secretary—states:

"We believe that the extra resources available to the Government should not be used to increase the real spending power of those fortunate enough to be in work, but rather to create jobs for those out of work."

It goes on to say:

"This is not the year to boost consumer spending."

The Paymaster General will no doubt endorse that, and so do we. We believe that that would have been the responsible thing to do. The Chancellor had nearly £6 billion to spend, and he gave almost half of it in irresponsible tax cuts and reduced borrowing, unnecessarily and damagingly, by a further £3 billion to keep the City sweet. He could have taken the action that was necessary in the interests of our economic future—action that we spelt out in "New Jobs for Britain", our programme for reducing unemployment by 1 million in two years. As it happens, by a happy coincidence, our programme cost exactly the £6 billion which the Chancellor has frittered away. It is on that that we should have been spending the money.

There is just one thing to be said for the Budget. In all its futility and irresponsibility, it offers the British people a clear choice between another five years of Tory Government, with all their wasted decay, irresponsibility, carelessness and incompetence, and investing in our economic future, our industrial base, our infrastructure, the training and skill of our people, our economic future and the quality of life. It is a choice between destructiveness and investment. That is the choice which the British people will make come a general election. That is why there will be a Labour Government after that general election.

9.36 pm

The Chancellor of the Exchequer (Mr. Nigel Lawson): We have had an interesting debate, enlivened for the past 25 minutes by the complete fantasy of the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould). I congratulate the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on his maiden speech. He has not wasted much time. I do not know whether that betrays a certain nervousness about the duration of his tenure here, but he certainly carried the whole House with him in his sincere and well-merited tribute to David Penhaligon, whom we all miss so much.

The debate was interesting, too, for the opportunity that it has given to the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith) and the hon. Member for Dagenham to compete for the moderate candidature in the battle for the Labour leadership, which cannot now be long postponed. Although the hon. Member for Dagenham is rather flashier—

Mr. John Smith: Get on with the Budget.

Mr. Lawson: I have been told to get on with the Budget, but we did not hear a single word about Labour's plans from the hon. Member for Dagenham. He was purporting to say what the choice was for the nation. I shall give a word of advice to the Opposition. Although the hon. Member for Dagenham is undoubtedly rather flashier, I would go for the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East. He is very canny; he has seldom, if ever, said anything, and certainly not today. The hon. Member for Dagenham has said a great deal, most of it highly critical of the Labour party and all of which we have carefully kept on file for future use. The hon. Gentleman is also a little careless. I read in The Observer the weekend before the Budget that he "was given the task of drawing up the employment programme in preference to the pugnacious Prescott who is employment spokesman. (Gould did, though, get his sums wrong, meaning that the appendices had to be left out of the original document.)"

Mr. Gould: I am grateful to the Chancellor for giving way because this gives me an unforeseen opportunity to place on the record that that statement in The Observer profile, about which I do not generally complain, is plainly wrong.

Mr. Lawson: I do not know what happened to those appendices, but the hon. Gentleman certainly got his sums wrong today.

Today's debate takes place on a very important anniversary, for it was exactly 10 years ago today that the Lib-Lab pact was signed. The right hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Callaghan), in the days when he had some influence over the Labour party's policies, succeeded in resisting a Conservative motion of no confidence by striking a deal with the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel). This deal ensured that the right hon. Gentleman's Government would die a slow and lingering death, rather than a quick one. By the same token, it delayed the return to sanity in the nation's finances.

It is interesting to recall what some luminaries in our political life were doing then—a sort of "Where were they then?" rather than "Where are they now?" The right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen) was Labour's Foreign Secretary. That very model of a modern Labour moderate, Mrs. Shirley Williams, was Education Secretary, in between appearances on the Grunwick picket line. The right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) was Minister for Prices—a job in which he first established Hattersley's law: whatever the right hon. Gentleman predicts, the precise opposite will come to pass.

Indeed, of the leading lights of the Opposition today, only two were absent from the ranks of Government then. The right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Opposition had, we are told, refused offers of a ministerial job. I only hope he is not regretting his decision, because it is daily becoming clearer that he is most unlikely to get another opportunity of office.

The right hon. Member for Glasgow Hillhead (Mr. Jenkins) had already left the sinking ship for the flesh pots of Brussels. Of course, the right hon. Member is back with us now, as joint economic spokesman for the SDP and its subsidiary, the Liberal party. The right hon. Gentleman's "Who's Who" entry reminds us that he is a member of the Athenaeum, of Brooks's, of Pratts, and of the Reform Club. He is, par excellence, someone who believes that the solution to any problem is to join a club, whether it is the European monetary system or OPEC. Talking of clubs, let me take this opportunity of wishing the right hon. Gentleman well in his new and exalted post of chancellor of Oxford university.

Mr. Jack Straw (Blackburn) rose——

Mr. Lawson: I shall not give way. The hon. Member for Dagenham did not give way, and nor shall I.

The right hon. Member for Hillhead owes that victory, in equal measure, to the first-past-the-post electoral system and his seminal address to the students of Oxford university a few years ago. In that address, he said:

"There has been a lot of talk about the formation of a new centre party . . . I find this idea—"

[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lawson: I shall be coming to the Budget in due course, have no fear. In his address to the students of Oxford university, the right hon. Gentleman said:

"There has been a lot of talk about the formation of a new centre party . . . I find this idea profoundly unattractive. I do so for at least four reasons.

First, I do not believe that such a grouping would have any coherent philosophical base. The idea that my views are closer to the campaign attitude of the Liberal candidate in Chester-le-Street than to those of Mr. Giles Radice is manifest nonsense."

He concluded:

"Fourth, and more personally, I cannot be indifferent to the political traditions in which I was brought up and in which I have lived my political life. Parties are not to me a religion, but the Labour Party is and always has been an instinctive part of my life."

[Interruption.] I am coming to the end.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that this is a preamble.

Mr. Lawson: He went on:

"I therefore have no desire to seek new combinations. I remember an old piece of doggerel about someone:

'Playing on his fuddled fiddle
Somewhere in the muddled middle.'"

I could not have put it better myself.

As for the right hon. Gentleman's contribution to this debate, it was, of course, the same speech as he has made in all our previous economic debates—rather like some fine antique piece of furniture, the polish improving as the utility diminishes.

This year's Budget has been warmly welcomed—[Interruption.]—I see by the Opposition, and it has also been warmly welcomed by British industry, on whose performance our future prosperity depends.

Interest rates, which had fallen ½ per cent. in anticipation of the Budget, have since fallen a further ½ per cent., and the building societies have now given notice of a 1 per cent. fall in the mortgage rate. The pound remains firm. This means, incidentally, that, taking the income tax cut and the mortgage rate reduction together, the Budget is worth an extra £5 or more a week in take-home pay to a typical married couple buying their home on a mortgage.

As for the fall in interest rates generally, this of course reverses the 1 per cent. increase in interest rates in October. The House will recall that during the period of foreign exchange market turbulence which followed the somewhat inconclusive G5 and G7 meetings at the end of September, I authorised the Bank of England to intervene unusually heavily in order to buy a breathing space that would enable me to confine the interest rate rise to 1 per cent. rather than the 2 per cent. the market was then pressing for.

The reward for this was to be accused by the Opposition parties of having wasted vast sums of money. [Interruption.] I hear Opposition Members say that we did. I can now tell the House that the dollars that were sold from the reserves in September and October have subsequently all been repurchased—at a profit of some tens of millions of pounds. So much for wasting the taxpayer's money.

All Budgets are exercises in balance. What has surprised some, both inside and outside the House on this occasion, is that in striking the balance I leaned very heavily in the direction of prudence, limiting the reduction of taxation to what was compatible with a public sector borrowing requirement of only £3·9 billion, or 1 per cent. of gross domestic product.

A PSBR of this size, which we look to have secured for the first time this year, represents an important achievement. In his very cogent speech my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins) asked, "Why 1 per cent.?" I believe that it is necessary to get the PSBR down to a level which, even with zero inflation, would prevent public debt growing as a percentage of GDP. One per cent. does that. We are there, and from now on it is a matter of consolidation.

But this Budget is not just a matter of having achieved the spring double of significant tax cuts—including 2p off the basic rate—and a sharp reduction in planned public borrowing. With the autumn statement, in which I announced a sizeable increase in public spending, concentrated on the priority areas of health and education, it represents an unprecedented autumn and spring treble.

Meanwhile, the Opposition parties have been vying with each other as to how they would have used the money that was available to me. For £3 billion, the Leader of the Opposition informed the House, in his somewhat rambling reply to the Budget speech, I could have obtained a computer for every secondary school child. Maybe I could, but the real point is this: had they been in office, with their policies, they would never have been in that position in the first place. The money would not have been there; the resources would not have been there; there would have been no chance whatever.

For there is nothing fortuitous about it. It is the reward of years of vigorous, healthy growth with low inflation. And that is what is set to continue, assisted not merely by sticking to the overall economic strategy that has brought us this success but by the new measures contained in the Budget.

I cannot, inevitably, mention all the measures in the Budget. I noted that my hon. Friend the Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) and a number of my other hon. Friends referred to the capital gains of life assurance companies. We shall certainly be debating that matter in Committee. However, let me mention three important proposals among the others. The first is profit-related pay, to which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry devoted, quite rightly, a large part of his opening speech. That offers great hope for the future of our country. The second is the development of personal pensions, to which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services referred more fully in a major speech outside the House a few days ago. The third proposal relates to the measures to help small businesses, in particular the option for businesses with a turnover of up to £250,000—more than half of all traders registered for VAT—to switch to cash accounting. That is a most important change. In his speech on Wednesday the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook referred to this and said:

"We equally welcome the changes in VAT that the Chancellor proposed for small businesses. However, we must confess to bias because we proposed them all in last year's Finance Bill, but the Government voted them down." —[Official Report, 18 March 1987; Vol. 112, c. 948.]

I have to tell the House that there is not a shred of truth in that assertion. I challenge the right hon. Gentleman to provide chapter and verse for it. While he is thinking about it, I remind him that the Budget resolution covering cash accounting for VAT is Budget resolution No. 1, which I understand the Opposition propose to vote against tonight. Small businesses will be well aware of what the Opposition are doing.

There is, of course, an irreconcilable difference between the Government's economic policy and that of the Opposition parties. They would spend more, borrow more and tax more than we believe is compatible with a healthy economy and a free people. The main difference between the Opposition parties is that the Labour party, whether wisely or not, has been a great deal more specific.

As my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary has revealed during the debate, the Labour party's firm spending pledges now amount to an extra £34 billion a year of public expenditure. All that would have to be financed somehow. If from income tax, it would require the basic rate of tax to be more than doubled. A lot of it, it seems, would be financed by higher borrowing—some £6 billion more, according to the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook. That would be damaging enough, but it still——

Mr. Gould rose——

Mr. Lawson: Does the hon. Member for Dagenham dispute the £6 billion figure?

Mr. Gould rose——

Mr. Lawson: I have not given way. I shall give way in a moment. The hon. Member for Dagenham disputed that the Labour party is planning to borrow an extra £6 billion. Let me tell the House that the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook said that he believed that there should be a public sector financial deficit of some 4 per cent. of GDP. That is £16 billion—[Interruption.] GDP is over £400 billion, so 4 per cent. is a £16 billion public sector financial deficit. The public sector financial deficit in the Red Book is £9½ billion, so the difference is £6½ billion and I challenge the hon. Member for Dagenham to wriggle out of that.

Mr. Gould: It is interesting that the Chancellor was extremely anxious not to be answered on the question that he put to me and tried to wriggle out of the subject.

Let me make it clear. Our jobs programme costs a net annual amount to the Exchequer — the Chancellor wanted an answer, so let him listen to it—of £6 billion. I believe that even the Chancellor can work out that that is quite a different question from how that money is to be provided. The fact is—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gould: The Chancellor's Budget strategy and speech clearly show that it is possible to raise £6 billion for an investment programme of the kind that we propose without having to borrow anything like £6 billion.

Mr. Lawson: The hon. Gentleman has got his sums wrong again. It is clear that The Observer was right after all.

The Opposition could not have shown their hand more clearly than by their pledge, if given the chance, to take back the tax cuts I have been able to make in the Budget as a prelude to still more——[Interruption.]

Mr. Gould rose——

Mr. Lawson: They have chosen that battleground and in the weeks and months ahead we shall be more than happy to fight on it. But let me return for a moment to the overall framework of economic policy. Over the past seven years there has been a vigorous debate in this country about the conduct of fiscal and monetary policies—in particular, whether it was possible to have a sustained recovery of output without a fiscal stimulus.

The post-war neo-Keynesian approach was to try to stimulate economic performance by expansionary fiscal policy and accommodating monetary policy whenever there was any sign of weakening growth. In practice it provided at best short-term gains to output at the cost of long-term trouble: rising inflation and a succession of financial crises. That is why we turned our back on that approach.

Our critics have constantly changed their ground as events have confounded all their gloomy predictions. Initially, they said that it was quite impossible to reduce inflation by the policies we were pursuing, and then we did reduce inflation. They then said that inflation was falling only because we were in a self-perpetuating downward spiral and that as soon as growth resumed inflation would rise again. Growth has now been going on for the past six years and inflation has stayed low. When growth did begin they said that it was a flash in the pan and would soon peter out. It has not petered out; it has gone on for six successive years. Year after year, we were told that although growth this year might be better than expected, next year it would slow down. And so it went on. But what has been the outcome? Sustained growth against a background of falling inflation.

The debate about monetary and fiscal policy should now be over. Given the historically low Budget deficits of the past two years, there can be no clearer evidence of the bankruptcy of our critics' case than the suddenness with which those who accused us of starving the economy of demand now turn round and accuse us of generating excessive demand. They were wrong then, they are wrong now.

The plain fact is that ours is now the fastest growing major economy in Europe and it is continuing to grow ahead of the rest. Moreover, growth in this upswing has been balanced between consumption and investment whereas, under the Labour party, it was consumption that was growing fast, so far as anything was growing at all, and investment was growing at a mere fraction of the rate of growth during this Government. Fixed investment has gone up nearly 4 per cent. in the upswing under this Government, twice the average for the European Community as a whole and far ahead of the 1¼ per cent. that Labour achieved. The picture of a healthy flourishing economy emerges not only from the official statistics but from the CBI's industrial trends survey and from that of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, and all the other surveys, which show, too, that it is throughout the country, not just in the south-east.

Throughout the country, too, unemployment is falling. Indeed, the unemployment rate has fallen fastest over the past 12 months in Wales and the north. The same is true for long-term unemployment. Youth unemployment has fallen in every region over the past three years, again fastest in Wales, the north, the north-west and the west midlands. That is where unemployment has been falling fastest. The job pages of the regional newspapers bear that out.

To say that the Budget does nothing about unemployment, as the hon. Member for Dagenham said, is to miss the point completely. The solution to unemployment is a vigorous economy, and this Budget is reinforcing the vigorous economy that we have in this country. That is why unemployment is coming down and why it will continue to come down for the rest of this year. The plain fact is that British manufacturers, too, have an outstanding opportunity in 1987 with exports growing fast and a highly competitive pound.

The economy is now as sound and strong as it has been for a generation. It is the strength of the economy that has enabled us to announce in one and the same year higher spending on priorities, lower public borrowing, and lower taxation. Many Governments have been able to achieve one or even two out of the three, but no previous Government for decades has succeeded in all three. I commend the Budget to the House.

Question accordingly agreed to.

Resolved,

"That it is expedient to amend the law with respect to the National Debt and public revenue and to make further provision in connection with finance; but this Resolution does not extend to the making of any amendment with respect to value added tax so as to provide—

(a) for zero-rating or exempting any supply;

(b) for refunding any amount of tax;

(c) for varying the rate of that tax otherwise than in relation to all supplies and importations; or

(d) for relief other than relief applying to goods of whatever description or services of whatever description."

Mr. Speaker: I am now required under Standing Order No. 50(3) to put successively, without further debate, the Questions on each of the Ways and Means motions Nos. 2 to 52 and on the Procedure Resolutions, on all of which the Finance Bill is to be brought in. Instead of reading out each motion in full, I propose to follow the procedure used in recent years, that is to say, I will first read the title of the motion and then simply put the Question that the motion be agreed to. May I have the leave of the House to put motions 2 to 16 together? There does not appear to be any objection to that being done.

(1) In section 15, for subsections (1) to (3) there shall be substituted—

(2) The supplies within this subsection are the following supplies made or to be made by the taxable person in the course of furtherance of his business—

(a) taxable supplies;

(b) supplies outside the United Kingdom which would be taxable supplies if made in the United Kingdom;

(c) supplies which section 35 below provides are to be disregarded for the purposes of this Act and which would otherwise be taxable supplies.

(3) The Commissioners shall make regulations for securing a fair and reasonable attribution of input tax to supplies within subsection (2) above, and any such regulations may provide for—

(a) ermining a proportion by reference to which input tax for any prescribed accounting period is to be provisionally attributed to those supplies;

(a) a business, or part of a business, carried on by a taxable person is transferred as a going concern to a body corporate treated as a member of a group under section 29 above;

(b) on the transfer of the business or part, chargeable assets of the business are transferred to the body corporate; and

(c) the transfer of the assets is treated by virtue of section 3(3) (c) above as neither a supply of goods nor a supply of services.

(2) Subsection (4) below shall not apply if the representative member of the group is entitled to credit for the whole of the input tax on supplies to it and importation by it—

(a) during the prescribed accounting period in which the assets are transferred, and

(b) during any longer period to which regulations under section 15(3) (b) above relate and in which the assets are transferred.

[Mr. Speaker]

(4) The chargeable assets shall be treated for the purposes of this Act as being, on the day on which they are transferred, both supplied to the representative member of the group for the purpose of its business and supplied by that member in the course or furtherance of its business.

(5) A supply treated under subsection (4) above as made by a representative member shall not be taken into account as a supply made by him when determining the allowance of input tax in his case under section 15 above.

(6) The value of a supply treated under subsection (4) above as made to or by a representative member shall be taken to the open market value of the chargeable assets.

(7) For the purposes of this section, the open market value of any chargeable assets shall be taken to be the price that would be paid on a sale (on which no tax is payable) between a buyer and a seller who are not in such a relationship as to affect the price.

(8) The Commissioners may reduce the tax chargeable by virtue of subsection (4) above in a case where they are satisfied that the person by whom the chargeable assets are transferred has not received credit for the full amount of input tax arising on the acquisition by him of the chargeable assets.

(9) For the purposes of this section, assets are chargeable assets if their supply in the United Kingdom by a taxable person in the course or furtherance of his business would be a taxable supply (and not a zero-rated supply).".

10.33 pm

Mr. Robin Squire (Hornchurch): I am sure that Conservative Members who remain for the debate will pay full testimony to the importance, although we recognise that half an hour is scarcely long enough, of the issues that need exploring. I welcome and pay tribute to my right hon. Friend the Member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont) and my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey), who are here because they strongly support what I am saying and who, as hon. Members are aware, are unable to contribute to the debate, by the rules of the House. However, they have been foremost in their defence of the existing education arrangements in Kingston and are very concerned about the proposals that have occasioned the debate.

I also welcome my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Brunivels), who, like me, has shared an experience about which more in a moment. I welcome also my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn), who will be answering the debate as the Minister, but I particularly welcome my hon. Friend the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold), who in a previous incarnation was deputy leader of the council in Kingston and who knows much about the affairs of Kingston. Her presence is testament of her concern about the matter that we are debating. Finally—this may seem like a long list, but we have a large number of hon. Members here, I pay tribute to my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, East (Mr. Knowles), who is a former leader of the council in Kingston. It is my expectation, should they catch your eye, Mr. Speaker — you never know — that my hon. Friends the hon. Members for Leicester, East and for Nottingham, East will contribute to the debate.

Since people have come up to me in the last 48 hours to ask why I, whose constituency is a little away from Kingston, have chosen this subject for debate, I must explain. The link is that I spent five years as a pupil of one of the schools at the centre of re-organisation—Tiffin boys' school. I share that experience with my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels), although I think that he spent less time at the school. That experience enables me to attest to the quality of education at that school. Some would say that my education has gone ever beackwards' but it is a great tribute to the quality of teaching and to the pupils themselves.

I understand that the Minister cannot comment on the details, because he has a quasi-judicial role. We would be wrong to expect a detailed rejection or acceptance, but I hope that he will note the genuine concern that I express on behalf of thousands of people in the area covered by the Kingston education authority.

I shall explain the background to the debate. Kingston education authority has eight secondary schools, two of which are selective—Tiffin boys school and Tiffin girls school. Six are not selective and include two Roman Catholic voluntary aided schools, one for girls and one for boys.

Following the election in May 1986, the Conservatives lost control to what some might call an unholy alliance of Labour, Liberal and SDP, with the Liberals in the van. In due course the new authority issued to every household a Change". This allegedly was to take account of and tackle the problem of falling rolls — a problem which is common to many if not all parts of the country.

A number of problems arise from that document. First, no details are supplied of the costs of the various options. A separate document is available which gives details of costs ranging between nil and £6 million. The innocent, let alone the suspicious, might query why those details were not circulated with the document. One might think that it was because some of the options are expensive. There is no option for the status quo. Whatever choice parents are offered they cannot say that they want things to remain the same, whatever the cost.

There is no opportunity for the two Roman Catholic schools—Richard Challoner and Holy Cross—to remain separate. Every option in the document requires them to amalgamate. That does not provide an opportunity for individual opinion to be reflected.

Above all, no educational justification is advanced for ending the selective education policy. There is no option which allows the continuation of selective education. That is ironic, because, as my hon. Friend the Minister said in an excellent speech in his constituency on 7 December 1985:

> "The National Council for Education Standards concludes from their study of the 1981 and 1982 results that better examination results are associated with the selective system of schools, whether it be a fully selective system of Grammar and secondary moderns, or a mixture of selective and comprehensive schools."

Most opinion polls confirm that that is also the view of the electorate. Despite that it seems that the leaders of Kingston council have been determined to fly in the face of that opinion, as illustrated by the document that they have issued.

What has been the response to that document? Fortunately, a campaign has been launched, the Kingston education campaign, and it has circulated its document widely. I am happy to say that that document makes good some of the omissions in the council document. It tackles and punctures some of the myths that were apparent both in the document and the local reaction to that document.

The first myth that is tackled is the suggestion that, in some way, Kingston's education standards are in total inferior—I stress in total—in comparison with those of neighbouring education authorities, especially Richmond. The campaign document points out, using Department of Education and Science figures, that the number of pupils in Kingston attaining five or more O-level passes is 33·6 per cent. compared to 25·9 per cent. in Richmond, which has a fully comprehensive system. Moreover, if one considers the other end of the scale — those who may have failed in the education system—it is apparent that in Kingston, 7·6 per cent. of pupils leave with no qualifications and in Richmond that figure is 10·5 per cent. Those figures do not suggest a declining or poor educational system. I have already explained that my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton cannot speak in this debate, but he has asked me to specifically point out that parents in his constituency, where all the secondary schools are non-selective, are most alarmed at the chaos that reorganisation will cause to those excellent schools.

The second myth to be perpetrated is that grammar schools are receiving a disproportionate share of the area's set up by Kingston council show that in 1985-86, on a cost per pupil basis, the average for all secondary schools was £1,143; for Tiffin boys it was £1,106 and for Tiffin girls it was £1,012—that figure happens to be the smallest sum per pupil for any secondary school in the borough. On the basis of those figures, any suggestion that the two selective schools are dominating or receiving excessive allocation is obviously groundless.

The third point worth emphasising from the leaflet is the issue raised by the alliance in its regular publications —I believe that they are called "Focus"—to the effect that there was no certainty about when the Tiffin schools would close and that it was only a rumour. Every option set out in the council document either requires the closure of one or both of those schools or a substantial, irreversible change in the nature of them. It is important that that is placed on the record.

All the statistics show that, of the 104 educational authorities in the country, Kingston is regularly in the top five on the basis of its examination results. Those are the results of all the schools. It should in no way be thought that I am raising a standard for two schools in the borough. I believe that Kingston's record — a record covering all the schools — is good enough to stand comparison with that of any education authority.

I wish to put on record the achievements of Tiffin boys and Tiffin girls schools. In 1986 Tiffin boys' percentage pass rate at advanced level was 85·1 per cent. Over the past 15 years the average pass rate at advanced level has been 87 per cent. and in that time no fewer than 1,418 pupils have gained the minimum university entrance requirement of two subject passes at advanced level. In 1980 the pass rate of 94 per cent. at A-level was 20 per cent., higher than the average for the entire country and 10 per cent. higher than the average for all the Headmasters' Conference schools—broadly accepted as the public schools.

The percentage pass rate in 1986 at ordinary level was 78·5 per cent., with 149 boys gaining 971 subject passes, of which 634 were either A or B grades. At ordinary level in the same year, 30 boys gained 10 or more subject passes each. Three boys achieved an A grade in at least eight subjects. Over the past 15 years the average pass rate at ordinary level has been 80·8 per cent., with more than 1,000 subject passes in five of the past six years. During the academic year ended July, more than 100 boys left the school to go on to degree courses at either polytechnics or universities, and that has been the story for many years.

Over the years, Tiffin has regularly been among the 20 leading schools in the country in the gaining of academic awards. Last year 16 young men, and this year 15, have gone on to Oxbridge courses. These figures bear comparison with most schools in the country, let alone most state schools.

There is another side to education at Tiffin boys school. It has international renown for its choral music. As for instrumental music, it has more bands than I thought could exist in a school. It has a 60-piece orchestra, a brass band, a concert band, a recorder group, a swing band, a string quartet and a piano quartet. The school is renowned for the quality of its dramatic productions. The rugby team is one of the best in the south of England. A few years ago it was seen and rated by Rugby World as one of the top six teams in the country. The school enjoys an excellence in cricket and rowing, and the list continues. There is an all-round development of excellence among the Tiffin girls school has recently been the subject of an HMI report. I need only say to my hon. Friend the Minister that it was a glowing report following a major inspection in 1986. At advanced level, 77 girls sat examinations in 229 subjects, achieving 205 passes, 47 per cent. at the top two grades. Of the upper sixth, 80 per cent. went on to universities or polytechnics, six girls going to Oxbridge. At ordinary level, there was a pass rate of 92 per cent. among fifth formers, an average per fifth-form girl of nine subject passes. I re-emphasise that this was achieved at the school with the least resources per head of pupil in the borough.

What are my reactions to this background as a former Kingstonian who is now in exile? The argument cannot be confined to the views of those who are pro comprehensive and those who are anti. In my earlier existence as a councillor in another borough, I voted to support comprehensive schemes on their merits. Surely that is how education issues should be viewed. We should not take political lines. We should ask whether the scheme has education merit in the area that is concerned.

In the scheme that is proposed, no opportunity will be given to parents in Kingston to opt for selection. Secondly, there is a necessity to review falling rolls. There is a danger because a closure, or closures, is or are being dressed up as a reason to end selection. In many other areas education authorities have seen the need to close one or more schools, and they have done so without challenging and changing the fibre of the education that is offered within the authority. One or two of the options which have been circulated involve large comprehensive schools which, if adopted, would lead to even more closures than might be blamed upon the ending of selection.

Thirdly, I note that recently eight new governors have been appointed to Tiffin girls school, all of whom, by pure chance happen to be Labour or alliance councillors. Will they work to save that school? Will they work to enable the sort of results and the other achievements, which time does not allow me to develop, to be retained, or will they sit in on what might be the school's wake? I suspect that we are facing something that we have become used to seeing. That is, the usual dogma from the Labour party, which clearly is now shared by the Liberal party and which is simply put: if everyone cannot share such an education, no one will have it.

I understand that Councillor Harris, who is the Liberal education chairman for Kingston, is quoted as saying at a council meeting:

"85 per cent. of the pupils in Kingston are suffering, education should not be treated as a political football."

If what I have read out is suffering, I hesitate to describe what some other education authorities must be getting on the basis of the Kingston results. To play political football, someone has to kick off. I argue that the kick-off has been conducted by the current council leadership. I understand that Councillor Harris was fortunate enough to have the advantage of a public school education. I do not begrudge him that. Conservative Members are not in the business of doing anything other than congratulating those who have the fortune to be born of parents who have the resources to pay for that type of education. But those of us who did not go and who could never have been sent to a public school would like others coming behind us with a modest financial background to continue to have the chance to have an excellent education. It may be true that other people in the past few years through their own changes, but one problem which is well known in Kingston is that, if the proposals are accepted, Tiffin boys school at least is likely to move into the independent sector. That is not a gain for the state sector. It means simply that, in future, most of the intake there will be governed more by the pocket than by ability. If that is a gain, I do not see it.

Another alliance councillor, Councillor Mrs. Philpott, at the same council meeting on 8 July to which I referred said:

"This is a positive and exciting time, history is being made."

Perhaps, after all the discussion, the decision will be made to end the proud record of the Kingston education authority. I stress Kingston education authority—I do not mean just the two schools. I submit that that is not the sort of history that many people want made and that they want the education authority, even now, to heed the many thousands of electors in Kingston who are worried about and opposed to these proposals. Through the presence tonight of their elected representatives, they wish the House to note that fact and to urge my hon. Friend the Minister, if he receives these proposals, to give due regard to the protests and fears which I have expressed.

Mr. Michael Knowles (Nottingham, East): My hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) was kind enough to mention some of my qualifications to speak in the debate. For 12 years I was a councillor in the royal borough of Kingston upon Thames, for nine of them as leader. A further qualification is not mine—it is my daughters'. All three were educated in that system and not one attended Tiffin girls' school. I make that last point as an answer to the excuse offered for attempting to destroy these grammar schools—that their existence denies other pupils a fair opportunity. That is untrue and nonsense and should be denounced as such.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch mentioned the names of other hon. Members. One further name should be mentioned. I refer to the man who devised Kingston's system when the new London borough came into existence, Alderman Bill Marshall. Others have held the post of education chairman. In a real sense, as he devised the system, Mr. Marshall was the education chairman. He was the kind of figure in morality, intellect and character, that is not often found in local politics and perhaps not often found in national politics, either. Kingston's system was devised as a system. To delete Tiffin schools would bring at best, a period of chaos, and no better result overall in the end. That has been the experience.

For nine years, I, as leader, defended the system not only because of the Tiffin schools but because the system as a whole defended standards—a view that education means that children should be able to read, write and calculate. Social integration, peace studies, et al are nonsense and should not be given house room in an education system. Unlike other Conservative authorities, we preferred to fight in the first ditch rather than the last ditch in defence of standards.

The argument is between those who believe in standards in education and those who do not. The end result of disagreement with the views expressed by my hon. of the road. It will be an irony if, when national Government at last accepts its responsibilities to education, such a system that has stood for over 25 years like a rock against a tide of illiteracy should now be swept away.

I certainly do not expect my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State to mouth the platitudes that we have heard year in and year out about locally administered national systems. I had to deal with Labour Governments and various Secretaries of State—they passed away as Labour Secretaries of State for Education — who attempted to lean on us and twist our arms when we defended the system. I expect no less from my right hon. and hon. Friends when the roles are reversed. I issue the warning most seriously. We should not necessarily accept the views of the education world and its officials. They, too, are part of the education world's conspiracy against good schools of any kind and would advise against helping. If that be not true, why have so many good schools of all kinds been closed with, at best, the supine acquiescence of Conservative Secretaries of State? Here is a chance to take a stand to show that the tide has turned. If talk of standards is to be shown as meaning something more than mere words, here is the opportunity. If not here, where? If not now, when?

10.58 pm

Mr. Peter Bruinvels (Leicester, East): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on bringing forward the debate. There is no doubt that grammar schools are under threat. There are only 150 grammar schools left in the country. It is particularly sad that the Liberals should launch such an attack on the greatest grammar schools left in the country. I refer to Tiffin boys and girls schools.

Small schools have always been the best. There are 11 secondary schools left in Kingston, with 8,157 pupils. All are liable to major alteration, as my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey) said on LBC this morning. Why should there be any alteration? What is wrong with Tiffin boys school? It has 823 pupils at the moment, with 232 in the sixth form. Tiffin girls school has 741 pupils. Both are schools of excellence. They have delivered good results over the years. There has been hard work. There have been caring and dedicated teaching staff, led first by Brigadier J. J. Harper and, secondly, by John Roberts. The demise, if it is to come, will come in September 1989. We must fight to avoid that.

Today the London Daily News reported that my right hon. Friend the Member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont) has said that there would be educational vandalism if Tiffin boys school were to go. I attended Tiffin boys school for four terms. Its results were the best in the country. The pass rate for O-levels in 1986 was 971, or 79 per cent. Of those, 227 achieved A-grades. The pass rate for A-levels in 1986 was 286, or 85 per cent., and 56 of the 286 achieved A-grades.

There have been 25 years of outstanding results. I attend the speech days; they are marvellous. There is still a strong tradition in Kingston, for which we must fight. There is nothing wrong about excellence. It is good that our young people can be trained so well. It is also good that there should be proper examination procedures. Those schools must not be threatened. They must survive.

11 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science (Mr. Robert Dunn): I am delighted to respond to this short debate on the proposed reorganisation of education in Kingston upon Thames. In so doing, I should like to welcome to the Treasury Bench my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science, the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Mitcham and Morden (Mrs. Rumbold), my right hon. Friend the Member for Kingston upon Thames (Mr. Lamont) and my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey).

I begin by congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on his success in obtaining this Adjournment debate. As an old Tiffinian, I know that he retains a great interest in the fortunes and future of the school. I have noted the great concern that he has expressed so well tonight. I congratulate also my hon. Friends the Members for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels) and for Nottingham, East (Mr. Knowles) on their short contributions.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch will know and understand, it is important at this stage for the Secretary of State to avoid prejudging the issues, should any proposals come before him with regard to the organisation of schools in any community. Therefore, my hon. Friend will not expect me to say anything about the particular case that is the subject of this debate. I know that he will accept my assurance that I have listened carefully to what has been said. I shall look forward to receiving any deputation, if and when proposals are made. I assure the House that when proposals are made we treat them very seriously indeed because we are under a legal duty to act fairly. In other words, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State must judge each set of proposals on its merits and take into account both the arguments of those making the proposals and the views of any objectors.

In conclusion, I congratulate my hon. Friend on his success in raising this subject for debate.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at two minutes past Eleven o'clock.

Oral Answers to Questions

DEFENCE

Trident

1. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs in the north-east are (a) directly or (b) indirectly dependent on the Trident programme.

6. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the number of jobs in Scotland which are directly and indirectly dependent on the Trident programme.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence Procurement (Mr. Archie Hamilton): Mr. Speaker, may I first apologise for the absence of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, who is on an official visit to the Far East?

Estimates of the total number of United Kingdom jobs dependent on the Trident programme are not made on a regional basis. However, it is estimated that the Trident programme will create on average 7,500 direct and 6,000 indirect jobs over its procurement period. Construction work alone in Scotland on Trident facilities will directly employ over 2,500 in its peak year.

Mr. Fallon: Is my hon. Friend aware that about 800 men at Cleveland Bridge in my constituency have been working on the cradle construction for the Trident programme and that they are bidding for further work at Faslane and Coulport?

Is he further aware that the number one fear in Darlington is that an incoming Labour Government might cancel the Trident programme and put an end to that work?

Mr. Hamilton: I am aware of my hon. Friend's constituency interest. We must bear in mind that, although there are many direct jobs, a significant number of indirect jobs are also involved. I am sure that my hon. Friend's constituents are as concerned as anybody that the programme should be continued.

Mr. Hirst: I am grateful for my hon. Friend's reply. Does he not find it remarkable that the Opposition parties are prepared, not only to gamble with the defence of this country, but to abandon a project upon which thousands of jobs depend, especially in the west of Scotland?

Mr. Hamilton: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. About 4,500 Ministry of Defence civilian employees currently work on the deterrent at Coulport, Faslane and Rosyth. If it comes to cancelling Polaris and Trident, the work for 2,000 employees will be lost in Rosyth unless it is replaced by other nuclear submarine work.

Mr. Douglas: Will the Minister reflect that his strictures about job losses, particularly in Scotland, come ill from his mouth, when his Government have lost nearly 20,000 jobs in Scotland because of the mismanagement of North sea oil?

Mrs. Kellett-Bowman: Ask a question about Trident.

Mr. Douglas: They will lose a lot more with Trident. On the question of Trident, will the Minister confirm that the construction work at Rosyth is not exclusively for Trident but is for dual-streaming and could be used for SSNs and SSKs?

Mr. Hamilton: On the second part of the hon. Gentleman's question, it is certainly true that it could be so used, but a reason why we are having to put in those facilities is the much larger size of Trident submarines. Therefore, they need extra facilities.

The Government cannot be blamed for the fall in the price of oil across the world and the decline of the North sea oil industry. The Opposition could be blamed for having policies that will destroy jobs in Scotland.

Mr. McWilliam: Will the Minister say how many jobs will be put at risk, particularly in the Royal Ordnance factories, at Swan Hunter, and at Marconi, because of the Trident's impact on the defence procurement programme?

Mr. Hamilton: No jobs are being put at risk in that direction at the moment. We have a large ordering programme.

Mr. Franks: My hon. Friend has referred to job losses in the north-east and Scotland. Will he note that in Barrow over 4,000 people, or 30 per cent. of the work force, are currently employed on the Trident programme, and that by 1990 75 per cent., or more than 9,000 people, will be employed on that programme? What are the prospects for those jobs if an incoming Labour or alliance/Labour Government cancel Trident overnight? What will 9,000 of my constituents do?

Mr. Hamilton: I am afraid that the impact on my hon. Friend's constituency will be devastating, and whatever plans there are to substitute that work they will take so long to come through that in the short-term those people will find themselves on the street.

Mr. Ashdown: Does the Minister realise that whatever jobs are tied to Trident in defined communities in Britain they are as nothing to the jobs that have been and will be lost as a result of the cut in conventional expenditure in the rest of Britain's defence industries? Does he realise that 1,800 jobs have already been lost at Westland as a result of the Government——

Mr. Speaker: Order. That may well be, but the question is about Trident.

Mr. Ashdown: Does the Minister realise that the Trident expenditure has already cost 1,800 jobs in Yeovil and will cost more, and that the people of Yeovil have nothing to thank Trident for, because we are bearing the first fruits of this bitter pill?

Mr. Hamilton: There is no direct relationship between Trident and the orders at Westland.

Sir Antony Buck: Does my hon. Friend agree that the cancellation of Trident would, obviously, be serious for job losses? If Trident were cancelled, does he agree that it would be even more serious in terms of the destabilisation of NATO and our position in it?

Mr. Hamilton: I could not agree more with my hon. and learned Friend. There is no doubt that our commitment to our independent deterrent is, indeed, important.

Mr. Denzil Davies: The Minister knows well that 95 per cent. of the people employed in the defence industries in the north-east and Scotland are producing non-nuclear defence equipment. With the cuts that must come in the defence budget falling on non-nuclear defence equipment to pay for Trident, far more people will lose their jobs than those now employed on Trident. Why does the Minister not admit those facts?

Mr. Hamilton: It is difficult to admit that when the cost of Trident is falling.

United States Secretary for Defence

2. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he next plans to meet the United States Secretary for Defence to discuss nuclear defence policy.

The Minister of State for the Armed Forces (Mr. John Stanley): My right hon. Friend next expects to meet the United States Secretary of Defence at the spring meeting of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group.

Mr. Alton: Now that the American authorities have admitted that the W79 nuclear shell has been deployed in West Germany, and that as long ago as Montebello the decision was taken to modernise battlefield nuclear weapons, how can the Minister justify the wholly contradictory, deceitful replies given from the Government Dispatch Box to my hon. Friends——

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. Gentleman withdraw the word deceitful, please?

Mr. Alton: I shall withdraw deceitful. How can the Minister justify the replies that he and his colleagues gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright), for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) and for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) that no such decisions had been taken?

Mr. Stanley: I can certainly justify exactly what has been said, and I hope that the hon. Gentleman will listen carefully to what has been said on that particular issue. At the Montebello meeting of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group in 1983 NATO agreed both a major reduction in the number of its theatre nuclear weapons in Europe and the need for possible improvements to ensure the effectiveness of the remaining stockpile. That was clearly set out in the communiqué issued at the Montebello meeting. Since then SACEUR has put forward his proposals for these improvements and these have been pursued with the individual nations concerned. But, as Defence Ministers have made clear to the House, no decisions affecting the modernisation of theatre nuclear weapons in service with British forces have yet been made. That is what we have said, that is correct, and it is completely straightforward.

Mr. Bill Walker: Will my right hon. Friend ask the Secretary of State to remind the American Defence Secretary that during the deployment of cruise and Pershing missiles, which are important to the twin-track negotiations, the alliance parties and the Labour party voted in this House against their deployment? Although today they try to pretend otherwise, that was how they acted at that time.

Mr. Stanley: I am grateful to my hon. Friend. He is of course entirely correct. Although some other parties in the House have sought to re-write the history of their actions in this House, only the Government have consistently adhered to the deployment of ground launched cruise missiles and Pershing 2 without which no INF negotiations would be taking place at the moment.

Mr. Duffy: Will the Minister remind his right hon. Friend, when he next meets the United States Defence Secretary, that the new Chairmen of both of the Armed Services Committees in Congress, Mr. Les Aspin and Sam Nunn, are a good deal more nuclear-allergic than their predecessors? They probably typify a growing understanding throughout the Alliance of the importance of early INF agreement in Europe, about which the Prime Minister should be careful not to appear to be quibbling or dragging her feet?

Mr. Stanley: In both the Republican and Democratic parties in the United States there is a total understanding that we can deter a nuclear threat only with nuclear weapons. The only allergy to nuclear defence exists on the Opposition Front Bench. They are undermining the whole of the NATO posture of a combination of nuclear and conventional deterrence?

Mr. Nicholas: Does my right hon. Friend not find it slightly strange to be questioned about the detail of nuclear policy by the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton), bearing in mind that he represents a party in which 83 per cent. of the prospective parliamentary candidates are committed to unilateralism?

Mr. Stanley: I am most grateful to my hon. Friend for reminding us of that very important statistic. While we are on the subjects of polls, I noticed a very interesting poll produced in the Sunday press last Sunday. The sample was asked "Which party do you trust to make the right decisions about defence, nuclear weapons and disarmament?" In reply, 42 per cent. said the Conservatives, only 20 per cent. said Labour and the Liberal—SDP alliance was the least trusted of all parties, with only 15 per cent. support.

Mr. Denzil Davies: It is quite clear from the Minister of State's replies that his answers are now written by the politburo in Smith Square and are not really Government answers at all, or perhaps they are written by the chairman of the Conservative party himself. To return to the question, there is a certain amount of confusion. I do not charge the right hon. Gentleman with deceit. However, there is a certain amount of confusion between what was said in this House and what is said by some American officials. Will the right hon. Gentleman clarify the position? As I understand it, a decision was taken——

Mr. Richard Holt (Langbaurgh): Put the question.

Mr. Davies: I will put my question in my own way.

As I understand it a general decision was taken at Montebello to modernise the remaining NATO theatre or tactical nuclear weapons. Is the Minister of State saying that British tactical nuclear weapons and those American nuclear weapons that could be available to British forces in Germany were excluded from the Montebello agreement, or included? If they were included, a decision in principle has been taken.

Mr. Stanley: The right hon. Gentleman must carefully study what I have said. The position is absolutely clear. A decision in favour of the modernisation of the residual stockpile was taken at Montebello as part of the agreement. However, as for the implementation of that decision in relation to theatre nuclear weapons in service with British forces, no decisions have yet been made.

Crown Proceedings Act 1947

3. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions he has met representatives of the Atomic Veterans Associations and of the Section Ten Abolition Group; and if he has any plans to meet them in the future.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces (Mr. Roger Freeman): My right hon. Friend met a delegation including members of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association and the Section Ten Abolition Group on 20 February 1986 and I received a petition concerning section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 from members of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association on 13 November 1986. I understand that my noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement has agreed to meet representatives of the BNTVA.

Mr. Ashley: The Minister will be aware that both those organisations are concerned with the welfare of ex-service and service personnel. Will he recognise that those ex-service men and women who have been disabled by negligence will continue their fight for the same right to sue for compensation as is to be given to present members of the armed services? Will he further recognise, on the question of bullying and brutality in the Army—another aspect of negligence—that hon. Members on both sides of the House have——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot relate that to atomic veterans.

Mr. Ashley: I suggest that brutality in the armed forces is an aspect of negligence. Therefore, in so far as officers are being negligent, and hon. Members on both sides of the House have additional evidence that that brutality is taking place, will the Minister now undertake to meet a deputation of hon. Members from both sides of the House to discuss that evidence?

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and I have made it plain that bullying and any mistreatment of soldiers is not and never has been tolerated in the British armed forces. My right hon. Friend and I are always happy to meet hon. Members and delegations to discuss any topic.

Mr. Cartwright: If the Government honestly believe that no British service man suffered injury as a result of the British nuclear weapons test, why do the Minister and his colleagues seem so reluctant to have that view tested in the courts?

Mr. Freeman: The announcement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 8 December last involving the Government's support for repeal of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 showed a welcome change in law and procedure. That change, removing the burden from service men who could not sue for negligence, must be for the future and is certainly not retrospective.

Mr. McNamara: With regard to the atomic experiment veterans, as the Government have been conducting only a statistical exercise, may we now have a firm date when the results of that exercise will be given to the House? Is the hon. Gentleman aware that, although we accept that no degree of bullying should be tolerated in the British Army, there is great concern about the recent number of cases which have come forward? It is necessary that the Government should not only conduct an internal inquiry, but should publish the results of whatever inquiry is carried out and say what steps they will take to eradicate any possibilities of it in the future.

Mr. Freeman: Any complaints to do with the mistreatment of soldiers are always fully and properly investigated by the Ministry of Defence. I said on Second Reading of the Crown Proceedings (Armed Forces) Bill, the purpose of which is to abolish section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act, that we expect the report on the survey carried out by the National Radiological Protection Board to be received by the end of this calendar year. That is our expectation.

Low-Flying Aircraft

4. Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the notification and investigation procedures regarding low-flying aircraft incidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The investigation of low-flying aircraft incidents is a centralised responsibility within the Ministry of Defence. All instances where there is a prima facie case of a breach of low-flying regulations are subjected to full investigation. These are very thorough and I am satisfied with the operation of this procedure.

Mr. Kennedy: I thank the Minister for that reply. I appreciate the efforts that he is making in his office to discuss with hon. Members many issues relating to low-flying aircraft activity which constituents raise with us. It has been suggested to me that last year, for example, the Ministry of Defence, in response to inquiries by The Observer, stated that there had been no collisions involving American F111 jets. That subsequently proved not to be the case, according to the Minister's recent written answer to me. Will the hon. Gentleman consider this matter, because genuine confusion seems to have been created in the public's mind by some of the public utterances of Ministry of Defence officials?

Mr. Freeman: Conservative Members are very proud of the great skill of our RAF pilots in low flying, and I am sure that that sentiment is shared by all hon. Members. The RAF pilots perform a difficult job. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will join me in complimenting the RAF.

As for The Observer article, if the hon. Gentleman cares to table a question or to write to me about it, I shall certainly have the matter investigated and respond to him.

Sir Hector Monro: Although I accept absolutely the necessity for low-flying training by the RAF, will my hon. Friend study the low-flying areas and consider whether they can be extended so that the frequency of visits by low-flying aircraft can be spread rather more widely?

Mr. Freeman: It was the last Labour Government who, quite correctly, changed the basis of the low-flying areas. That change was implemented some eight or nine years ago and involved permitting low flying anywhere in the country except over large towns and air traffic control zones. I do not hold out any hope to my hon. Friend for any basic change in that system.

Mr. Home Robertson: How many complaints have been made to the Department about such flights taking place at excessively low levels or at excessive speed? How many of those complaints have led to disciplinary action against MOD staff?

Mr. Freeman: Over the past five years we have received approximately 5,000 complaints per annum from the public about alleged low-flying incidents. The hon. Gentleman will be aware that the low-flying restrictions only permit pilots to fly down to 250 ft. I recently answered a question on the number of disciplinary actions taken. However, I shall write to the hon. Gentleman with the details to refresh his memory of the answer that I gave.

Small Firms Advice Division

5. Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many small firms have consulted the Ministry of Defence small firms advice division; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Over 500 in the four months since my noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement and my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for small businesses announced the MOD small firms initiative. The initiative is designed to increase competitive opportunities and to secure best value for money. The small firms advice division advises small firms seeking to penetrate the defence market individually, and through regional seminars, about MOD procurement policies.

Mr. Stevens: I thank my hon. Friend for that reply. This service is a great encouragement to small firms in a wide range of areas. How many small firms have taken advantage of the opportunities offered by the MOD small firms advice service to get involved in defence research?

Mr. Hamilton: One part of this initiative is the small firms research initiative, which provides oppportunities for small firms with ideas for new and innovative products and processes to apply for a larger share of defence research funds. To date about 150 firms have been involved.

Mr. MacKenzie: How many of those small firms have been placed on the list set up by his noble Friend Lord Trefgarne for the purchase of equipment?

Mr. Hamilton: I believe that the figure is about 200.

Mr. Watts: Will my hon. Friend consider making it a requirement for prime contractors to pay their small subcontractors more promptly? However good the work of the small firms advice service, the late payment of bills by main contractors to small subcontractors is a major cause of concern.

Mr. Hamilton: In principle the Ministry has no authority to intervene, because the matter is between the prime contractor and the subcontractor or supplier. However, there is a code of practice for competitive subcontracting that encourages prime contractors to pass to subcontractors payment terms no less favourable than those applying to the main contractor. Our payment terms are very good.

French Defence Minister

8. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the French Defence Minister; and what was discussed.

Mr. Stanley: My right hon. Friend visited France on 9 and 10 March. He discussed a range of issues of mutual defence interest with M. Giraud. I have placed in the Library a copy of my right hon. Friend's opening statement at the press conference he held with M. Giraud.

Mr. Meadowcroft: Is the Government's wavering attitude towards the INF talks the result of the French Government's influence, or are we seeking to influence the French Government in favour of a zero-zero option? Surely that would be a good price to pay to remove all intermediate nuclear weapons from Europe? How far does co-operation with the French have a serious influence upon our attitude towards those talks?

Mr. Stanley: The policy of the British Government has been entirely consistent—as has been the policy of the other NATO countries—towards the INF agreement. We are seeking to foster co-operation with the French in a variety of ways.

With regard to wavering, I am surprised that the hon. Gentleman has not addressed himself to the problem that he faces. Previously he has been campaigning enthusiastically against nuclear weapons, partly as a member of the national executive of CND, but now, presumably, he will be doing much more than wavering by campaigning enthusiastically for the Liberal-SDP Eurobomb

Mr. Conway: Does my right hon. Friend agree that if the Government were to accept the Liberal party's advice to purchase the French M4 and M5 missiles the cancellation costs of Trident would be in excess of £3 billion? Given the present vogue for massage, would that be a gross massage of public expenditure?

Mr. Stanley: I agree with my hon. Friend that that is one of the many unrealistic and impractical options that the Liberal-SDP alliance has put forward as an alternative to Trident. It is our assessment that if we were to take that route the time scale would not meet our needs and the costs would be substantially greater.

Mr. Soames: Does my right hon. Friend agree that it is a source of particular pleasure that so much excellent progress has been made with the French Government in the recent talks? Does he agree also that this progress is suitable as a further platform for strengthening European security?

Mr. Stanley: My hon. Friend is right. We are encouraged by the progress that we have made with our French allies. We hope to deepen the dialogue that we have had with them.

Mr. Marlow: Is it not the case that the French would be happy and content to have a European nuclear deterrent provided that there was only one finger on the trigger, and that finger happened to be French? If that is what the Liberal-SDP alliance wants, why does it not tell us that loud and clear?

Mr. Stanley: I agree with my hon. Friend that the command and control arrangements that are implicit in what the Liberal-SDP alliance puts forward are completely incompatible with our own requirements. The French prize highly the independence of their own deterrent, as we do ours.

Battlefield Nuclear Weapons (Europe)

9. Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the effects upon the British Army of the Rhine of NATO's possible use of battlefield nuclear weapons in Europe.

Mr. Stanley: The effects of nuclear weapons would be entirely dependent on the number and the yield of the weapons used. However, the central purpose of the possession of nuclear weapons is to ensure that a potential aggressor cannot contemplate either conventional or nuclear attack. That policy has had more than 40 years of uninterrupted success in western Europe.

Mr. Clelland: Will the Minister admit that the decision was taken in Montebello in 1983 to modernise battlefield nuclear shells, which are potentially lethal to British troops at the front and which are already in the NATO stockpile? Does he agree that Ministers have misled the House on this issue over the years and that they should now resign?

Mr. Stanley: The hon. Gentleman is wholly incorrect. If he wants to pursue the issue, I hope that he will address himself to how the Labour party, with its non-nuclear policy, will provide any sort of protection for the British Army of the Rhine.

Mr. Mates: Is not the factor of the shorter-range nuclear weapons in Europe one of the most important aspects of any agreement to be reached on INF? Would we not be wrong to go ahead blindly into an INF pact without addressing the problem? Will my right hon. Friend be reassured by the fact that most people in Britian are just as worried about the Russian preponderance of small-sized nuclear weapons as they are about medium ones?

Mr. Stanley: My hon. Friend is entirely correct. It would certainly make no sense at all to enter into an INF agreement if we did not introduce some constraints over the shorter-range Soviet systems, in which the Soviet Union has an enormous superiority and which it can use perfectly well to cover those targets that are currently covered by its long-range INF forces. That is why we have made it quite clear that collateral constraints on some of the short-range systems are an integral part of any sensible INF agreement.

Mr. Douglas: That is nonsense. You will regret saying that, Stanley.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Douglas: He did not mean that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not know what the Minister meant.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Does the Minister accept that had it not been for Dan Plesch's work under freedom of information legislation in the United States of America, Britain would never have known of the modernisation programme that has taken place? Is he aware that I have a book with me that sets out three years of ambigous answers from Ministers and ambigous letters to individual hon. Members, all in the language of ambiguity and all trying to deny that the modernisation process has been undertaken? Why is it that the Government have sought to mislead Parliament for three and a half years in this way? Why did they not tell the truth after Montebello?

Mr. Stanley: The hon. Gentleman, not for the first time, is talking absolute nonsense. The results of the Montebello meeting were set out in a public communiqué that has been in the Library of both Houses for over four years.

Mr. Latham: Will my right hon. Friend confirm that there will be no use by NATO countries of battlefield nuclear weapons or any other weapons unless they are attacked first, and that that is the whole basis of NATO's strategy?

Mr. Stanley: I fully agree with my hon. Friend. The whole essence of the possession of nuclear weapons is to provide an essential element of deterrence. That is the whole philosophy, and it has worked in theory and in practice for more than 40 years.

Mr. McNamara: The right hon. Gentleman may have made an error earlier when he said that the agreement on short-range weapons was an integral part of INF negotiations. Would he like, on consideration, to withdraw that statement? Does the point that he made in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Tyne Bridge (Mr. Clelland), that no decisions have been made, as far as British forces are concerned, to modernise after the Montebello agreement, also apply to the weapons that are currently owned by the United States but which are in British care at the moment, namely, shells? Have they been modernised? Have any British forces been engaged in any exercises using modern shells?

Mr. Stanley: Dealing with the second part of the hon. Gentleman's question first, the answer that I gave applies to nuclear weapons that are British-produced and, therefore, in British custody, and to American-produced weapons that are assigned for service with British forces. As far as the first part of the hon. Gentleman's question is concerned, nothing that I have said today is different from what has previously been said in the House. I refer the hon. Gentleman to what my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said on this point on 12 March. I repeat it for his convenience. She said:

"An INF agreement must provide for restraints on those shorter-range systems which could be used to circumvent an INF agreement. These are the longer-range SRINF; in practice it means the Soviet SS12, SS22 and SS23. I believe that the draft treaty tabled by the United States will do that effectively." —[Official Report, 12 March 1987; Vol. 112, c. 461.]

Defence and Disarmament (Public Opinion)

10. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers and types of representations on different defence and disarmament options which he has received from members of the public since the beginning of the current year.

Mr. Stanley: According to available records, my Department so far in 1987 has received some 340 letters from right hon. and hon. Members and directly from the general public on defence policy and disarmament issues. Most of these are either requests for information or comments on aspects of nuclear policy and arms control.

Mr. Dykes: Did any of the comments and suggestions in the party document "Europe's New Detente" include the ludicrous suggestion that there might be individual sets of negotiations with individual Warsaw Pact countries on conventional arms reductions, excluding the Soviet Union?

Mr. Stanley: I notice that that publication has emerged only recently. I am not surprised that we have not had any representations in relation to it, but I expect that we shall certainly have some. I fully agree with my hon. Friend. It would be a ludicrous posture for any British Government to adopt.

Mr. Leigh: Given the nature of the Warsaw Pact, is it not laughable to imagine that countries such as Poland and Czechoslovakia would be allowed to make individual agreements with any Western countries, given the fact that hundreds of thousands of Soviet troops are stationed in those countries to hold down subject populations?

Mr. Stanley: My hon. Friend makes a telling point. Our arms control posture is served well by advancing on a NATO-wide basis. That is the only sensible basis on which we can pursue negotiations on behalf of the Alliance as a whole.

Mr. Corbyn: How many representations has the Minister had concerning the deployment of cruise missiles at Molesworth? Will he confirm that cruise missiles have been taken to Molesworth this week in advance of the Prime Minister's meeting with Mr. Gorbachev? Is this not a deliberate attempt to escalate world tension?

Mr. Stanley: I can provide no such confirmation to the hon. Gentleman. I am quite certain that the great majority of people in this country now recognise that it is only by the successful deployment of NATO cruise missiles and Pershing 2 that we now have the possibility of making real progress in getting rid of a major class of weapons.

Mr. Greg Knight: Will my right hon. Friend confirm that, in defence terms, the cancellation of Trident makes about as much sense as the Labour party conference decision in the 1930s to scrap the Royal Air Force?

Mr. Stanley: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for reminding us of that very important piece of history. The removal of the British independent strategic deterrent makes absolutely no sense whatsoever, just as it makes no sense whatsoever to attempt to resist and to deter the nuclear threat with conventional weapons, which is the absurd policy of the Opposition Front Bench.

Defence White Paper

11. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the 1987 Defence White Paper.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No decision has yet been taken. As in previous years, however, I hope that it will be possible to publish in the spring, in good time for an examination by the Select Committee on Defence and a full debate in the House before the summer recess.

Mr. Kirkwood: Is the Minister aware that acknowledged experts in the field fully expect the 1987 White Paper to be yet another exercise in papering over the cracks that have resulted from the salami-style process of cuts during the last seven or eight years of defence expenditure? Does he not feel that the time is right for a full-scale defence review before the election?

Mr. Hamilton: I confidently expect the Defence White Paper to spell out very clearly what are the Government's defence policies, which is more than I can say of the defence policies of the alliance.

Mr. Jessel: Is my hon. Friend able to say whether the 1987 White Paper will refer to the excellent decision of the Secretary of State to reprieve the Royal Military School of Music? Is he aware that this is a great day for Army bands, military music, Kneller Hall and Twickenham? May I thank my hon. Friend, his colleagues and the Prime Minister for their interest in this great decision, which will uphold standards for future generations?

Mr. Hamilton: I cannot comment on what will be in the Defence White Paper, but I can pay a great tribute to my hon. Friend for his powers of advocacy and persuasion in terms of reaching this decision.

Short-Range Nuclear Weapons

12. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received seeking the deployment of an increased number of short-range nuclear weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: We have no records of any such representations recently. However, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in the INF debate on 9 March, NATO has called for a ceiling in Soviet shorter-range INF missiles in the 500 to 1,000 km range, with a United States right to match them.

Mr. Terlezki: Does my right hon. Friend agree that it is extremely dangerous to negotiate only about medium-range missiles and not to take into account the short-range missiles—the SS1, the SS23 and the SS12, which have a range of 1,000 km? Bearing in mind also that in conventional weapons the NATO countries are outnumbered by the Warsaw Pact by 3:1 and 2:1 on land, sea and in the air, should we not take that into account to protect our country and our freedom?

Mr. Stanley: My hon. Friend is most certainly correct. As I said previously, it is part of the NATO position that the INF agreement has to deal also with the constraints on the shorter-range systems.

Mr. Denzil Davies: Will the Minister of State clarify what he said in answer to question 10? He seemed to go further than the Foreign Secretary and the Secretary of State for Defence when he said that short-range missiles were an integral part—"integral" was, I think, the word that he used—of an agreement on intermediate-range missiles. Is that the Government's position? If they are an integral part of that agreement, and if no agreement is reached on short-range missiles, presumably there will be no agreement on intermediate-range missiles.

Mr. Stanley: All that I said is entirely in accordance with what was said by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and also by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister. I shall remind the right hon. Gentleman of exactly what my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence said in the House on 9 March about the INF. He said:

"That is why part of NATO's negotiating position since 1982 has been that any INF agreement should include constraints on SRINF missiles of the 500 km to 1,000 km range, which means the Soviet Scaleboard and SS23 missiles. The NATO proposal has remained broadly the same over those years. It calls for a ceiling in Soviet systems of this range, together with a United States right to match them. It is an essential condition for any equitable INF agreement, but the Soviet Union has yet to agree it." — [Official Report, 9 March, 1987; Vol. 112, c. 40-41.]

That is the position.

Intermediate Nuclear Forces

13. Mr. Douglas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on the implications for Her Majesty's Government's defence policy of the removal from Europe of intermediate nuclear forces.

Mr. Stanley: We are confident that we shall be able to maintain effective deterrence in the event of an INF agreement on the basis outlined by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in the House on 12 March.

Mr. Douglas: Is the Minister of State ready to reconsider the answers that he has given to previous questions? Will he accept that an INF agreement is indispensable for getting a scale-down of nuclear weapons in Europe? While we are all concerned about the removal of battlefield and theatre nuclear weapons, that should not be a precondition for reaching an agreement on INF.

Mr. Stanley: It is certainly the case that an INF agreement is very important, but all my answers referred to the shorter-range INF systems, as the hon. Gentleman will clearly see when he looks at the text. I do not think that we need to take any lectures from the hon. Gentleman about the importance of an INF agreement. If we had followed the Labour party's policy of not deploying ground-launched cruise missiles and Pershing 2 there would be no INF negotiations today.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Q1. Mr. Pavitt asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 March 1987.

The Prime Minister (Mrs. Margaret Thatcher): This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. I was also present at Victoria to mark the arrival of King Fahd. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I shall be attending a state banquet in honour of King Fahd.

Mr. Pavitt: Is the Prime Minister happy that, as a direct result of her policies, as from next Thursday cancer patients on chemotherapy will be paying as much as £12 per script for their medicines or £33·50 annually for a season ticket? Chemotherapy may make a young lady, who is probably suffering the trauma of losing a breast, also go bald, yet the NHS charges her £16 for a wig. Is it not an injustice that the average taxpayer, healthy and sick, pays £2·20 every week for medicines, but only the sick pay twice? Will the Prime Minister immediately negotiate with the BMA for cancer to be added to the seven diseases which are already accepted by the BMA for prescription exemption?

The Prime Minister: The hon. Gentleman has asked this question many times, I think probably of all Governments. He knows that the answer has not varied from Government to Government. It is extremely difficult to put that on the list of treatments — [HON. MEMBERS: "Why?"] — which rank for special prescriptions, first because it is not easy to detect precisely when the disease occurs and, secondly, because many people would not wish to know that they have it. The hon. Gentleman has spoken about costs. May I remind him that the average family of four pays some £26·50 in taxation every week to support the National Health Service. That is very considerable. Naturally, most of the prescriptions are exempt — 75 per cent. of people are exempt — but no Government have found it possible to add that disease to the exempt list.

Mr. Sackville: Does my right hon. Friend agree that the announcement by the CBI of record order books and industrial confidence provides further evidence that only through the continuation of the Government's economic policies can we look forward to further economic growth and a return to full employment?

The Prime Minister: Yes, the CBI forecast is excellent. It shows a healthy and balanced growth of exports, investment consumption, manufacturing output and total output. It shows that the Government's policies are working extremely well, not only to create new jobs, but, at last, to get down the numbers on the unemployment register. That is very good news and further expansion is in prospect, and therefore further falls in unemployment are in prospect.

Mr. Kinnock: Is the Prime Minister aware that yesterday the Chancellor of the Exchequer said that the rise in the manufactured trade deficit to a £8 billion deficit this year,

"is neither here nor there" — [Official Report, 23 March 1987; Vol. 113, c. 33.]

Given that in her period of office manufactured exports have gone up by 15 per cent. and manufactured imports by 48 per cent., does she think that a £8 billion manufactured trade deficit "is neither here nor there"?

The Prime Minister: I think that what matters is the overall performance of the economy. The overall performance of the economy is excellent. I fail to see why the right hon. Gentleman should consistently try to keep out of account the performance of other industries such as the extractive industries of coal mining and oil, the construction industry and the service industries, all of which give the most excellent performance in the British economy.

Mr. Kinnock: None of which escapes the fact that the forecast for the balance of payments deficit, largely attributed to that manufactured trade deficit, is £2 billion this year, despite the fact that the right hon. Lady has at her disposal very large oil revenues and a saving of oil imports. Will she accept that the CBI, even on the basis of the fortunate recovery recorded in its statement, still expects manufactured imports to go up 25 per cent. faster than manufactured exports? On the basis of the fact that already this year—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Kinnock: —there has been a 6 per cent. revaluation in sterling, how sturdy does she think the recovery is supposed to be?

The Prime Minister: The recovery is very sturdy. That is the right hon. Gentleman's problem and he knows it.

Mr. Kinnock: Given the right hon. Lady's responsibility for putting unemployment up by 2 million and the fact that we are on record as fighting it that much harder than she does, all good news is welcome. Will she now answer the question? Given the continual deterioration in manufacturing trade performance, how sturdy does she think that the recovery is?

The Prime Minister: The recovery is very sturdy. I find it difficult to understand why the right hon. Gentleman should consider that those who work in the oil, coal and construction industries and in the great service industries, which make an enormous contribution to Britain's balance of payments, should be thought to have no right whatever to import goods. It is absolutely crazy.

Chequers (Official Reception)

Q2. Mr. Pollock asked the Prime Minister when she last hosted an official reception at Chequers.

The Prime Minister: I cannot recall having ever given an official reception at Chequers, although there have been official luncheons.

Mr. Pollock: I thank my right hon. Friend for that reply. Will she give some thought to the possibility of holding some such function in the future, which would give an opportunity for providing generous supplies of Scotch whisky to invited guests, thereby enabling them to appreciate the most excellent qualities of that fine product, the bulk of which is distilled in my constituency?

The Prime Minister: I know my hon. Friend's concern about the Scotch whisky industry and I recall having visited a successful distillery in his constituency. I assure him that the whisky served at Chequers and at No. 10 is genuine Scotch whisky, and very good it is.

Mr. Bell: If the Prime Minister is to host an official reception at Chequers, will she consider inviting those who are unemployed in Cleveland, and will she then agree with them that, since Cleveland now has the highest unemployment and the third highest crime rate in Britain, there is a clear link between unemployment and crime in Cleveland?

The Prime Minister: I am very well aware of the problems in the hon. Gentleman's constituency. He will therefore have welcomed the latest unemployment figures, which showed that unemployment in all regions was down. I am sure that in his more honest moments he will welcome and support the Government's economic policy.

Engagements

Q3. Mr. Brinton asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 March.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Brinton: Is not the way to create greater enduring employment through prudent climate-setting by Government and prudent spending by Government? Is not the current CBI report, combined with the report that the Government have prudently saved £75 million on prescriptions, a good example of exactly the way that we should go?

The Prime Minister: Yes. The Government's task is to provide a sound financial background and a sound framework of law within which enterprise can flourish. We are entering the seventh successive year of growth. That is a very good record and shows the strength and rightness of the Government's policy, as confirmed by the CBI estimate and forecast today.

Mr. Beith: Does the Prime Minister agree that anything that the Syrian Government could do to assist in bringing about the release of Terry Waite and other hostages would materially affect attitudes in this country towards future better relations with Syria?

The Prime Minister: I assume that anything that Syria can do she would already be doing.

Q4. Mr. Terlezki asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 March.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Terlezki: As my right hon. Friend will be visiting Moscow and meeting Mr. Gorbachev, will she please tell him that, while it is very important that we should negotiate on nuclear and conventional weapons for peace, harmony and friendship in the world, it is absolutely imperative that he show his human heart, human face, compassion and sincerity by allowing the people in Soviet Russia the freedom of speech, religion and movement, that we take for granted in this country. [Interruption.] Then we could negotiate on nuclear weapons. Only when, for all people in the Soviet Union, the barriers are broken down, the Berlin Wall is demolished and slave labour camps are abolished can the people be free. [Interruption.]

The Prime Minister: I fully agree with my hon. Friend. [Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The whole House knows why the hon. Gentleman feels strongly about this matter.

The Prime Minister: I fully agree with my hon. Friend and can assure him that I shall, of course, be raising those matters under the Helsinki accords, which deal with the free movement of people and ideas. I am having a bigger correspondence than I have ever had from people who wish certain personal cases to be raised and from people who hope that I will raise the matter of religious freedom and freedom of speech for all in the Soviet Union.

Q5. Mr. Pendry asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 March.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Pendry: Will the Prime Minister take time out today to look afresh at the guidelines for civil servants when asked by their Minister to give advice on such personal issues as tax problems? Would she care to comment on the report in The Guardian today which concerns one such case in connection with her Chancellor of the Exchequer?

The Prime Minister: I see no cause whatsoever to comment upon a particular case. I am satisfied that the standards on both sides were upheld.

Mr. Hill: Did my right hon. Friend, during her discussions with President Mitterrand and Chancellor Kohl, discuss our independent nuclear resources in France and the United Kingdom, and was it ever mentioned that the new European forum for discussion of defence matters should be the reactivated Western European Union?

The Prime Minister: Yes, of course we discussed the independent nuclear deterrents of both the United Kingdom and France, reaffirming once again that they are wholly outside the present arms control negotiations. They are our last resort deterrent and are absolutely vital to our security and future. We did not go into the wider matter of the European forum, although I thought that my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary made an excellent speech on it the other day.

Q6. Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 March.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Pike: The House having given approval last night to the Budget proposals, in which the tax concessions benefit the wealthier sections of the community the most and give little benefit to the poorly paid, will the Prime Minister indicate her concern for those pensioners who are receiving only their state pension, who are to receive a mighty small increase in April compared with those of pensionable age still in well-paid occupations, even if for only a short time, who will obviously be benefiting considerably from the tax concessions?

The Prime Minister: The tax concessions will benefit many people — factory workers, nurses, teachers, policemen, on average earnings and one in three pensioners. Of course, many pensioners do not only have the basic state pension, but have a second pension as well. I remind the hon. Gentleman that in 1979 second pension, SERPS, amounted to 95p per week for those who retired then. People who are now retiring and who have the SERPS pension to add to the basic pension have an extra £16·25 a week. Pensioners, too, benefit from tax reductions.

Mr. Favell: Has it occurred to my right hon. Friend that the Leader of the Opposition's most recent recipe for jobs is not dissimilar to that adopted by Derek Hatton and his friends for Liverpool——

Mr. Speaker: Order. Questions must relate to the Prime Minister's responsibility.

Mr. Favell: Does my right hon. Friend consider that she should adopt a recipe for jobs similar to that adopted by Derek Hatton and his friends for Liverpool?

The Prime Minister: As I am sure my hon. Friend is aware, our recipe for jobs is absolutely the right one. It has produced 1 million extra jobs since 1983 and is reducing the numbers of unemployed on the register. In addition, since 1979 we have spent £10·5 billion on special employment measures and are introducing yet another one, a new job training scheme, on 1 April. That will also help those who have not got jobs to get a training to help them find a job.

Q7. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 24 March.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Hughes: Would the Prime Minister care to comment on the reports emanating from Washington about the modernisation of nuclear weapons, which, as I understand it, have been denied by at least four Ministers? Would it not be reasonable to suggest that they have been handling the truth rather carelessly, or is it yet another example of this Administration's rather perverted use of the term "open government"?

The Prime Minister: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for raising this matter. At the Montebello meeting of the nuclear planning group in 1983, NATO agreed both a major reduction in the number of its theatre nuclear weapons in Europe and the need for possible improvements to ensure the effectiveness of the remaining stockpile. This was clearly set out in the comminiqué issued at the Montebello meeting. Since then SACEUR has put forward his proposals for these improvements. These are being pursued with the individual nations concerned, but, as Defence Ministers have made clear to the House, no decisions affecting the modernisation of the theatre nuclear weapons in service with British forces have yet been made. I thank the hon. Gentleman for asking the question.

Car Bomb (Rheindahlen)

3.32 pm

The Minister of State for the Armed Forces (Mr. John Stanley): At about 10.30 local time last night, a car bomb exploded outside an officers' mess at joint headquarters of British Armed Forces Germany at Rheindahlen. A NATO social function was in progress at the time. Thirty-one people were hurt in the explosion, 27 German and four British. Seven of them stayed overnight at the RAF hospital at Wegberg and all but three have now been discharged. I am glad to say that no one was seriously injured.

A higher alert state than usual was in operation at the time, without which the consequences of this explosion could well have resulted in much more extensive injuries. but large open areas crossed by public roads like the Rheindahlen headquarters have self-evident security difficulties. Further security measures are now in force.

An organisation calling itself the National Democratic Front for the Liberation of West Germany claimed responsibility for the explosion some hours after it took place. This claim is being examined by the German authorities who are leading the investigation into the incident and with whom our own security authorities are in close co-operation.

Our sympathy goes to the British and German service men and civilians and their wives who were injured in this incident.

Mr. Denzil Davies (Llanelli): May I also on behalf of the Opposition express our sympathy to those British and German servicemen, civilians and their wives who were injured in this incident. I am sure the Minister and the whole House will agree that this was a serious incident in that a terrorist bomb could be exploded actually inside the British military headquarters at Rheindahlen in the Federal Republic of Germany.

I have three questions for the right hon. Gentleman. He mentioned that obviously the German authorities will lead the investigation into the bombing. Will there be an internal investigation by our authorities to see how security can be improved? I understand the difficulties that the Minister has mentioned. Could he also tell us what the state of alert was at the time and whether it is now envisaged to have a higher state of alert?

There had been reports in the press and the media that a telephone call was made some time before the explosion to a West German newspaper. Can the Minister confirm or deny that that happened?

Mr. Stanley: I can certainly confirm to the right hon. Gentleman that we will be conducting our own internal investigation from a security standpoint. The right hon. Gentleman will understand that we do not go into the details of the security alert state applying at any particular time, but, as I said in my statement, there was a higher than usual level of security alert at that time, and further measures have subsequently been taken.

As far as advance warning is concerned, we understand at the moment that no warning was received at Rheindahlen before the explosion took place. We understand that a message in English about a bomb at Monchengladbach, which is near Rheindahlen, was received at the German Press Association shortly before the explosion, but the message was not fully understood because of language difficulties. A further warning at Rheindahlen was received in German a few minutes after the explosion took place.

Sir Antony Buck (Colchester, North): I am sure the whole House will want to associate itself with the message of condolence and sympathy which will now go forward to those who have been injured. Will the Minister agree that it is a matter of grave concern that there can be such an incident at a headquarters as important as Rheindahlen? Might it not be necessary to look at other headquarters with a British service input and a NATO role to ensure that this cannot happen or that there is a minimal chance of it happening at other headquarters?

Mr. Stanley: As my hon. and learned Friend is aware, the Rheindahlen headquarters is a very much more extensive complex than just a headquarters building, which is highly protected. As he well knows from his previous experience, the Rheindahlen complex is a very broadly spread out site, through which pass a number of public roads. Obviously, we take this issue and this incident with great seriousness, as he asks, and we shall be examining closely whether there are lessons to be learned. As my hon. and learned Friend well knows from his own time in the Department, it is immensely difficult to produce total security when service men are, of necessity, spread over large areas and their normal civilian life has to take place around them.

Mr. John Cartwright (Woolwich): Is the Minister aware that we in the alliance would also like to associate ourselves with the message of sympathy to those who were injured in last night's bombing? In view of the murder last week of an Italian air force general, there are suggestions that these two incidents may be part of a campaign by a loosely linked group of terrorist organisations who are targeting NATO installations and personnel. Against that sort of background, is the Minister satisfied that there is sufficient international co-operation within the NATO nations to deal with this sort of threat?

Mr. Stanley: Yes, I am certainly satisfied that there is extremely close co-operation, and has been for some time, between police authorities in the respective countries. Incidents such as this bombing illustrate the imperative need for that close co-operation.

Mr. Nicholas Soames (Crawley): Will my right hon. Friend acknowledge that, regardless of the very considerable difficulties, there will be great dissatisfaction and concern that such an outrage could have occurred at a headquarters such as Rheindahlen? Secondly, I endorse what the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) said. I hope that the Minister will pursue with great vigour all the intelligence leads and resources that NATO can give us in our hunt for the people who perpetrated this monstrosity.

Mr. Stanley: I can certainly assure my hon. Friend that the primary task of everybody who is engaged on this investigation is to try to identify those responsible and to bring them to justice. My hon. Friend's point about security arrangements at Rheindahlen is certainly well taken.

Mr. Merlyn Rees (Morley and Leeds, South): I am glad that there were no serious injuries. The Minister was right to make a statement, even though in Northern Ireland there have been 18 deaths since 1 January, and there were three yesterday, without a word in the House. Whose job is it to pass on to the military authorities in Rheindahlen the information that new middle-class terrorist groups are emerging in western Germany?

Mr. Stanley: As the right hon. Gentleman knows, the basic responsibility for that co-ordination lies with the security authorities of the various countries and the police authorities. We have our own internal arrangements, with which he will be familiar, to make certain that every available bit of information about terrorists that might suggest vulnerability to a particular group is passed on as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Derek Conway (Shrewsbury and Atcham): The House is right to express condolences to those injured, and particularly to express concern that the headquarters at Rheindahlen should be attacked in this way. In view of this attack, and the recent one at RAF Akrotiri, where a higher state of alert therefore had to result, perhaps my right hon. Friend will need to examine the establishment of the units involved to ensure that no undue stress is placed on operational training so as to safeguard against the terrorist threat?

Mr. Stanley: Yes, my hon. Friend is right to draw attention to the dilemma that we face in the security of such areas, as to how much time, effort and manpower should be devoted purely to the security task. Inevitably that will be at the expense of normal training and operational work of the armed forces. That is the continuing conundrum that we face, and we have to give the highest priority to the security of our forces and the dependants of our service men.

Mr. David Young (Bolton, South-East): Will the Minister pass on to the families of those injured the regret of both sides of the House about this outrage? Will he take on board the concern that we feel that, according to press reports, the car bomb was placed near an officers' mess where a party was going on, which suggests a great deal of internal intelligence going to terrorists? Will he look at that when he reviews the situation?

Mr. Stanley: It will be a high priority to establish who was responsible and to see how far they were assisted in carrying out this outrage by any information that they were able to glean as to what social functions were taking place at Rheindahlen that night.

Sir Kenneth Lewis (Stamford and Spalding): Will my right hon. Friend accept that, while it is right to react in such a situation and to have a full inquiry, it would be the greatest mistake to over-react?

Mr. Stanley: Yes, I take my hon. Friend's warning.

Mr. Thomas Torney (Bradford, South): Will the Minister institute an inquiry into security arrangements not only at Rehindahlen but at British defence establishments throughout West Germany? I know from personal experience that it is simple to walk into these establishments. Is the Minister aware that German personnel used to be used in security in some of these establishments? Are they still used, and will the Minister look into that aspect to see whether it weakens security?

Mr. Stanley: We certainly employ some German civilians locally and we have confidence in those arrangements. On the hon. Gentleman's first point, I can assure him that the security of all United Kingdom military establishments is continuously under review. We regard every military establishment, whether in the United Kingdom, in Europe or further afield, as potentially vulnerable to terrorist attack of one sort or another. Regrettably, we live in an age where terrorism has become international and all military establishments have to be looked at from that standpoint.

Sir Winston Churchill National Day

3.44 pm

Mr. Stefan Terlezki (Cardiff, West): I beg to move,

That leave be given to bring in a Bill to provide for the discontinuation of May Day bank holiday and to establish the Sir Winston Churchill National Day on or near to 10th May.

For the past 42 years, the people of this country have enjoyed freedom and democracy and peace and tranquillity — in contrast to other parts of the world where fighting and killing never stop, where poverty and slavery still exist and where freedom and democracy are never implemented. I have been privileged to share freedom, peace and democracy with the people of this country for the past 39 years and that is due to the dedication, steadfastness, resilience, patriotism and great sacrifices that the British people and their great leader, Sir Winston Churchill, made during the last world war. Sir Winston Churchill took Britain and its allies through the greatest war in history, and Britain won.

When I was a small boy still living in the Ukraine before the second world war I remember so well my father telling me that in Britain there was a man called Winston Churchill who liked to smoke cigars and who had great courage, foresight and dedication and the determination of a great fighter who believed in freedom and would never surrender. My father was right.

Sir Winston Churchill, throughout the second world war, and for that matter throughout his political life, never gave up. He fought not only for life but for the value of life and the British people came to realise the truth of his loyalty and the bond he formed. They cheered him when he and Britain stood together, but not alone.

I experienced slavery and oppression under Marxism-Communism, and many millions of people still do. I experienced Nazism, having been taught at school that Stalin was my father and later that Hitler was my fuhrer, when I was a slave. It was political indoctrination that made me think that I would never experience freedom and democracy and even wonder whether such things ever existed.

When I arrived penniless to Britain in 1948, I realised that I had arrived in heaven on earth. I experienced for the first time freedom and democracy, and all that was possible because of a man called Winston Churchill and the resilience of the British people.

This House, the mother of Parliaments, the cradle of democracy, still carries the scars of the second world war. Hitler wanted to destroy it, but it was saved by brave men of Britain, and Sir Winston Churchill was one of them. They saved it for us all to speak, to debate, to agree and to disagree and to keep the light of freedom burning. I am further convinced that I would not be here today doing what I do and speaking as I do, nor would there be right hon. and hon. Members of the House had it not been for Sir Winston Churchill who saved Britain from the Nazi holocaust and paved the way for the peace that we have all enjoyed over the past 42 years—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. We often hear things in the House with which we do not wholly agree.

Mr. Terlezki: The purpose of my Bill is to remind the people of this country time and again, the old and the young—especially the young—who do not know or who may have forgotten, that, when Britain was in the grip of the iron fist of Nazism and was bombarded indiscriminately, a man called Winston Churchill, with his determination, courage and dedication, together with the British people, made it possible for us all to be free today.

I am not in the habit of creating more public holidays just for the sake of it, nor am I willing to do so. Some people say that we have too many holidays already, and I agree. My reason for seeking to discontinue the first Monday in May as a national holiday and nominating 10 May or near to it as Sir Winston Churchill national day is that that is the day when he became Prime Minister of Britain in 1940. Furthermore, it is my heartfelt desire to establish a permanent reminder to the British people, some of whom tend to take freedom and democracy for granted, that had it not been for a man called Winston Churchill who made it possible for them all to live in a free and democratic Britain, the alternative would have been tyranny, slavery, extermination, Auschwitz, Buchenwald, Treblinka, and Babi Yar.

I can almost remember Sir Winston Churchill saying that we had a rendezvous with destiny. Will we keep that rendezvous or spend our sunset years telling our children and grandchildren what it was like when men were free? What will our answers be when we are asked, "Where were you when freedom was lost?" and, "What did you find that was more precious to you than freedom?"?

Nothing must be more precious to us than freedom. It is like fresh air: if one has not got it, one misses it. I know that. That is why I ask the leave of the House to bring in my Bill and why I ask the House to give that Bill its full support and remind the people of this country, the old, the young and the generations still to come, of Sir Winston Churchill, his steadfastness and courageous leadership in the hour of this country's greatest peril. He captured the hearts and imagination of the people and saved Britain from Nazi slavery. In return we should give him a place in British history as the greatest freedom fighter in modern times.

3.50 pm

Mr. Dave Nellist (Coventry, South-East) rose——

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. Member seek to oppose the motion?

Mr. Nellist: Yes, Sir.

If the hon. Member for Cardiff, West, (Mr. Terlezki) had been arguing for an extension to statutory holidays, this House would undoubtedly have welcomed it. Contrary to what the hon. Gentleman said, Britain has the lowest number of public holidays, in the whole of Europe, apart from the Netherlands. We have eight statutory days, but some countries have almost double that. Britain is in a minority in Europe in not having legal minimum standards of holiday entitlement for those in work. In many cases, the average allowed in Britain by employers is a week less than that given in many other EEC countries. Together with longer average hours of work and lower rates of pay, those facts knock on the head the Tory idea of lazy British workers.

Along with a lower retirement age and a shorter working week, an extension to public holidays would have been a useful step towards seriously reducing unemployment, or sharing out more equitably the available work. However, that was furthest from the hon. Gentleman's considerations.

Many Tories equate May day with tanks parading through the streets of Moscow. That is about as correct as slandering all Catholics with the Spanish inquisition. To set the record straight, the origin of May day was in 1886 in America when 350,000 workers in more than 11,000 establishments downed tools in a demand for an eight-hour day. It is a scandalous indictment of capitalism that in many industries in this country, such as bakery or the retail trades, that demand is still unfulfilled 101 years later. The centre of that movement was in Chicago, which was the fastest growing city of its day, the Mexico City or Caracas of America. It had a huge, developing factory system in which workers worked for between 10 and 18 hours a day.

In 1868, the United States passed an eight-hour law, but during the next decade and a half it was enforced only twice. That is only marginally worse than this Tory Government's enforcement of the Wages Council Act 1979. In the autumn of 1885, one of the workers' leading union organisations, the knights of Labour, planned rallies and demonstrations for the following May to enforce a law that the employers, especially the railway barons, treated with contempt, The slogan of the day was, in the words of one of the songs of that movement,

"8 hours for work, 8 hours for rest, 8 hours for what we will."

Those words are almost identical to those used by British trade union leaders of the time, such as Tom Mann of the engineers, who was born and bred in Coventry.

On 1 May 1886, the first national general strike in American history took place. As a direct consequence, more than 500,000 workers saw their hours of work substantially reduced—in many cases down to an eight-hour day with no loss in pay.

The employers lost no time in preparing their revenge. On 1 May the Chicago Mail named two union leaders and stated:

"Mark them for today. Keep them in mind. Hold them personally responsible for any trouble that occurs. Make an example of them if that trouble occurs".

That time was not long in coming.

On 3 May, 500 police herded 300 scabs through a picket line at International Harvester's. When the pickets resisted, the police opened fire and several workers died. A protest meeting was organised for Haymarket square and towards its end, in the pouring rain with only a couple of hundred workers left, the police arrived to break it up. A bomb was thrown. It was never established by whom and at the subsequent trial of the union leaders the prosecution said it was irrelevant and the judge agreed. Seven police officers and an unknown number of workers died in that assassination. Hundreds of union activists were arrested throughout the country and eight union leaders were put on trial. Seven of them had not been at the demonstration and the eighth was the speaker on the platform, so he could not have thrown the bomb.

Legality was never the aim of that trial; revenge was. The Chicago Tribune of the day gave the game away with the headline:

"Hang an organiser from every lamp-post".

The trial was absurd: the jury even included relatives of the dead policemen; witnesses and jurors were bribed; and the judge played noughts and crosses with young society ladies during testimony. A local business man summed up the employers' view with the words:

"I don't consider these people to have been guilty of any offence, but they must be hanged . . . the labour movement must be crushed. The Knights of Labour will never dare to create discontent again if these man are hanged."

International protests followed the inevitable verdict of this scandalous frame-up and judicial murder. Huge meetings were addressed in England and Wales by people, including Eleanor Marx, George Bernard Shaw, Oscar Wilde and William Morris. The city council of Paris protested at the "political crime" and when five of the union leaders were executed, a quarter of the population of Chicago turned out for their funeral.

From that day on, 1 May has grown to an international day of solidarity among working people. Its first celebration took place in 1890 on the slogans of "An 8-hour day", "International solidarity" and "Against militarism". As workers emerge from tyranny and repression in whatever country, they adopt that day as theirs. The most recent example is perhaps the most down-trodden exploited people in the world — the black workers of South Africa, especially mineworkers who, in the past three years, have struck for the demand that May day be a paid public holiday. Now the hon. Gentleman wishes to change that tradition, which was introduced in the United Kingdom in 1978 by a Labour Government.

If the hon. Gentleman gets his way this afternoon and is given leave to introduce his Bill, which Winston Churchill will we be celebrating? Is it the one who said in October 1903:

"I am an English Liberal. I hate the Tory Party, their men, their words and their methods."?

Is it the Home Secretary, who personally drafted troops into the South Wales coalfields in 1911? Is it the Secretary of State for War who in 1920 called for military intervention in Russia? Or is it the man who, appointed Tory Chancellor in 1924, yet without rejoining the Tory party until the following year, put Britain back on the gold standard, which led to increased export prices and substantial wage cuts? Is it the man who advocated the use of tanks, machine guns and armoured cars during the general strike of 1926? Or is it the prolific writer who, in the 1939 editions of his books "Step-by-Step" and "Great Contemporaries", wrote about Hitler's rise to power:

"The story of that struggle cannot be read without admiration for the courage, the perseverance, the vital force which enabled him to challenge, defy, conciliate or overcome all authorities or resistance which barred his path . . . I have always said that if Great Britain were defeated in war, I hoped that we should find a Hitler to lead us back to our rightful position among the nations."

That is the same Churchill who echoed the same unbounded approval as Tory newspapers of the day of the rise of Mussolini and Franco.

While Fascism was carrying out the physical elimination of workers' organisations, many sections of the British ruling class gave it their support. Only when it began to encroach on British capitalist markets and areas of influence did Churchill and others change their tune. For them, not for my hon. Friends, the war was about prestige and global influence, not the methods of Mussolini and Hitler. Those who died, including more than 20 million Russians and hundreds of thousands of Allied troops, genuinely abhorred Fascism.

Churchill's place will never be missing from the history books, although the interpretation of his importance will no doubt change. If the House genuinely wants to commemorate and commiserate with those who fell, it
